Central to building socialist spiritual civilization is vigorously strengthening ideological and political work, constantly raising socialist consciousness and fostering communist world outlook, morality and practices and attitude toward labor. We should therefore organize the numerous cadres, armymen and militiamen to conscientiously study well the resolution of the sixth plenary session and the party's principles and policies and study Marxist-Leninist works and Comrade Mao Zedong's works in the light of reality. The various organizations, PLA units and militia companies should also commend new people, things and practices that have appeared in building socialist spiritual civilization and support the healthy and suppress the unhealthy by using various forms so that people can understand the difference between honor and disgrace and between noble and base conduct. The leading cadres at various levels should set an example in the activities of "five stresses and four beauties" and of helping armymen have lofty ideas, good morality, knowledge and good health, stressing the army's standards of appearance and bearing, good manners and good discipline and fearing neither hardship nor bloodshed or sacrifice. They should guide these activities in a thorough and protracted way by going down to the grassroots units and constantly summing up new experience in building spiritual civilization.

At present, under the new historical conditions in which our country is implementing an open-door policy and the policy of enlivening the economy, and owing to the corrosive influence of decadent bourgeois ideas abroad and the adverse influence of the remnant forces of the exploiting classes in the country, anarchism, extreme individualism and bourgeois liberalization trends of thought have appeared in society. Some people even engage in criminal activities, such as speculation and profiteering, smuggling and selling of smuggled goods, by various means. This is a specific manifestation of class struggle under the new conditions. We should actively respond to the call of the CCP Central Committee on severely cracking down on illegal and criminal activities in the economic field, uphold a principled stand and conscientiously wage resolute struggles against illegal and criminal activities in the economic field. At the same time, we should conduct education in loving the party, the motherland and socialism among the numerous cadres, armymen and militiamen, criticize and oppose decadent bourgeois ideas, strengthen our ability in resisting the corrosive influence of bourgeois ideas, raise our national pride and self-confidence, foster the lofty ideals of communism and conscientiously overcome erroneous ideas such as "it is a loss to be an armyman," "it is a loss to be a militiaman" and "look at everything from the angle of money."

It is necessary to enhance revolutionary vigor and fight hard for the lofty ideals of realizing communism. We should permeate all our work with the activities of learning from Lei Feng, of promoting new habits, of "five stresses and four beauties" and of helping armymen have lofty ideals, good morality, knowledge and good health, stressing the army's standards of appearance and bearing, good manners and good discipline and fearing neither hardship nor bloodshed or sacrifice. Every cadre, armyman or militiaman should firmly develop the sense of responsibility of being the master of socialism. It is necessary to love our own jobs and diligently study our professions, skills, science and cultural knowledge. It is necessary to observe vocational ethics and social morality and serve the people heart and soul. It is necessary to respect, love and help each other and strive to become pace setters in the cause of building socialism and on various socialist fronts.

ARTICLE STRESSES IMPORTANCE OF PROPAGANDA CADRES

HK270857 Tianjin RIBAO in Chinese 13 Apr 82 p 3

[Article by Li Yunqing [2621 0061 7230]: "Ideology and Theory Are Powerful"]

[Text] In heart-to-heart talks with political work cadres and theoretical and propaganda cadres, I have often heard comments about why they have lost confidence in their work: Some of the masses do not take much interest in the ABC's of Marxism. Some people in the real world of everyday work do not care much about what we do. Some leaders are weak and lethargic and do not dare to accept the challenge when facing opponents in theoretical work. A few years ago, there were quite a few "changes." At present, we are at a loss to know what should or what should not be imparted to others. As we think about it, we ask, why should we not change careers and take up some work which is more concrete and realistic? Given the limited space for this short article, it is impossible to make an overall review of all these problems. I may as well offer a few views that have come to my mind.

We may first make an assumption. If there had been no "Manifesto of the Communist Party," if the principles about the Paris Commune had not been put forth in 1871, if Lenin had not made a stirring speech, and if the salvos of the October Revolution had not reached China, then what would the world of today be like? What would China be like? Perhaps, their descendants would have continued to make mischief. The fallacies of Russian czars would still have made the rounds. The "three big mountains" would still have weighed on the backs of the Chinese people. In a word, there would never have been the progress such as that which has marked the revolutionary advance of the proletarians of the world today. In my opinion, this is in line with a logical conclusion based on history. I think none can deny or doubt this.

The great impact of ideological and theoretical work is especially obvious in the history of our party and country.

How many people were awoken from a state of sleep by Comrade Li Dazhao's article "The Victory of the Common People" published in XIN QINGNIAN [NEW YOUTH]? How many hesitant people did the "cries" of Mr Lu Xun's "Help the Child" stir and inspire? What a tremendous source of material strength was provided by the series of brilliant works by Comrade Mao Zedong, bringing about one victory after another in the revolution and construction of China. Did not the extensive discussions about the criterion of truth after the downfall of the "gang of four" and the general and specific policies formulated since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee constitute great historical acts in turning chaos into order? Do they not hold out a bright future for modernization? How many people have they inspired with confidence and aroused to action in a brave march forward? What Marx said is the perfect truth: "...once mastered by the masses, theory will become a source of material strength!"

Ideological and theoretical work can also effect leaps in changing people's knowledge and behavior. Marxist philosophy made Mr Lu Xun give up his long-cherished view about "evolution" and embrace the communist world outlook. Inspired by Lenin's instructions from his sickbed, Gorki suddenly woke up and no longer stuck to his "humanitarian principles." After an analysis by the party and by Li Dazhao and other comrades and with their help, Sun Yat-sen's "three principles of the people" were again interpreted in new terms. Mao Zedong Thought and our party's ideological and political work have produced numerous communist fighters like Zhang Side and Lei Feng. Just as Lenin said, genuine revolutionaries must derive all faith from revolutionary theory and apply revolutionary theory in determining the methods of struggle and the pattern for activity.

Regarding the problem of the future of ideological and political workers, I think the matter of the future can never be simply put in such terms as an individual with his family and children, money and basic necessities of life. These can never be taken as a yardstick with which to judge whether it is thankless and unrewarding work. Otherwise, there would not have been fighters who gave their all to the revolution. There would have been only hired workers or peddlers. Comrade Chen Yi's attitude toward his future is: "I should set store by ideals and especially work for the good of the world. I must serve the interests of the public and consider serving private interests as shameful." Comrade Lei Feng said that as long as a man lives, he should give his all and sacrifice his whole life to communism. Has there ever been any revolutionary fighter who has failed to closely link the individual's future with the interests of the revolution? Those comrades handling ideological and political work, stick to your post! History has and will continue to prove that our work plays a tremendous role in the country's cause.

SK252234 Xining Qinghai Provincial Service in Mandarin 2330 GMT 24 Apr 82

[Text] According to our sources, the Fifth Qinghai Provincial CCP Committee held its ninth plenary session in Xining municipality on 24 April. Through discussions the session decided to sponsor a party representatives' meeting on 26 April and entrusted the provincial CCP committee standing committee with responsibility for this meeting. The session also discussed and approved the agenda for the provincial party representatives' meeting and other matters concerned. During the party representatives' meeting, participants will democratically elect delegates to the 12th national party congress, hear and discuss the speeches to be given by Comrade Zhao Haifeng on several major tasks of our province and by Comrade Ma Wanli on dealing blows at serious economic crimes.

Attending the session were 30 members of alternate members of the provincial CCP committee, including leading comrades such as Liang Buting, Zhang Guosheng, Zha-xi-wang-xu, Zhao Haifeng, Song Lin and Ma Wanli. Comrade Liang Buting presided over the session and delivered a speech in which he emphatically stated: It is a grand task for us to elect delegates to the 12th national party congress. We must give full scope to democracy, carry out the election in line with democratic procedures and respect the will of majority members and deputies. We should say freely what is on our minds, adopt an earnest attitude toward the election and choose appropriate delegates after repeated deliberations. Only in this way can we bring democracy into full play and do a good job in electing delegates.

SHAANXI COMMENTARY ON STRAIGHTENING ENTERPRISES

HK240211 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 0500 GMT 23 Apr 82

[Station commentary: "In Straightening Out Enterprises in an All-Round Way, It Is Necessary To Regard Raising Economic Results as the Center"]

[Text] In straightening out enterprises in an all-round way, it is essential to administer enterprises in a comprehensive way so that they can do their work well and really take the new road of developing the national economy.

Over the past few years, although our province has achieved certain results in straightening out enterprises, the results are still not good enough. Several main economic quotas in 1981 were still below the national average levels. Therefore, raising economic results is a problem which the industrial and communications front in our province must urgently solve. In the course of straightening out enterprises, we must put economic results in the central position. We must first correct the guiding ideology in industrial production. That is, in organizing production, we cannot stress only the output value without social results being stressed and we cannot stress only quantity without quality. While straightening out enterprises in an all-round way, we must formulate plans, arrange for the order of importance and urgency and check and accept the results after the enterprises are straightened out. We must stress raising economic results. Second, while straightening out enterprises, we must perfect the economic responsibility system. This is one of the important links of straightening out enterprises. Third, we must strengthen and improve enterprise management. While straightening out enterprises, we must put the fundamental work of original records, calculation, statistics and accounting on a sound basis, formulate the average advanced fixed quotas for production and consumption and strengthen management of the fixed quotas. While carrying out all-round planning and management, we must continue to carry out all-round quality control and all-round economic accounting to ensure an increase in the variety of products, the improvement of the quality of products, the reduction of costs and an increase in profits. We must achieve economic results in an all-round way. Fourth, we must link the large-scale inspection of financial affairs and revenue with striking blows at serious criminal activities in the economic sphere. We must establish all regulations and systems, put them on a sound basis and stop up all "dodging, false claims, siphoning off and evasion." In doing so, we can improve management and raise economic results.

WEN WEI PO ON CHINA'S REVISED DRAFT CONSTITUTION

[Special feature phoned from Beijing by correspondent Cheng Hsiang [4453 5046]: "China's Revised Draft Constitution Compels Attention"]

[Text] Beijing, 27 Apr -- Today, Beijing issued the draft revision of "the Constitution of the People's Republic of China" which is the focus of attention throughout the country. The draft revision makes several important revisions to the national government system.

Important Reforms of the National Government System

First, the position of the state chairman is to be restored. The state chairman will represent the state internally and externally and the authority of the state chairman includes submitting to the NPC the nominations for premiers, promulgating laws, appointing and removing members of the State Council, and approving and annulling treaties and major agreements signed with foreign countries.

Second, a Central Military Council, which will lead the armed forces of the whole country, is to be established. The Central Military Council is to practice the chairman responsibility system and the chairman of the military council will be elected and subject to recall by the NPC. This is a new organizational system unprecedented in previous constitutions.

Third, the government is to be separated from the people's communes. The people's communes will no longer be the administrative organizations at the grassroot level. The legislative, administrative and supervisory work at the grassroot level will be taken on by the newly established people's congresses and the people's governments in villages and towns. Thus, the system of integrating the people's communes and people's government, which has been practiced for more than 20 years, will come to an end.

Apart from the above-mentioned important transformations of the government system, the new constitution also puts forth several important reforms. For example, an auditing organ under the State Council is to be established. This auditing organ will be responsible for auditing and supervising the financial revenue and expenditure and financial affairs of the people's government at all levels, and of the financial organs and enterprises of the departments under the people's governments. The constitution also entrusts to this auditing organ the authority to exercise auditing and supervisory power, which is not to be interfered with by any administrative organs, organizations or individuals. With the establishment of this auditing system, financial discipline in our country will be further perfected, the economic returns will increase, losses will be minimized and the criminal activities in the economic field will be curbed.

The Relationships Between the Party, the NPC and the State

The draft revision of the constitution also restores the ranking system of armymen and diplomatic personnel.

The new constitution clearly lays down the relationships between the party, the NPC and the state and thus, the role of the NPC is greatly strengthened. This is manifested in: 1) Authority over the PLA units is held by the NPC instead of the CCP. According to previous constitutions, the authority over the PLA units was held by the Central Military Commission and the chairman of the Central Military Commission was also the chairman of the CCP. According to the new constitution, the Central Military Council is set up by the state to head the armed forces of the whole country. The chairman of the military council is to be elected and subject to recall by the NPC. Legal authority over the PLA units is now shifted from the CCP to the NPC. 2) According to previous constitutions, nominations for candidates for premiers of the State Council were made by the CCP Central Committee to the NPC. Now, the state chairman will be the one to submit the nominations to the NPC.

Apart from the above-mentioned systems, some other principles are also stipulated. For example, the constitution explicitly lays down that the party's leadership should be carried out in accordance with the constitution and the relevant laws. Hence, the party cannot override the state constitution. This is very different from the two constitutions established in 1975 and 1978. In order to ensure the position of the NPC, the new constitution accords high prestige to the NPC representatives, that is, without the approval of the NCP Standing Committee members, no NPC representatives will be subject to arrest or criminal trial and the speeches and votes of the NPC representatives at any meeting will not be subject to legal responsibility.

Consolidate the Abolishment of the Life Tenure System

The abolishment of the life tenure system, proposed over the last 2 years, is now consolidated by the new constitution in a legal form. The new constitution stipulates that the tenure of the major state working personnel, including the state chairman and state vice chairman, the chairman and vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, the committee members of the NPC Standing Committee, the NPC representatives, the premier and vice premier of the State Council, the committee members of the State Council and the chairman of the Central Military Council must not exceed 5 years and they cannot be reelected more than twice.

Structural reforms carried out in the economic field over the last 2 years have been acknowledged by the new constitution. They consist of:

Protecting Foreign Investments in China

1. Concerning the role and function of foreign capital, in expounding the socialist ownership system, the constitution explicitly points out that foreign investments in China will be protected.

2. The role of regulation through market mechanism is acknowledged. The constitution points out that the national economy should have a proportional and harmonious development by means of an overall balance of a planned economy and the supplementary role of regulation through market mechanism.

3. The decisionmaking power of the local governments and enterprises is enlarged.

4. The position of the collective economy and individual laborers which has been developed over the last 2 years to resolve the employment problems is now acknowledged by the constitution.

The government has organized people throughout the country to discuss the draft revision of the constitution for 4 months after the draft is made public and their opinions will be collected to be examined and approved at the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC. Once these proposals are adopted at the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC, they will become official documents which will serve as the basis for the Sixth NPC.

PAPER SUGGESTS CONTENDERS FOR STATE CHAIRMAN

HK280223 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 28 Apr 82 p 7

[By David Chen]

[Text] Two respected, elderly Chinese leaders with impeccable revolutionary records are strong contenders for the revived state presidency, China analysts said yesterday.

There are Mr Xi Zhongxun (69), formerly first party secretary and governor of Guangdong and now a vice chairman of the National People's Congress, and Mr Song Renqiong (73), for two years director of the party Central Committee's Organisation Department and a member of the party Secretariat.

Mr Xi is well known to Hong Kong residents, having visited the colony in December 1979 and met community leaders.

The debate on whether to restore the post of president, known in China as state chairman, has been going on for four or five years and it was only recently disclosed that revival of the post was on the draft constitution.

There has been much talk that the country's strongman and vice-chairman, Mr Deng Xiaoping, is the most logical candidate. However, as Mr Deng earlier turned down the posts of prime minister and chairman of the Chinese Communist Party, his supporters realise he will not accept the presidency either.

Several names have been proposed for the position, but they were considered either too old or were virtually irreplacable in their present jobs.

One analyst suggested that in choosing the state chairman, the Beijing leadership would probably make certain ground rules for qualification. The candidate would have to be a man under 75 years old, with high seniority, good party and administrative records, good connections with the army and, of course, with Mr Deng.

Both Mr Xi and Mr Song are more than adequately qualified in these respects. According to communist records, Mr Xi, a native of Shaanxi Province, joined the Communist Youth League in 1926 and was a student activist. Two years later, he joined the party. From 1930 to 1932, he was engaged in military transport work in the communist northwest army. From 1932 to 1936, he led the peasant movement and guerilla forces against the nationalists in Shaanxi and Gansu. For a while, he was chairman of the soviet-Shaanxi-Gansu-border region. From 1936 to 1943, he was a district party secretary in Shaanxi and political commissar of the Communist Party security command. From 1943 until the end of the liberation war in 1949, he held various posts including political commissar of the Shaanxi-Gansu-border army group, vice-director of the party Central Committee's Organisation Department and secretary of the party's Northwest China Bureau. As political commissar of the northwest field army under Marshal Peng Dehui and Marshal He Ling, he was jointly involved in guarding the then communist capital of Yenan and the liberation of the whole of northwest China. Mr Xi therefore has very special relations with the armed forces and some analysts rank his prestige in the army as being equal to that of Mr Deng Xiaoping, Marshal Ye Jianying (now the chairman of the NPC) and Marshal Nie Rongzhen. After the People's Republic was founded, Mr Xi became the first secretary of the party's Northwest China Bureau and acting chairman of the Northwest Military Commission, where he instigated land reforms. In 1952, he was transferred to Beijing and became the director of the party's Propaganda Department. Later he became secretary-general in the State Council and a vice-premier serving under the late prime minister, Mr Chou Enlai. He was criticised during the Cultural Revolution and was not rehabilitated until after the gang of four were arrested in October 1976.

He went south to become the first secretary of the Guangdong provincial party committee, chairman of the provincial revolutionary committee, governor of the province and first political commissar of the Guangzhou Military Region. In 1980, he went back to Beijing to become a vice-chairman of the National People's Congress and also joined the newly restored party secretariat.

A very close colleague of Mr Deng, Mr Xi has been a strong supporter of the modernisation programme. It was Mr Xi, while governor of Guangdong, who suggested that the province be given greater autonomy in economic matters -- a suggestion that saw the birth of the special economic zones in both Guangdong and Fujian.

Although Mr Song is a few years older than Mr Xi, he is also in excellent health and his career and credentials are no less colourful and impressive. A native of Hunan Province, Mr Song also joined the Communist Youth League in 1926 and became a party member the same year. He first tasks included work in the peasant movement. In 1927, he took part in the abortive autumn harvest uprising. Seven years later, he joined the Long March and became a political commissar of the party cadre group.

When the Red Army arrived in northern Shaanxi, Mr Song became the political commissar of the 28th Army. After the Xian incident in December 1936, Mr Song became first a deputy director and then director of the Political Department of the 129th Division. During the China-Japan war, Mr Song was at various times political commissar and commander of a number of army units in Shanxi, southern Hebei and Henan. During the war of liberation, Mr Song was one of the top political commissars in the East China Field Army (later known as the Second Field Army), a secretary of the party's Henan-Anhui-Jiangsu sub-bureau. During that period, he was closely associated with Mr Deng. As the communist armies moved south, Mr Song took up several military, party and administrative jobs in Anhui and Nanjing. The end of the liberation war saw Mr Song in Yunnan as one of its provincial party secretaries. In 1953, he took over the affairs of Yunnan and became first deputy secretary of the party's Southwest China Bureau, the secretary being Mr Deng. It was during his tenure in Yunnan that General Ho Chi Minh won a decisive victory against the French at Dinh Bien Phu, North Vietnam, with Chinese help.

Soon after Mr Deng was transferred to Beijing as party secretary-general, Mr Song followed and became a deputy secretary. He was also put in charge of the military production section of the Central Committee's Military Affairs Commission. Later, he headed the Second Ministry of Machine-Building Industry supervising the production of modern armaments, including MIG 17s, tanks, warships and military lorries. In 1959, Mr Song was transferred to Shenyang as the secretary of the party Northeast China Bureau and first political commissar of the Shenyang Military Region. During the Cultural Revolution, he was bitterly attacked by followers of Lin Biao and the gang of four as the northeast region fell into their hands. Although he was nominally rehabilitated in 1974, he was not given a senior post until 1977, after the second return of Mr Deng. He was then given control of the Seventh Ministry of Machine-Building Industry, in charge of the development of missiles, rockets and space technology.

Concurrently, he is director of the party Central Committee's Organisation Department, succeeding Mr Hu Yaobang, now the party chairman. He was also one of the original 11 members of the restored party Secretariat under Mr Hu, who is also the party secretary general.

Lately, there has been talk that Mr Song may give up the directorship of the Organisation Department in favour of its vice-director and secretary, Mr Wang Zhaohua. If so, this will free him from party work and there has been speculation that Mr Song will either be elected as the state chairman, or to the lesser post of chairman of the National People's Congress, should the incumbent 82-year-old Marshal Ye Jianying retire.

LEADERS MEET U.S. CORPORATION PRESIDENT

Zhao Meets Tappan

He said the stable development of the nation's economic construction is a long-term strategy with its foundations to be firmly laid in the 1980s.

Zhao Ziyang praised Tappan for his efforts to promote China-U.S. trade. He said China has abundant coal resources and the coal industry is a promising one. He welcomed the Fluor Corporation's cooperation with the China National Coal Development Corporation.

Tappan said his corporation takes a long-term view in conducting economic cooperation with the People's Republic of China, and that Fluor has taken measures to suspend its economic ties with Taiwan since the Shanghai communique.

Present at the meeting were Gao Yangwen, minister of coal industry, and Kong Xun, chairman of the board of directors of the China National Coal Development Corporation.

HAIG OUTLINES U.S. APPROACH TO SOVIET UNION

OW281250 Beijing XINHUA in English 1232 GMT 28 Apr 82

[Text] Washington, April 27 (XINHUA) -- U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig today advocated an American approach to the Soviet Union which he said would "balance strength and negotiations."

In a policy speech at the U.S. Chamber of Commerce here, Haig held that the United States and the Soviet Union are now in a "sensitive and dangerous period of changing superpower relationship."

U.S. foreign policy in the coming months, he said, would be "dominated by the search for more constructive relations" with Eastern bloc countries. But he added that "a sudden or dramatic reconciliation" should not be expected between the U.S. and the Soviet Union.

"The United States must make clear to the Soviet Union that there are penalties for aggression and incentives for restraint," he said.

Rebuffing an idea that negotiations with the Soviet Union are an alternative to the balance of power, Haig said that "detente did not alter Soviet priorities. Even as the West sought a reduction in tensions, the Soviet Union expanded its military forces."

He said, "the result of America's wishful thinking and profound national introspection has been swift and sure. Moscow has acted forcibly to expand its dominions." In Vietnam, Kampuchea, Afghanistan and now in Central America, "we have reaped the grim harvest of self-delusion," he added.

While advocating a balance of strength, Haig also expressed U.S. willingness to negotiate with the Soviet Union on arms control and other issues. "Nothing is gained by appearing to fear diplomatic discussions," he said.

Referring to "a rising sense of frustration" and "very serious problems" between the U.S. and its European allies, Haig called for a "stronger, more cooperative alliance." He said maintaining the alliance is imperative because the allies need to stand together for their common defense and "the Atlantic alliance is the foundation of our security."

He said it is "essential" to carry out NATO's two-track decision of 1979 to go forward with the modernization of intermediate range nuclear systems in Western Europe while simultaneously pursuing arms control negotiations with the Soviet Union.

BANQUET CELEBRATES BEIJING-LOS ANGELES ROUTE

[Text] Beijing, April 28 (XINHUA) -- A banquet marking the inauguration of Beijing-Los Angeles air services and welcoming a delegation from that city was held at the Great Hall of the People this evening. The route, initiated in accordance with a Sino-U.S. civil air transport agreement, is Beijing-Shanghai-Los Angeles with the return being Los Angeles-San Francisco-Shanghai-Beijing. XINHUA CORRESPONDENT HAILS SINAI RETURN TO EGYPT

["Feature: Sinai Returns to Egypt, by XINHUA Correspondent Wan Guang" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Cairo, Apr 25 (XINHUA) -- "Sinai, the son that had been seized away by force for nearly 15 years, is now back again in the arms of the mother," hailed the Egyptians today on the occasion of the final return of the Sinai Peninsula to Egypt after a long Israeli occupation since the 1967 Middle East war.

The Israeli flag came down at noon. And twin Egyptian flag-raisings were held at 1:40 p.m. local time at Rafah on Sinai's northeastern border and at Sharm el-Sheikh on the southern tip of the peninula.

With tears in their eyes, many Eygyptians recalled the warring decades in the past and deeply cherished the memories of the heroes who had shed their blood on the soil of Sinai during the 1973 October war. It was in that war that Egypt launched a surprise attack on the Israeli soldiers occupying the peninsula and Egyptian troops forcibly crossed the Suez Canal into Sinai, winning an important victory over Israel. "Without the October war," people said, "the Egyptian-Israeli negotiations could have accomplished no equal peace on the Egyptian-Israeli front."

Residents in Sinai said that during the past decade and more they were at the mercy of the Israelis, but many people refused to have anything to do with the Israeli occupiers. Instead, they organized themselves to fight against the occupiers and hundreds of youth were killed by Israeli soldiers. The people in Sinai have fought heroically for the return of the peninsula and the recovery of the territory by Egypt has turned over a new page in the history of Sinai.

Yusuf Sabri Abu Talib, governor of north Sinai who raised the Egyptian flag at Rafah, had been an artillery commander of the Egyptian troops at the front in the October war.

When asked in an interview about his feelings as a commander directing the war and as a governor to lead the reconstruction of Sinai, he replied, "this is a big feeling, a great challenge. A target can be destroyed within seconds when guns open fire, but construction will take a much longer and harder time." He then made the significant remark, "The October war made it possible for Sinai to develop in peace, and peace has to be defended with force."

Egypt today hailed the recovery as "the beginning of an era" in Sinai. In fact, changes have taken place in the two thirds of Sinai which returned to Egypt before January, 1980. The Egyptian government has begun mapping out the short-term and long-term programs for development of the entire Sinai. A bright future has appeared for the new Sinai.

When hailing the return of Sinai and beginning its construction, the Egyptian people have not forgotten their tasks of defending peace and national sovereignty and their responsibility for the Arab cause. Egypt belongs to the Arab world. Ties of nationality, religion, culture and geography have closely linked Egypt together with other Arab countries. The northern Sinai borders the Gaza Strip, still occupied by Israel. After 1948, many Palestinian people fled to Sinai and settled down in Arish and other places. They still have relatives in the Gaza Strip. Now, an international demarcation line divides Rafah into two, one belongs to Egypt, another to the occupied Palestine. Some sections of the demarcation line run through the house-roofs on the border. The Egyptian inhabitants in Rafah saw the heroic struggle waged by the Palestinian people in the Gaza Strip against the Israeli annexation of the Arab territories.

They had experienced the same sufferings and of course shared the feelings of the Palestinian people. In Arish, this correspondent was told that the Arab people would never forget Palestine and that an all-round peace cannot be achieved without the settlement of the Palestine problem.

Beginning today, the Sinai border will be placed under the surveillance of the multinational forces provided by 11 countries including the United States. The Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty stipulates that Egypt could only station civil police in Strip C, 20 to 50 kilometers in width, west of the Sinai border line, including the entire coastal area of the Gulf of Aqaba. In the extensive Strip B stretching westward from Strip C across the middle Sinai, Egypt could only deploy four frontier battalions of 4,000 men equipped with light weapons. In Strip A, over 50 kilometers in width, between Strip B and the Suez Canal and the Suez Gulf, Egypt could station 22,000 troops equipped with limited number of tanks and artillery pieces. The peace treaty fails to make clear the time when such "security arrangements" would be changed. Besides, the dispute over the Taba area is still to be solved. The Sinai will remain to be a sensitive spot and is closely related with the destiny of Palestine and other occupied Arab territories.

The Sinai provides an eastern defence barrier for Egypt. The Egyptian people have learnt from history that except the Axis troops intruding into Egypt from the western border during the World War Two, all previous invasions were made from her eastern frontier. In celebration of the return of the Sinai Peninsula, the Cairo weekly PICTURE carried a passage which may reflect the universal feelings of the Egyptian people: "we should deepen our feeling that Sinai is still the dangerous gate" and peace and security "is not to be maintained so much by documents as it is to be maintained by a national deterring force".

RENMIN RIBAO SAYS BEGIN BLACKMAILING EGYPT

[Newsletter by RENMIN RIBAO reporter Xing Xiangchao [6717 6272 6389]: "Begin Is Using Blackmail"]

[Text] Cairo, 19 Apr -- After attending a Cabinet meeting that lasted as long as 6 hours on 12 April, Menahem Begin made an abrupt change in his attitude toward the question of withdrawing troops from the Sinai, saying that it might be necessary to reconsider this question.

Before this, an important member of the Begin Cabinet had threatened to postpone or refuse withdrawing troops from the Sinai. At present, Begin himself has also changed his attitude of withdrawing troops as scheduled which he had repeatedly expressed on many occasions. This change of Begin's attitude, as he himself put it, is because Egypt has "violated the Camp David accords." He enumerated three so-called reasons.

First, arms have been smuggled from the Sinai into the occupied Gaza area. Israeli Defense Minister Ariel Sharon said, "The security forces have discovered that 500 handgrenades have been smuggled into Gaza since January this year. Besides, 1,000 handgrenades were smuggled in and discovered and seized in 1981." This charge is hardly justifiable since in the past few years, joint Egyptian-Israeli bodies which were set up for withdrawing troops from the Sinai have all along been working and have held several meetings. Israel has never made this kind of accusation before. Egypt's deputy prime minister and foreign minister, Kamal H. 'Ali, has strongly refuted this accusation and holds that joint investigations can be carried out if necessary.

Second, the number of Egyptian troops stationed in the Sinai has exceeded that stipulated in the "peace treaty." The fact is that on 5, 7 and 8 April, both military satellites and U.S. military observers in the Sinai provided Egypt and Israel with information on military activities in the Sinai showing that Egypt had not violated the stipulations of the "peace treaty."

Third, Egypt has violated the "peace treaty" in its propaganda, for example in the speech and 11-point proposal for settling the Palestinian issue put forth by Egypt's representative Esmat 'Abd al-Majid at the Nonaligned Movement Coordination Bureau extraordinary conference. A responsible member of the Egyptian Government said, "Majid's speech is beyond reproach. It is a true peace line. It is not something new, nor has it been put forth for the first time either." Even Israel's Jerusalem POST held that the Begin administration need not shout in confusion or conduct vigorous propaganda about the speech.

Why did Israel create this tense atmosphere on the eve of 25 April? Here is part of an undisguised speech given by an Israeli senior official on 15 April. "No one should expect that Israel will pay everything for the goods or pay the last installment before all the goods have been delivered." This means that Israel regards its obligations stipulated in the treaty of withdrawing troops from the Sinai as a political transaction. It wants to take advantage of the conclusions of this transaction to wantonly blackmail Egypt.

The purpose of Israel's blackmail is to make Egypt pledge not to violate the "peace treaty" and the Camp David accords but its specific content is unknown. However, it can be seen from this demand that Israel harbors evil intentions because the basis of this demand for Egypt's pledge is its unreasonable "accusation." Moreover, this pledge is to be made only by one side and Israel may not commit itself to any obligation at all.

Israel's unreasonable demand of asking Egypt to make a pledge has been rejected but it seems that Israel will continue to use blackmail.

["Tension at Malvinas and Britain's Position -- Commentary by Correspondent Yang Yi" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] London, April 27 (XINHUA) -- The landing of British naval troops on the South Georgia Island on April 25 has further complicated the British-Argentine dispute over the Malvinas (Falkland)Islands, and made a peaceful solution more difficult.

During the parliamentary debate in the past two days, the military action taken by the Conservative government has won fairly warm support. However, it has also aroused anxiety and reproach among quite a number of people. Those who showed disapproval were afraid that the war escalation might render the negotiations impossible. They stood for continued efforts through diplomatic channels to negotiate a fair and reasonable solution. Opposition Labor Party leader Michael Foot raised doubts about the wisdom to resort to force in the course of negotiations.

It is believed here that the British Government is now facing a critical moment. Its decision might probably produce an important influence on the situation both at home and abroad.

Since the beginning of the conflict, the British Government has been extremely quick in action both diplomatically and militarily. After the landing on South Georgia, London still stresses a peaceful solution. At the same time, it has declared that only by increasing military pressure can negotiations be fruitful. It said, with the British naval fleet nearing the Malvinas Islands the time for talks is very limited. THE TIMES reported today that small groups of British troops had landed in remote areas of the Malvinas Islands to set up bridgeheads in preparation for a large-scale military operation. While fighting at South Georgia is still going on, there are unconfirmed reports saying that large groups of British troops have landed on the main island of the archipelago. True or not, it is considered to reflect Britain's tactics of "pressing peace through war." Therefore, the danger that the conflict might be expanded cannot be completely excluded.

Local observers hold that if Britain escalates its military action, it may prove successful in the short run. But, in the long run, it is not desirable; the loss would outweigh the gains.

For one thing, it would entail great expenses for the armed forces to be sent on a distant, protracted expedition, to the disadvantage of an already fragile economy. It would lead to bigger financial deficits, heavier taxes, higher interest rates and soaring prices, to the detriment of the monetarist austerity policy practised by Mrs. Thatcher.

Second, an escalation of military action would widen the difference between the ruling and opposition parties. Outcries for a peaceful solution and against resorting to arms are mounting in the country. Fears of bloodshed in a foreign land are also increasing. All these are forming pressures on the government.

Third, international reactions to British occupation of the South Georgia Island are something not to be overlooked.

The Coordinating Bureau of the Non-Aligned Movement recently reiterated its support for Argentina's claim for sovereignty over the Malvinas Islands. The same sentiments also found expression at the emergency foreign ministers meeting of the Organisation of American States (OAS).

Fourth, from a military point of view, it is a taboo in the art of war to send an isolated task force on an expedition 8,000 miles away from the home country, entailing a long supply line with insufficient logistic support. What is more, the South Atlantic, near the Antarctic, has a cold and stormy weather which makes fighting most difficult and a long-term stationing impossible. This, therefore, can in no way provide a good solution.

In view of all this, people of insight hope that Britain and Argentina, taking into account the overall world situation and the fundamental interests of the two countries, will exercise restraint and refrain from escalating the conflict. It is also hoped that, with the mediation of peace-loving countries and international organisations, the two countries will gradually arrive at a reasonable and just solution of the problem, a vestige left over by history, through diplomatic channels, thus keeping away the hegemonists who are trying to fish in troubled waters, jeopardize the security of the coastal countries of the South Atlantic and endanger peace and stability in the world.

The revised draft of the Constitution of the People's Republic of China

Preamble

China is one of the countries which has the longest history in the world. The people of all nationalities in China have jointly created the brilliant and magnificent national culture and the revolutionary traditions which are filled with glory.

After 1840, feudal China gradually became a semicolonial and semifeudal nation. The Chinese people waged valiant struggles and advanced wave upon wave for national independence, national liberation and democratic freedom.

Significant, earth-shaking historical changes have taken place during the 20th century.

The 1911 revolution led by Mr Sun Yat-sen abolished the feudal imperial system and founded the Republic of China. However, the revolutionary achievements were usurped by the reactionary forces. China was still unable to extricate itself from its semicolonial and semifeudal status.

After undergoing protracted and tortuous armed struggles and other forms of struggle, the Communist Party of China, with Chairman Mao Zedong as the leader, led the Chinese people in overthrowing the rule of imperialism, feudalism and bureaucrat-capitalism, winning tremendous victory in the new democratic revolution, and in 1949 founded the People's Republic of China. Since then, the Chinese people have seized the power of the state and become the masters of the nation.

After the founding of the People's Republic of China, China's society accomplished the transition from new democracy to socialism. The system of man exploiting man has already been abolished, and the socialist system has been firmly set up.

The people's democratic dictatorship led by the working class and based on the worker-peasant alliance -- the dictatorship of the proletariat -- has been consolidated and developed. Together with all the people in the country, the Chinese People's Liberation Army has defeated armed provocations and subversive plots of imperialism and hegemonism, and safeguarded the independence and security of the state. Tremendous achievements have been scored in economic construction. An independent and fairly complete socialist industrial system and a national economic system have already taken shape in the main. The livelihood of the broad masses of people has been much improved. Great developments have been reported in education, science, culture and other fields, and significant achievements scored in carrying out ideological education in socialism. The victories in China's new democratic revolution and socialist cause have been won by the Chinese people under the leadership of the Communist Party of China and under the guidance of Mao Zedong Thought, which integrates the universal truth of Marxism-Leninism with the concrete practice in China, by upholding the truth, correcting errors and overcoming many obstacles. From now on, the basic task of the Chinese people is to concentrate our efforts in carrying out socialist modernization. Under the leadership of the CCP and the guidance of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, the Chinese people will continue to uphold the people's democratic dictatorship and the socialist road, incessantly improve the various systems of socialism, give full play to socialist democracy, perfect the socialist legal system, rely on our own efforts, and work harder than ever before to build China into a highly democratic and civilized socialist nation with modern industry, agriculture, national defense and science and technology.

In China, class struggle will continue to exist within certain limits for a long time to come after the exploiters have been eliminated as classes. The Chinese people must struggle against antagonistic forces and elements at home and abroad that adopt a hostile attitude towards and sabotage China's socialist system.

Taiwan is a part of the sacred territory of the People's Republic of China. It is the sacred duty of the people throughout China, including the Taiwan compatriots, to accomplish the great cause of unifying our motherland.

In the long course of revolution and construction, we have formed a comprehensive united front led by the Chinese Communist Party and composed of various democratic parties and mass organizations, and comprising all socialist working people, all patriots who are in favor of socialism and all who support the reunification of our motherland. This united front will continue to be consolidated and expanded. The Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference is an important organization of the united front. In the past, it has played an important historic role. From now on, it will further play its important role in our country's political life, social life and friendly exchanges with foreign countries, in undertaking socialist modernization and in the struggle to defend the solidarity and unification of our country.

The People's Republic of China is a unitary multinational state founded by various nationalities in China. Socialist relations of equality, unity and mutual assistance have been firmly established among the various nationalities and they will continue to be strengthened. The state unremittingly helps the regions of the various minority nationalities in accelerating economic and cultural development according to the peculiarities and demands of the minority nationalities so as to promote coprosperity among all nationalities.

China's accomplishment in revolution and construction is inseparable from the support given us by the people of the world. China's future is closely connected to the bright future of the world. China adheres to the five principles of mutual respect for sovereignty and territorial integrity, mutual nonaggression, noninterference in each other's internal affairs, equality and mutual benefit, and peaceful coexistence to develop diplomatic relations and economic and cultural exchanges with other countries. It persistently opposes imperialism, hegemonism and colonialism, strengthens unity with the people of various countries in the world, supports the just struggles waged by oppressed nations and developing countries to defend national independence and develop national economy, and strives to defend world peace and promote the progress of humanity.

This constitution records the achievements of the Chinese people's struggle and stipulates the fundamental system and tasks of the state. It is the country's fundamental law with supreme legal effect. The people of the various nationalities throughout the country, all organs of state, the people's armed forces, political parties, mass organizations, institutions and enterprises must take the constitution as the fundamental norm for their activities. It is their duty to protect the dignity of the constitution and ensure its implementation.

NPC STANDING COMMITTEE HEARS YAO YILIN REPORT

OW290139 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0749 GMT 28 Apr 82

[Text] Beijing, 28 Apr (XINHUA) -- The 23d Session of the Fifth NPC Standing Committee held a plenary meeting in the Great Hall of the People here this morning. The meeting heard a report by Vice Premier Yao Yilin on the draft plan for 1982 economic and social development, a report by Minister of Finance Wang Bingqian on the draft state budget for 1982 and an explanation of "the regulations concerning the requisition of land for capital construction of the state (draft)," made by Lu Kebai, vice minister of the State Capital Construction Commission.

The Fourth Session of the Fifth NPC had, in December 1981, approved in principle, the outline of the 1982 economic and social development plan submitted to the session by the State Council and had authorized the NPC Standing Committee and the State Council to make the necessary amendments, based on actual conditions, before forwarding the plan to the NPC for consideration and approval.

The Fourth Session of the Fifth NPC had also reviewed the execution of the state budget estimate for 1981 and the targets for revenue and expenditure in the state budget for 1982, and had authorized the NPC Standing Committee to examine and approve the state final statement for 1981 and the state targets for revenue and expenditure in the state budget for 1982, and had authorized the NPC Standing Committee to examine and approve the state final statement for 1981 and the state budget for 1982, when ready.

Yao Yilin and Wang Bingqian were entrusted by the State Council with delivering these two reports to the NPC Standing Committee at today's meeting.

Yao Yilin said in his report: The national economic plan for 1981 was crowned with success, thanks to the common efforts of the people of all nationalities in the country. It was much more satisfactory than expected. The country's industrial and agricultural production has grown at a certain speed in the course of a large scale economic readjustment, and the proportionate relationship among all sectors of the economy has been further coordinated. The country's economic situation as a whole is stable; gone are the hardest times and all fields of work have embarked on the road of steady development. This shows that the socialist system has the power to overcome difficulties.

Yao Yilin continued: The State Council described the main tasks for 1982 national economic and social development as follows: to continue to implement the policy of readjustment, restructuring, reorganization and upgrading; to consolidate and develop the achievements in stabilizing the economy in 1981; to maintain a basic balance between state revenue and expenditure and keep market prices stable and to make efforts to improve economic results, to achieve a bigger economic growth than in 1981.

His report covered the various specific tasks and main targets for 1982.

Yao Yilin said: The trend of our national economic growth in the first quarter of this year was very good. The present problem is that we must stress economic results. For this reason, we should emphasize the following points in our economic work: first, we must concentrate our efforts on the overall consolidation of the enterprises and their necessary reorganization; second, efforts should be made to upgrade equipment and carry out technical reform at a number of key enterprises; third, we must improve the results of investment; fourth, steps should be taken to reduce the amount of floating funds; fifth, it is necessary to consolidate the initial fruitful results of our economic system reform; and sixth, efforts are needed to strengthen ideological and political work in our economic tasks.

Wang Bingqian said in his report: The deficit in the state final statement for 1981 is smaller than originally estimated, according to an initial statistical report. The general situation is fine. It is expected that the national financial and economic situation will continually turn for the better in 1982. To meet the need of development of the current situation, revenue and expenditure projected in the 1982 state budget have been readjusted, as needed, on the basis of their original targets. The fundamental principle for preparing the budget was that the planned economy should still prevail and the regulation by the market can only be supplementary and that the state financial income should increase by promoting production and improving our economic results. We will continue to control the scale of capital construction and the various other expenditures, while increasing the amount of investment in the energy industry and in communications undertakings. The expenditures on culture, education and national defense also increased. The current policy of distribution will be maintained in order to continually improve the livelihood of the people in both rural and urban areas on the basis of production development. Efforts will be made to maintain a basic balance between revenue and expenditure and the stability of prices and to ensure a steady development of the national economy.

The First NPC's Standing Committee had, in January 1958, approved the "methods for the requisition of land for state construction," which were later promulgated by the State Council. In the past 20 years and more since then, this country has achieved much in economic construction and the situation has drastically changed. Some of the provisions in the above mentioned "methods" do not conform with the changed situation and urgently need to be upgraded. Acting in line with this, the State Council submitted "the regulations concerning the requisition of land for capital construction of the state (draft)" to the current NPC Standing Committee session for consideration and approval. Entrusted by the State Council, Lu Kebai explained the necessity of the draft regulations, and other related questions, at the NPC Standing Committee's plenary session today.

Present were Vice Chairmen Peng Zhen, Ulanhu, Wei Guoqing, Liao Chengzhi, Ngapoi Ngawang Jigme, Xu Deheng, Shi Liang, Yang Shangkun, Banqen Erdini Qoigyi Gyancan and Zhu Xuefan. Present as observers were the chief procurator of the Supreme People's Procuratorate, Huang Huoqing; the standing committee members of the CPPCC National Committee in Beijing and responsible persons of the standing committees of the people's congresses of the provinces, autonomous regions and municipalities directly under the central government.

EDITORIAL URGES ORGANIZING PEASANTS' INITIATIVE

[Editorial: "Organize the Initiative of the Peasants in Developing Production and Construction -- More on Summing Up and Perfecting the Responsibility System in Agricultural Production"]

[Text] The party's policies in rural areas have greatly stimulated the peasants' enthusiasm for labor. The new task facing leaders at all levels is to further lead the broad masses' initiative into developing production and construction. People's initiative is a factor which can play a long-term role and is the basis for achieving successes in all work. In order to change this initiative into a kind of material force, we must properly direct it toward promoting social production; that is to say, through a specified mode of production, we should associate this initiative with given production conditions, so as to meet the needs in developing social production. Since various forms of the production responsibility system were established in rural areas, the masses' enthusiasm for production has been greatly enhanced. But there are many links in production and construction where the strength of individual households is insufficient. Sometimes it is even impossible for them to tackle these tasks. Thus organization is essential in giving play to coordinated and collective social strength in production. Otherwise, the masses' initiative will be limited, even frustrated.

The masses' initiative should first be directed to properly handling the current production. In those places which implement the measures of fixing output quotas by contract, or particularly, assigning farm work to individual households, guidance should be given in planting crops in line with plans. It is necessary to help solve technical problems concerning farm animals, seed, fertilizer, growing seedlings, irrigation and drainage and to prepare necessary conditions for production.

It should be seen that although China's agricultural production remains at a low level, it has attained a certain degree of socialization. Only on the basis of giving play to the masses' initiative, coupled with a strengthened leadership, can better economic results be achieved in conformity with the interests of both society and individual commune members.

While organizing the initiative of the masses in developing production and construction, it is also imperative to lay down a development goal for a specified period in accordance with both current and long-term interests. Each commune and each production brigade should work out its long-term construction plan, which can cover a period of either 3 to 5 years or 8 to 10 years. This plan should include all agricultural, forestry, animal husbandry, sideline production, fishery, industrial and commercial development targets. It should cover measures for rationally utilizing various natural resources, for rationally regulating the use of the labor force, for promoting diversified undertakings, for improving technology related to irrigation work, production fertilizer, breeding improved varieties and machinery utilization. Measures for increasing income, expanding public accumulation, carrying out farmland capital construction, improving production conditions, as well as for birth control, education and health work, welfare for the poor, special care and security work, should all be taken into consideration when the plan is being worked out. If detailed and definite measures cannot be mapped out for the time being, we may map out a rough sketch, leaving it open for supplementation and revision in the future. However, there should be at least several items of feasible and effective measures for increasing production output. Plans should be well coordinated between different levels, on the basis of the commune and brigade levels. The county level can also put forth some basic guiding targets. Plans should be discussed and decided by the masses, so that they can really be common programs of action regarded as practicable by the broad masses.

At present, the work of perfecting the production responsibility systems is being carried out all over the country. To assess whether a type of system is suitable and perfect, the basic criterion is whether it accords with the demands of the masses in a commune or a brigade and whether it can promote the development of production. Plans for development in all communes and brigades must be thoroughly discussed by the masses, thus widening their field of vision, broadening avenues of production and clarifying the goal of development. Thus many concrete issues, such as deciding a responsibility system form, deciding whether items should be handled unifiedly or separately, and deciding the measures for unified or separate operation, will all become easy to settle, because the masses can weigh the advantages and disadvantages of all schemes and make decisions themselves. Preparation is essential for success. With foresight and preparation, one can eliminate one-sidedness and avoid blindness and thus stabilize the system and the popular feeling. In this sense, mapping out a development plan is a major part of and a necessary precondition for perfecting the production responsibility system.

Working out a development plan can help unite and educate peasants and thus stimulate the people to march forward vigorously. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, we have appropriately adjusted our rural policies, corrected the deviation of neglecting peasants' material interests, and achieved noticeable results. The work in this respect should be done even better. However, while taking peasants' material interests into consideration, we do not advocate that peasants give up their common economic goals and each pursue their own course. Neither can we only consider the temporary and partial interests and ignore the long-term and overall interests. It should be affirmed that peasants' socialist enthusiasm is their essential aspect. While choosing various forms of the responsibility system, peasants have to earn their living as well as develop production. They have a desire to develop production through collective cooperation. The key to the realization of this desire lies in the correct leadership by the party and arduous work.

We should never repeat the mistake of giving arbitrary directions, but if we give up our leadership and cannot comply with the basic demands of the masses, we will also cut ourselves off from the masses. As the first step toward the goal of agricultural modernization, the development plans of communes and brigades can reflect a combination of the peasants' current and long-term interests and between the interests of both the collective and the individual. These goals are tangible, acceptable, practicable and predictable. They will inevitably play a role in mobilizing and uniting the masses and organizing their initiative. They will inevitably arouse people's revolutionary spirit of working hard and striving to change the face of the rural areas with firm determination, and encourage people to contribute their strength and wisdom to common goals. Therefore, making plans is also an effective form of educating and guiding peasants, and integrating economic work and political and ideological work.

In short, we hope the broad masses of cadres and scientific and technical workers in rural areas can start to act, do a good job in working out development plans in rural areas in a down-to-earth manner, and lead the initiative of the broad masses into the struggle for developing production and construction.

WAN LI ADDRESSES NATIONAL MODEL WORKERS FORUM

[Text] Beijing, 27 Apr (XINHUA) -- The west conference room of the Great Hall of the People was filled with a warm atmosphere today as the 201 representatives of model workers and advanced individuals from all over the country joined party and state leaders at a forum to freely discuss the excellent situation in all trades and professions and study how to further launch the emulation activity to learn from and catch up with the advanced and contribute to the four modernizations.

The forum was held by the All-China Federation of Trade Unions.

Party and state leaders Wang Zhen, Wan Li, Xi Zhongxun, Yao Yilin, Bo Yibo and responsible persons of the All-China Women's Federation, CYL Central Committee, Beijing Municipal CCP Committee and people's government attended today's opening ceremony.

Ni Zhifu, chairman of the All-China Federation of Trade Unions, spoke first. He hoped that the forum would become a gathering in which the participants would display the communist spirit and, enhancing their confidence and morale, compare with the advanced and strive to learn from and catch up with them.

Wan Li, member of the CCPCC Secretariat and vice premier of the State Council, made an important speech. On behalf of the party Central Committee and State Council, he extended warm greetings on labor day to the representatives present, as well as model workers, advanced individuals and all workers throughout the country.

Wan Li said: Although the representatives present today and model workers and advanced individuals in the country each have their own specialities, they have one thing in common, that is, they all have a high degree of socialist consciousness, lofty patriotism, a strong sense of responsibility as masters of the country, and selfless spirit in doing solid work. The model workers and advanced individuals have inherited and carried forward the revolutionary tradition and fine quality of the Chinese working class and embodied the natural characteristics of the Chinese workers. Through this forum, we want to spread these advanced ideas and outstanding quality among the entire staff and workers and the masses of people so that they can become the common ideas of hundreds of millions of people.

Wan Li said: As the leading class in China and main force in building socialist material and spiritual civilization, the working class shoulders the glorious but difficult responsibility of accomplishing the gigantic program of socialist modernization. Wan Li hoped that the representatives present would pay attention to the following three aspects:

First, it is necessary to continue to carry forward the spirit of loving the motherland, the party and socialism, uphold the four fundamental principles, oppose the tendency of bourgeois liberalization, strive to raise the political quality of the working class and take a firm and clear-cut stand in the current struggle to strike at serious crimes in the economic field.

Second, it is necessary to display the arduous pioneering spirit and do a still better job in the building of socialist material civilization with the emphasis on raising economic results. It is also necessary to eliminate and improve poor quality, high-priced products and provide the people with a great quantity of high quality and low-priced goods and outstanding services.

Third, it is necessary to further raise the working class' sense of responsibility as the master of its own affairs. It is also necessary to continue to strengthen education and training of young workers so that they will become a new generation of people who work hard, master advanced technology and abide by the law.

In conclusion, Wan Li said: In launching the activity to learn from and catch up with the advanced, party organizations at various levels must strengthen leadership, pay attention to discovering and commending the advanced, support advanced individuals' pioneering spirit, publicize their advanced ideas and experience, and bring into full play their role as leader, backbone and bridge. Workers, youth and women's organizations at various levels must conduct penetrating and meticulous mass ideological and organizational work so that the emulation activity to learn from and catch up with the advanced and contribute to the four modernizations can be carried out on a wider and deeper scale and more protractedly.

Vice Premier of the State Council Bo Yibo also spoke at the forum.

COMMENTATOR URGES IMPROVED STATE FARM MANAGEMENT

[Commentator's article: "State Farms Must Strive To Raise The Management Level"]

[Text] Good results have already been achieved in the readjustment and reform of our state farms. Last year there were natural disasters in quite a few areas, but the total profits earned by our state farms exceeded their total losses by more than 200 million yuan. In order to consolidate what our state farms have achieved in eliminating losses and increasing profits, in order to supply more agricultural and sideline products for the state and in order to accumulate more funds for construction, every state farm should soundly raise its management level.

The management level of our various state farms is very uneven. Thirty-five percent of our state farms continued to suffer losses last year and some of the state farms that had eliminated losses suffered losses again last year. Except for a few state farms that are situated in cold and high-altitude areas and in remote areas where conditions are very poor, most state farms suffered losses because they were engaged in single-crop operations or because their economic foundation was weak. Our state farms in Heilongjiang Province changed from earning profits to suffering losses last year mainly because of poor capital construction on their farmland which made it impossible for them to resist natural disasters. As a result, they suffered seriously from floods. However, lack of diversified sources of income was also an important reason. The state farms in Jiangsu Province were also afflicted by natural disasters last year, but each of them earned a profit. This was precisely because they had developed more than 70 kinds of diversified operations over the years and had increased their income to cover the losses caused by natural disasters they had strengthened the construction of their farmland which reduced the losses caused by the natural disasters. Another factor that gave rise to losses was excessive production costs incurred by some of the state farms. According to investigations, the average loss incurred by 229 state farms for every 100 yuan of output value was 17.6 yuan.

The average cost of producing 1 jin of rice or wheat in 89 of the state farms was as high as 2 to 3 jiao. Therefore, putting an end to single-crop operations and lowering costs are the key problems in raising the management level of our state farms at present.

There is relatively great potential in our state farms, as most of them have rich resources and the favorable conditions of an abundant labor force and a relatively large amount of farm machinery and power equipment. As long as they carry out the policy of taking one undertaking as the major one and comprehensively developing all undertakings in the light of their local conditions, they will have broad prospects for developing diversified economy. Either by adopting the method of intensive farming or by employing large amounts of labor, they will be able to develop all kinds of operations including planting and breeding as well as industries. Then they will be able to raise their income and increase their funds through diversified channels and gradually build the economic strength of the state farms. Here we should emphasize that it is necessary to pay attention not only to increasing the variety of our operations but also to developing in depth comprehensive utilization. Developing planting, breeding and processing operations comprehensively will enable us to raise our economic effect with less investment. For example, the Lutai state farm in Hebei Province has achieved remarkable results through comprehensive operations in agriculture, animal husbandry, industry and commerce. Now most of our state farms have been given responsibility for their own financial affairs. As long as they act in strict accordance with the economic planning of the state, they will have full decision-making power in using their surplus output and funds to develop comprehensive agricultural, industrial and commercial operations under the condition of fulfilling their sales quotas of agricultural and sideline products and their profit targets. Thus they will be able to gradually lay a stable economic foundation for their farms and completely eliminate their losses. Of course, our state farms are enterprises owned by the whole people, and therefore, they should not blindly pursue high prices for their commodities or blindly develop diversified operations without regard for the demands of the state. Moreover, in developing diversified operations, they should pay attention to ensuring a constant supply of raw materials and to the marketability and the fine qualities of their products in order to produce the products that are really needed in the community. Then they will be in an invincible position.

According to the analyses of the results of the investigation of the above-mentioned 229 state farms, the high production costs in those state farms chiefly stemmed from the excessive number of nonproduction personnel, low labor productivity, confusion in financial and stock management and excessive nonmanagerial expenditures (which were chiefly incurred to meet policy requirements and social requirements). Except for the problem of nonmanagerial expenditures which should be solved by the state under its unified arrangement, the state farms themselves should thoroughly overcome the erroneous idea of "eating out of the same pot," strengthen their accounting work and budgetary control, strictly enforce their managerial regulations, improve their management and reduce their labor and material costs as much as possible. The practice in a large number of state farms that have earned profits has proved that it is an effective measure to establish and perfect the economic responsibility system for all the jobs under the condition of earnestly fixing production and cost targets and labor quotas and drawing up the financial and stock management regulations and control systems, in order to closely link the management result of the enterprises with the remuneration of the staff and workers and in order to divide up responsibility clearly and mete out rewards and punishment appropriately. By adopting this measure, we will not only make our staff and workers cleraly aware of the production targets and quotas but we will also be able to give play to the staff and workers' initiative in increasing production and saving on expenses.

In implementing various forms of the economic responsibility system within our state farms, all the departments that have been assigned responsibility should obey the unified leadership of the state farm groups and observe the regulations that have been drawn up by these leading groups in planning their production, handling their major products, purchasing the major materials and goods they need, deploying their labor force and meting out rewards and punishment. This will contribute to giving play to the advantages of unifed management and to making the mechanical operations more effective. Our state farms should give reasonable consideration to the accumulation of the state, the income of the farms and the personal interests of their staff and workers. They should prevent the malpractices of reducing targets and quotas at will, expanding the farms' share of profits without authorization and paying excessive bonuses. Moreover, they should not assign responsibility for production by allocating shares of the products in contravention of the principles and regulations of unified management for conducting state-run agriculture.

Recently, the CCP Central Committee has approved and issued the "summarized minutes of the national rural work conference," which point out that "as in conducting any other undertaking, we should pay great attention to observing the principle of raising economic effect and lay stress on tapping the potential within the enterprises in conducting agricultural production." Improving the administration and management in our state farms through developing diversified operations and lowering production costs is precisely aimed at tapping the potential within our state farms, making full use of their resources, saving on expenses and achieving a relatively high economic effect. This is the key task in reorganizing our state farms.

SHANDONG PEASANTS PURCHASE MORE FARM MACHINERY

[Text] Jinan, April 24 (XINHUA) -- People's communes and individual peasants in Shandong, one of China's major grain-producing provinces, have purchased more machines and farm equipment, according to an official of the provincial agricultural commission.

Production output, the collective accumulative funds and the income of the peasants in Shandong have gone up significantly since 1979, when new rural policies were adopted.

At the end of 1981, the province had farm machines with a total power capacity of 20.77 million horsepower, 40 percent more than in 1978. They included 251,000 tractors, 62 percent more than in 1978, and 560,000 complete tractor-drawn farm implements, an increase of 73 percent over 1978.

In the four prefectures along the lower reach of the Yellow River in Shandong, where agricultural production had made little progress previously, the grain and cotton output went up sharply in the last three years with the implementation of the new policies and the peasants' income and the collective accumulative fund also increased steadily, he said.

The four prefectures spent 300 million yuan on farm machines in three years, an amount equal to the total spent on machinery between (?1950) and 1977. By the end of 1981, these prefectures had 49,000 tractors and 62,000 tractor-drawn farm implements, 58 percent and 88 percent more than in 1978, respectively. The number of farm vehicles, irrigation and drainage equipment and processing machines for farm and sideline products increased sharply, the agricultural official said.

The total grain output of Pingyuan County on the north bank of the Yellow River last year went up 36 percent over 1978 and the total cotton output last year was seven times that of 1978, he said. The annual income of the peasants in the country last year 4.4 times as big as in 1978. Now, much of the major field work is done by machines.

Many peasants have purchased farm machines either individually or jointly. In Liaocheng County, Shandong Province, over 7,800 households pooled their funds in purchasing 324 tractors and 1,156 diesel engines.

Despite last year's severe drought, rarely seen in decades, the province reaped a good harvest as a result of the initiatives of the peasants and the increasing use of farm machines, he waid. The total output of grain was 23.13 million tons, and the output of peanuts 1.39 million tons, both close to the 1980 record harvests. The total output of ginned cotton in 1981 was 680,000 tons, an increase of 25 percent over 1980, the agricultural official reported.

SHANGHAI'S CHEN GUODONG VISITS COOPERATIVE SHOPS

OW170220 Shanghai City Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 15 Apr 82

[Excerpt] Some small cooperative stores and shops have emerged in succession along the road near the new (Quyang) village, including a shoe repair store, a restaurant and a barber shop. All these small cooperative stores and shops are run by unemployed young people in the neighborhood.

Not long ago, members of the Shanghai People's Congress toured the new (Quyang) village. Comrade Chen Guodong, first secretary of the Shanghai Municipal CCP Committee, said to a young man who ran a small restaurant: Young son, it is good that you run a cooperative restaurant. Without a restaurant in the neighborhood, the people nearby would have no place to eat breakfast. Chen Guodong also cordially said to the young people: Cooperative undertakings enjoy the same status as the collective undertakings under the system of ownership by the whole people. Your stores and shops serve the people and meet the requirements of the society. If you do not run such stores and shops, it will be inconvenient for the people in the neighborhood to have their shoes and cooking utensils repaired and to eat snacks. As first secretary of the Shanghai Municipal CCP Committee, I, too, serve the people. Undertakings required by the people are undertakings with a bright future. We wish the small cooperative stores and shops in the new (Quyang) village every success and flourishing business.

GUANGDONG VICE GOVERNOR DISCUSSES FOREIGN TRADE

HK280606 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 1311 GMT 27 Apr 82

[Text] Beijing, 27 Apr (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- At the provincial meeting on industrial and communications work which closed on 26 April, Li Jianan, vice governor of Guangdong Province, stressed that the province must actively expand economic activities with foreign countries, based on the principle of adopting concerted measures in handling external affairs.

Li Jianan said that Guangdong Province should make full use of the favorable condition of its relatively extensive foreign exchange to import raw materials and develop the business of processing with imported materials. On the other hand, the province should import advanced technology and advanced equipment to facilitate technical transformation in the existing enterprises. This year, Guangdong Province has decided to allocate some foreign exchange for technical transformation. In order to do a good job in technical transformation, the province plans to hold a special meeting around May and June to study some specific topics.

Li Jianan emphatically called for vigorously promoting four kinds of economic activities, namely, processing with imported materials, processing according to samples provided, assembly of imported component parts and compensation trade. He also disclosed that the Guangdong Provincial People's Government is considering clarifying the following issue -- the domestic sale of electronic products assembled in the province with imported modules which had been approved by the provincial government before the current readjustment policy was introduced. In the future, the import of all key component parts must be in compliance with policy.

GUANGDONG DECISION ON IMPROVING BONUS SYSTEM

HK240222 Guangzhou Guangdong Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 23 Apr 82

[Summary] The provincial government issued a decision on 22 April on straightening out the bonus system and resolutely curbing reckless bonus payments.

The decision said: "In the previous stage, due to failure to control bonus payments according to the regulations, imperfect management methods and lack of strict supervision, many units vied with each other in paying bonuses, and paid out ever greater sums. As a result, the growth of bonus payments in the province has greatly exceeded the growth of labor productivity and profit. Some units violate financial and economic discipline, hold back profit they should turn over to the state, organize their own private money boxes, avoid bank supervision and pay out bonuses at will. Some units arbitrarily raise prices or sell fixed-price products at negotiated prices in pursuit of illegal profits, in order to pay greater bonuses. Some units even go in for speculation, smuggling and peddling contraband, and pay out bonuses from their ill-gotten gains. They thus go as far as violating the law and committing crimes. This state of affairs gravely violates the principle of distribution according to labor, adversely affects worker unity, corrupts the workers' thinking, sabotages the planned economy, undermines socialism and harms the prestige of the party and government among the masses."

The decision stipulated: The level of bonus payments this year must be strictly controlled below an average of 150 yuan per person. The level of payments within a particular enterprise must be calculated according to its performance. Average bonus payments in units subordinate to the provincial authorities must not exceed 300 yuan per person over the entire year. The level in enterprises subordinate to prefectures, municipalities and counties should be fixed by the local government, but it must not exceed that of the enterprises subordinate to the province.

The decision stressed: "Indiscriminate bonus payments to leading cadres and personnel concerned must be repaid in full. In units where reckless bonus payments have reached a serious level, it is necessary to investigate the responsibilities of the leading cadres and personnel concerned, who are to be criticized, publicly censured, or subject to economic sanctions or disciplinary punishment.

"Furniture and other bonuses in kind given to staff by universities and colleges are to be deducted from their salaries after a reasonable price has been calculated for them." All units that indulge in reckless bonus payments this year are to be dealt with as violating law and discipline.

[Text] The Hubei Provincial People's Government has recently issued a circular on approving and transmitting the report made by the provincial public security department on grasping well the straightening out of household registrations.

The circular stressed: Straightening out household registrations is the primary work in preparation for the population census. Low quality in this work, with mistakes being made, will directly affect the standard of the population census. The leaders at all levels must be fully aware of this and must not look upon it as of no importance, so as to avoid adversely affecting the entire work.

The circular pointed out: The third national population census is drawing near. The people's governments at all levels must seize the opportunity to organize forces to conduct an overall check on the work done in the preceding stage in straightening out household registrations. In some places, only a gesture was made in this work, and they failed to carry out reorganizations and set up a system as required, and in some places work has only been partially done in reorganization and setting up a system, without reaching the national unified standard. In these places, efforts should be made in these respects so as to ensure a high quality in straightening out household registrations. Those who work perfunctorily and neglect their duties and even seriously affect the quality of the population census must be investigated and affixed with the responsibility.

On the outstanding problems existing in the current work of straightening out household registrations, the report of the provincial public security department demanded that all localities gain a good grasp of the following work on the basis of the preceding work:

1. The leaders at all levels must fully understand the important relationship between straightening out household registrations and conducting the population census. The work of straightening out household registrations must be checked and accepted by each level strictly according to the five unified standards set by the state. Those who fail to reach the standard must make up for deficiencies. Simply making a gesture in this work is not allowed.

2. The discrepancies in household registrations must be clarified as soon as possible. In resolutely carrying out the stipulations set by the State Council and the provincial people's government, we must seriously solve the problems such as unidentified households, double registrations and registration of children born in violation of planned parenthood.

3. Everything must be done in strict accordance with the household registration ordinances so as to consolidate the results of straightening out household registrations. All districts and all departments must resolutely act in accordance with the household registration ordinances approved by the central authorities and the State Council as well as the relevant regulations put forth by the Ministry of Public Security. No arbitrary alterations are allowed on these ordinances and regulations.

JILIN HOLDS MEETING ON WATER CONSERVATION

SK290711 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 28 Apr 82

[Excerpt] According to our reporters, a provincial conference on water use in urban areas sponsored by the provincial people's government concluded this afternoon in Changchun after a 3-day session. The conference urged localities throughout the province to attend to water conservation as they do coal, electricity and petroleum conservation. Vice Governor Wang Guanchao attended the meeting and spoke.

The conference relayed and studied the speech delivered by Vice Premier Wang Li at the State Council on use of water in urban areas. It also studied the guidelines of the meeting of 15 cities in north China on use of water. Summing up and comparing notes on the province's experience in water conservation in recent years, the conference drafted provisional regulations on urban water conservation for Jilin Province.

The conference noted: The problem of water resources, as with coal, electricity, petroleum and other energy resources, has become a major issue of concern to all countries. It not only affects industry, but also the stability of people's livelihood. Leading cadres at all levels must pay adequate attention to it. The conference pointed out: Over the past 30 years or so, urban water supply service has developed greatly in our province. However, urban water supplies are still inadequate at present. The quality and output of certain products at some plants have often been adversely affected because of water shortaged. Water shortages restrict light industrial development and people's livelihood in some urban centers. Many units do not use water in a planned way and waste great amounts of water. To gradually solve the problem of urban water shortages, the conference urged localities to step up leadership over urban water supply work, vigorously promote the popularization of scientific knowledge, enhance leadership and the masses' understanding of water resources, amplify the responsibility system on management and use of water in urban areas and strictly enforce overall urban planning. Industrial projects which will consume large amounts of water should be delayed until the problem of water shortages is solved.

LIAONING PEOPLE'S CONGRESS SESSION CONCLUDES

Economic Crime Report

SK210612 Shenyang Liaoning Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 20 Apr 82

[Excerpts] According to our reporter (Wang Xiulan), the standing committee of the 5th Liaoning Provincial People's Congress held its 14th meeting on 20 April to hear reports given by Wang Kuncheng, vice chairman of the provincial people's congress, on relaying the guidelines of the 22nd NPC Session and by the provincial people's procuratorate on the status of investigation of economic crimes.

The meeting stressed that there are fewer than 10 days left before the deadline of 1 May set by the NPC Standing Committee for those who have committed economic crimes to voluntarily confess. Therefore, the meeting urged these criminals not to miss this opportunity and to voluntarily surrender to the government as early as possible so as to gain lenient treatment.

In his work report on the status of investigating economic crimes, (Wang Baoshi), deputy procurator of the provincial procuratorial office, noted: Since the beginning of 1982, while earnestly disseminating and implementing the NPC Standing Committee's decision on strictly dealing blows at serious economic crimes, our province has discovered and dealt with a large number of economic criminals. Of 123 major and serious cases that have been placed on file at the provincial people's procuratorate, a significant number deal with corruption, bribery, speculation and profiteering and swindling. Illegal earnings in some cases reach several hundred thousand yuan or over 1 million yuan, causing great economic losses to the state.

In his work report, Deputy Procurator (Wang Baoshi) also stated: Since the issurance of the NPC Standing Committee's decision on strictly dealing blows at serious economic crimes, many economic criminals have voluntarily surrendered to authorities to confess their crimes and hand over their illegal earnings due to the pressure of the law and the influence of the party's policy.

By 10 April, 173 criminals surrendered to the procuratorial offices to confess their crimes of corruption, bribery, speculation and swindling. Some economic criminals on the wanted list have voluntarily surrendered to the police and 105 criminals under arrest have thoroughly confessed their crimes. Generally speaking, the current situation of dealing blows at economic crimes is good. However, the progress of the struggle against economic crimes in various localities is not even. There are still certain cases which remain untouched.

Huang Oudong, chairman of the provincial people's congress, delivered a speech at the meeting.

The 14th meeting of the 5th provincial people's congress standing committee is holding discussions on the speech by Chairman Huang Oudong and the reports given by Vice Chairman Wang Kuncheng and Deputy Procurator (Wang Baoshi).

They also examined and approved the resolution of the provincial people's congress standing committee on strictly dealing blows at serious economic crimes and some personnel changes.

The meeting noted: Before the deadline of 1 May, further efforts should be made to extensively disseminate and explain in depth the decision adopted by the NPC Standing Committee on dealing strict blows at serious economic crimes and waging a fierce political offensive against them so as to enable those who have committed serious economic crimes to recover their bearings and to voluntarily surrender themselves to authorities and to confess their crimes. BOTSWANA SUPPORTS RELOCATION OF SOFTBALL TOURNEY

[Text] Gaborone, Apr 26 (XINHUA) -- "In the interest of the International Softball Federation (ISF) and the upcoming July tournament, we feel that the women's (softball) championship should be shifted away from Taiwan to a less controversial venue," President of the Botswana Softball Association (Andrew Mokoto) said in a letter to ISF Secretary-General D.E. Porter today.

(Andrew Mokoto) said: "In our view, the recent decision by the Chinese Taipei Softball Association (CTSA) not to exercise its right to raise the flag and play the anthem does not resolve the issue. CTSA, we presume, reserves the 'right,' and what guarantee do we have that they will not choose to exercise it at the last minute?"

He stressed: "As an association registered with the Ministry of Home Affairs of the Republic of Botswana, we are expected to operate in harmony with our government on matters affecting the country as a whole. With regard to Taiwan, our government has accepted the principle of one China.... As an association, we endorse this policy. In other words, we feel that the CTSA does not have the 'right' to fly a flag or play an anthem other than that set out in keeping with the IOC resolution."

ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE URGES TRADE TIES WITH TAIWAN

[Article by Huang Shirang [7806 1597 6245], executive council member of the All-China Federation of Industry and Commerce and former chairman of the board of the Yudahua Company: "The Key Cause of Taiwan's Economic Difficulties and the Way To Solve Them"]

[Text] Beijing, 27 Apr (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Every newspaper and every person in Taiwan's economic circles have been talking about Taiwan's economic difficulties and have also been at a loss as to what should be done for a period of time. This kind of predicament has become increasingly serious since the beginning of this year. Even "Minister of Economic Affairs" Chao Yao-tung has said: Taiwan's industry may "go hungry" between June and July this year.

As an old industrialist and businessman and as a man who once maintained close ties with Taiwan's economy, I frequently ponder over two questions: What is the key cause of Taiwan's economic difficulties? What is the way to solve Taiwan's economic difficulties? During my visit to Hong Kong more than a year ago to study commercial affairs there, I discussed the two questions with some of my former old colleagues in the Yudahua Company. Participants in the discussion were of the same view: Taiwan's economic foundation is not a solid one. It is excessively dependent on external factors.

Taiwan is short of major agricultural and industrial raw materials such as petroleum, timber, ores, cotton, wheat and soybeans. Therefore, it is dependent on importing a vast amount of such raw materials. Because of this kind of dependence, when the international supply and price of energy or the international supply and prices of important agricultural and industrial raw materials are unstable, there will be prompt and direct adverse effects on the normal functioning of Taiwan's economy. In particular, due to OPEC's constant increases in the price of oil in recent years and also due to a sharp decrease in the supply of oil from the Middle East caused by the war between Iran and Iraq, the production costs and consumption of those enterprises which are directly or indirectly related with petroleum have been greatly increased, the competitiveness of products has been weakened and a sluggish market has emerged, thus bringing about a continuous decline in the industrial and agricultural growth rate. According to an estimate of the parties concerned in Taiwan, over 20,000 factories in Taiwan went bankrupt last year and Taiwan's gross industrial production index for the first quarter of this year decreased by 0.8 percent as compared with the same period last year. These things are not at all surprising.

In addition, Taiwan's economy primarily depends on processing export commodities, and also excessively depends on foreign capital and foreign trade. When the Western economies were beset with difficulties last year, the West adopted protectionism to ensure its own needs, further reduced investments in foreign countries and further imposed restrictions on imports. These measures were tantamount to choking Taiwan's economy. "When the backer suffers losses, all its dependents also suffer losses; when the backer flourishes, all its dependents also flourish." Taiwan has all along failed to extricate itself from its appendant position. During the first quarter of this year, the volume of Taiwan's imported equipment decreased by 22.5 percent as compared with the same period last year and the volume of Taiwan's imported agricultural and industrial raw materials decreased by 11.5 percent. These figures show that Taiwan's industrialists are low-spirited in promoting production. A public figure in the West said: "When the Western economies sneeze, Taiwan will have a cold." These words are pertinent and also point out the root cause of Taiwan's current economic difficulties.

I have been engaged in industrial and commercial work for dozens of years. I do know that economic development is nothing more than solving problems concerning resources and markets. As far as Taiwan is concerned, it has all along faced problems concerning resources and markets. Only by solving these problems can Taiwan achieve a steady development of its economy. Taiwan's most important task is to extricate itself from its appendant position. In fact, it would not be very difficult to fulfill this task.

The mainland of the motherland covers a vast area and is rich in natural resources. It is a vast market with 1 billion people and is also powerful backing for Taiwan's economic development. Our compatriots on both sides of the Taiwan Straits are Chinese people who have common interests. All Chinese people are pleased to see Taiwan's economic achievements and are also deeply concerned about Taiwan's economic difficulties. As I see it, provided Taiwan establishes trade relations with the mainland, it can readily solve its economic difficulties. It is a pity that there is an absurd argument: If Taiwan's required raw materials are supplied by the mainland, Taiwan will be choked. Therefore, Taiwan would rather go to distant places to buy raw materials at a high price than establish trade relations with the mainland of the motherland.

This is a political prejudice which overlooks the righteousness of the national cause! It is known to all that both the mainland and Taiwan trade with many countries all over the world including those countries whose political convictions are different from theirs. Then why is it that the political prejudice is used only on Chinese territory to stop our own flesh and blood from making normal contacts with one another and from helping to supply one another's needs? If we do a comprehensive survey of Chinese history, we can see that differences of political opinion and national rifts vanished in a flash during the long process of history and that patriotic unification and working together for national prosperity are eternal truth. Differences of political conviction must not be used as an excuse for interfering in the economic needs of existence. Each supplying what the other needs and promoting economic prosperity on the two sides of the Taiwan Straits are completely beneficial to the nation and the people.

The economy of the mainland and the economy of Taiwan have always been integral parts of a whole. According to my experience, my Yudahua Company had normal contacts with Taiwan for dozens of years. Following the victory of the war of resistance against Japan, I sent Mr Shi Fengxiang to cooperate with Shanghai's Dasheng Company in transporting 15,000 spindles to Taiwan for establishing the Daqin cotton mill. Later I also invested $500,000 in the mill. When Mr Shi Fengziang left for Taiwan in 1949, he took with him 11,000 spindles as capital. A piece of land was bought and preparations were made for establishing the Dahua branch factory in Taiwan. At that time, the mainland's textile trade made frequent contacts with its Taiwan counterpart, thus promoting the development of national industry and commerce. Economic exchanges between the mainland and Taiwan were later suspended due to artificially imposed obstacles. This kind of abnormal situation has brought about national economic losses that can never be made up. Now should be the time to break through this kind of barrier. NPC Standing Committee Chairman Ye Jianying last year put forth nine proposals for peaceful reunification of the motherland and expounded once again the specific measures for establishing trade relations. These proposals and measures should be sufficient to win the whole world's trust and to clear up any doubts. I hope that people of Taiwan's industrial and commercial circles will actively help to bring about an agreement at an early date between the two sides on facilitating bilateral trade relations.

I am 86 years old this year and my remaining years are not many. As a patriot, I hope that I can witness the reunification of the motherland and prosperity of the nation in old age. I think that people of Taiwan's industrial and commercial circles will surely make their contributions to the reunification and prosperity of the Chinese nation.

TAIWAN WILL SOON MANUFACTURE LASER RANGE FINDERS

OW290451 Taipei CNA in English 0231 GMT 29 Apr 82

[Text] Taipei, April 29 (CNA) -- Laser rods necessary for laser range finders will soon be manufactured in Taiwan. An expert in the field said Wednesday that domestically manufactured laser range finders can be massproduced commercially in the near future. (Harry Anhai Ling), managing director of H.A. Ling and Associates Inc., said that he and his friends have already formed a company called Advanced Materials Technology Inc., and submitted application for establishment of facilities in Hsinchu science-based industrial park. It is expected to receive authorization soon. (Ling) a Ph. D. in materials science from the University of California (Berkeley), pointed out at a press conference that the laser range finders successfully developed by domestic scientific research organizations have made big strides in national defense technologies. However, the material scientist said the laser rods necessary for making laser range finders still have to be imported from foreign countries. In order to make the national defense industries more independent, (Ling) and some other Chinese scientists in the United States decided to set up a plant in Taiwan to manufacture laser rods. In addition to laser range finders, (Ling) said, other instruments such as laser knieves used in surgical operations and industrial laser cutting machines have to use laser rods. (Ling) added that this kind of sophisticated technology is sure to have a boom in the near future.

Investigation by (Ling)'s company shows there are only two countries in the free world that can manufacture such laser rods, namely the USA and South Africa. If everything goes well with Advanced Materials Technology Inc., the Republic of China is expected to become in a couple of years the third country in the democratic world to produce laser rods.

TAIWAN, SOUTH AFRICA TO EXPAND TRADE RELATIONS

[Text] Taipei, April 29 (CNA) -- A South Africa trade mission, sponsored by the South Africa-Republic of China Chamber of Economic Relations, arrived here Wednesday to promote the expansion of trade relations between the two countries. This is the second trade mission arranged by the chamber to visit the Republic of China. The first took place in October 1980, with the aim of promoting joint SA-ROC ventures. The first mission has already achieved a notable success -- the setting up of the ROC's first diamond factory. It is hoped that more joint ventures will result from the current visit of the second mission.

A spokesman for the chamber said the purpose of this second mission was to seek more joint ventures, especially in the areas where labor resources and raw materials of both countries can be exploited more effectively. Two good examples that fit into this category, the spokesman added, are engineering and boat building. In view of the economic situations in the two countries, the current mission should prove even more successful than the previous one, the spokesman estimated.

The South Africa chamber's counterpart in the Republic of China is called the Republic of China-South Africa Economic Council, which is chaired by (Dr. C.F. Koo.) It has a secretariat at the Association of Chambers of Commerce in Johannesburg with (H.J. (Mack) van der Nerwe) as chairman.

The South African chamber was established to foster trade, financial, and general economic relations with the Republic of China, including communications and transport.

CCP SAID IN HOT PURSUIT OF ECONOMIC CRIMINALS

HK260336 Hong Kong MING PAO in Chinese 25 Apr 82 p 6

[Special dispatch from Beijing: "CCP in Hot Pursuit of Economic Criminals; Party Members and Cadres To Make Three Examinations"]

[Text] After the promulgation of the "resolution on severe punishment of criminals who seriously undermine the economy" adopted by the NPC Standing Committee, the CCP Central Committee immediately issued documents, which were relayed by the party committees to party members and cadres of the whole party, for the purpose of carrying out "three examinations." These documents have stipulated that party members and cadres should examine their political thinking, family economy and overseas relations on their own initiative. In particular, those party members and cadres who have been sent abroad on official business, individually or in groups, should make a thorough examination in written form and present it to the party committees for verification. This is a new step taken by the CCP in dealing blows at economic criminal activities.

The correspondent of this newspaper has learned that last January the CCP Central Committee issued an "emergency circular" announcing the decision on dealing blows at economic criminal activities in accordance with the proposal put forth by Chen Yun. It was reported that after analyzing reports presented by various quarters and reading materials concerned, Chen Yun maintained that the present illegal and criminal activities in the economic field are more serious than in the period of the movement of the "three antis" and "five antis," 30 years ago. After considering the matter for 5 days and nights, he eventually determined to put forth a proposal to the CCP Central Committee on extensively checking cases of smuggling, illegal trade, corruption, accepting bribes and stealing state property, curbing unhealthy tendencies and severely punishing criminals connected with major and important cases. He also suggested clearing out a number of senior cadres who hold power, where criminal evidence against them is irrefutable.

After the start of the drive, the thunder was loud, but the raindrops were small and there was little effect. Therefore, the CCP Central Committee drafted the "resolution on severe punishment of criminals who seriously undermine the economy" and presented it to the NPC Standing Committee for examination and approval. It was taken as a supplement and amendment to some related provisions of the "criminal law."

This "resolution" on severely punishing economic criminals is characterized by three distinctive features: (1) Heavy punishment will be inflicted upon economic criminals. Those who commit particularly serious crimes may be sentenced to life imprisonment or to death (as suggested by Chen Yun). (2) Severe punishment will be meted out to the state cadres and those who violate the laws will be legally accountable. (3) A policy of leniency to those who confess their crimes and severity to those who refuse will be implemented from criminals.

The "resolution" came into force as of 1 April. It also stipulates that those criminals who give themselves up to the government, confess all their crimes and actively inform on their accomplices before 1 May will be dealt with in accordance with the previous laws. Those criminals who fail to give themselves up to the government or confess their crimes will be regarded as continuing to commit crimes. They will be severely treated in accordance with the "resolution."

The focal point of the "three examinations" according to the "resolution" is to check the family economy. For example, families concerned should clearly state where their high-grade consumer goods such as color TV sets, radio recorders, refrigerators and so forth came from. As for overseas relations, if the owners of the above high-grade consumer goods have parents, children or relatives abroad, these overseas relations will be used as reference, material in the process of examination.

Up to now, the "three examinations" are still at the stage of self-examination and have not yet become a political movement which urges everyone to make self-criticism so as to pass the test. Those party members and cadres who sought illicit gains in the past feel that high pressure has been put on them and that the political climate is detrimental to them.

SPECIAL ECONOMIC ZONES EXPECT NO POLICY CHANGE

[Telephoned dispatch from correspondent Kuang Yu: "No Change in China's Special Economic Zone Policies"]

[Text] Shenzhen, 24 Apr -- Shenzhen municipal Mayor Liang Xiang pointed out this afternoon at a forum of the "Shenzhen inspection group of Hong Kong and Macao members of the Guangdong Provincial CPPCC": Although the interior is currently launching a drive against serious criminal activities in the economic field, the running of the Shenzhen special economic zone is an unchanging policy, not just an expediency. Liang Xiang pointed out: The policy on trial-operation of special economic zones has been formulated in accordance with the objective demands for attaining the four modernization in China's new historical period; this policy is not formulated and changed at will.

He also pointed out three aspects: First, the central authorities' trial-operation of special economic zones was not something thought up on the spur of the moment, and the zones cannot be closed down at will. Why is it still necessary to use foreign investment in socialist China? Before the Soviet Union won victory in the October Revolution, it had already proposed using foreign investment and equipment and drawing in advanced technology from abroad; there was a theoretical basis for that. And for China to practice a policy of opening up to the outside world in carrying out its modernization program is a necessary thing determined by factors of international environment. Hence the central authorities have decided to operate Chinese-style special zones and follow a policy of opening up to the outside world. The running of the special zones is an unchanging policy.

Second, what is the aim and the significance in operating a special zone as large as Shenzhen? It is primarily aimed at drawing in foreign investment, advanced technology and advanced management experiences, and creating foreign exchange, and thus serving the four modernizations in these ways.

The most important thing in the Shenzhen special zone is the develop industry and gradually get our commodities onto the international market. Shenzhen special zone borders Hong Kong, and by means of this shop window we have the conditions for learning from abroad, strengthening international exchanges and popularizing experiences into the interior.

The Shenzhen special zone has now been in operation 2 years. It has imported a lot of advanced technology and experiences, but at present not enough has been done to digest and popularize them.

Third, it is necessary to study reforms. The administrative systems for running the special zones need reforming. In the interior, pilot projects have to carry out reforms of the economic system and possess decisionmaking powers in respect of economic returns. The reform of the organs has only just started, and the economic reforms have also begun. He also pointed out, socialist countries have economic independence of various types in operating special zones, including allowing the existence of a capitalist economic component.

Mayor Liang Xiang expressed the hope that the Hong Kong and Macao CPPCC members would greatly step up their contacts and their external propaganda. They can contact the united front departments and the special zone development company. In order to create an excellent foundation for guest businessmen, the Shenzhen special zone is preparing to set up an "industrial services department" to be responsible for various matters for guest businessmen in the zone including the provision of water and power, building design and so on. The guest businessmen will have to pay a fee for these services. He expressed a warm welcome to Chinese and foreign businessmen investing and building plants in the special zone. The current task, he said, is to create excellent conditions for them and not to disappoint the hopes of the compatriots in Hong Kong and Macao. Liang Xiang also revealed at the meeting that Shenzhen is also preparing to establish a university, to step up investment in intelligence.

During their stay in Shenzhen, the Hong Kong and Macao CPPCC members visited the municipal printing plant, Jiangmen Overseas Chinese electronics plant, the Shekou industrial zone, the Jiale furniture plant, the Donghu hotel, the tourist areas at Shatoujiao and Daxiaomeisha, the Xili reservoir, and the Shenzhen reservoir.

They said after their visit, the Shenzhen special zone has developed very fast, more new construction is being completed every day, and the zone is being run better and better. It was not at all easy to achieve all this in 2 years when China had no experience.

The responsible persons concerned attending the forum were Liang Xiang, Zhou Ding, Zhou Qiwu, Liu Jiang, Fang Bao, Lin Jiang, Sima Lu, Cou Erkang, and Yan Xipei. Also present was Zuo Hongtao, vice chairman of the provincial CPPCC and deputy director of the provincial CCP committee's United Front Department.

FURTHER ON VISIT OF LUXEMBOURG PRIME MINISTER

Talks With Zhao

[Text] Beijing, April 29 (XINHUA) -- Zhao Ziyang, premier of the State Council, held talks this afternoon with Pierre Werner, prime minister of the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg, at the Great Hall of the People. Both exchanged views on international issues and bilateral relations.

Discussing Europe, Werner said Luxembourg is worried about an overbearing Soviet policy. He said Luxembourg advocates restoration of the balance of European military strength, ensuring peace and security in Europe. Werner described Luxembourg's foreign policies, saying : "We are willing to expand economic cooperations with developing countries so as to promote the prosperity of all nations."

On the international situation, Zhao Ziyang said it is characterized by tension, turbulence, complexity and an instability caused by contention between the two hegemonist powers. He said China will never change its policy of economic and technical cooperation with European and other countries.

Both expressed satisfaction with the development of friendship between their two countries. Premier Zhao said: "Though China and Luxembourg are geographically separate, we have identical or similar views on many international issues."

Attending for Luxembourg were Colette Flesch, vice prime-minister and foreign minister, and Carlo Ketter, Luxembourg ambassador to China. Taking part for the Chinese were Huang Hua, vice-premier and foreign minister; Zhang Canming, vice-minister of foreign affairs; and Zheng Weizhi, Chinese ambassador to Luxembourg.

[Text] Beijing, April 29 (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang gave a banquet tonight for Pierre Werner, prime minister of the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg, in the Great Hall of the People.

He said: "China desires friendship and cooperation with West European countries based on mutual respect of sovereignty, equality, mutual benefit and, together with them, makes common contribution to world peace."

He said the European people, who have experienced great sufferings in two world wars, are uneasy with the hegemonists' aggression and expansion. The Chinese people also need a peaceful international environment for the nation's socialist modernization. A powerful and united Europe accords with the interests of the European people and meets the needs of world peace as well.

He praised the Luxembourg people for their opposition to hegemony, aggression and expansion, their commitment to safeguard their own country's safety and peace in Europe.

"Both China and Luxembourg oppose hegemonism, advocate the equality of all countries, big or small, and cherish the aspirations for development of cooperation and mutual benefit," he said. "In the turbulent international situation, we are very happy to exchange views with out friends from Luxembourg on issues of common concern. We will learn from the good points of Luxembourg, and further develop economic and technical cooperation and cultural exchanges with your country."

He expressed satisfaction with the various contacts between the two countries since the establishment of diplomatic relations in 1972. He said he is confident the visit by the Luxembourg prime minister and deputy prime-minister will contribute to promotion of friendship.

Werner expressed satisfaction with cooperation between Luxembourg and China in the political, economic, technical and cultural fields. He said he hoped his visit would provide a new chance to strengthen and develop that cooperation.

Despite the differences of the nations' sizes and structures, Werner said, "our two countries share a common aspiration. Luxembourg, like the People's Republic of China, advocates a world equilibrium so all nations, big and small, can live in peace and security without the need to guard against foreign coercion."

"Unfortunately," he said, "we find in our observation of the world that the right of people to self-determination according to their own will has been violated time and again. To solve this we should make efforts to find ways for all countries to regain their right to live peacefully, determine their own destiny."

"The situation in Europe is characterised by an atmosphere of tension and distrust which has existed for many years. The recent proposal by Soviet President Brezhnev for freezing intermediate nuclear forces pending the Geneva negotiations cannot be accepted as it is. The proposal would cement an inequality obviously favorable to the Soviet Union, particularly when taking into account the number of SS-20 missiles already deployed," he said.

The prime minister also noted the unfortunate and prolonged armed conflicts in Afghanistan and Kampuchea. "March 21, 1982 was proclaimed by the European Parliament as the Day of Afghanistan," he said. "World attention has again been focused on the illegal Soviet armed occupation of this unfortunate, traditionally neutral country. This occupation, lasting for more than two years, has violated the fundamental rules of international law." He said the situation in Kampuchea was nearly analagous. "Luxembourg supports the declaration of the international conference on Kampuchea in July, 1981," he said.

Attending the banquet were Huang Hua, vice-premier and minister of foreign affairs; Tang Ke, minister of the metallurgical industry; Zhou Weizhi, acting minister of culture; and Zheng Weizhi, Chinese ambassador to Luxembourg. Carlo Ketter, Luxembourg ambassador to China, was also present.

OPPOSITION TO UK GOVERNMENT ON FALKLANDS NOTED

[Text] London, April 27 (XINHUA) -- Britain's Conservative government appears to be in danger of losing the support of other parties in Parliament over the Falklands (Malvinas) crisis as worries are growing about possible military escalation in the South Atlantic.

Bitter clashes broke out in the House of Commons this afternoon between Prime Minister Mrs. Thatcher and Labour Party leader M. Foot over the government's handling of the dispute. Foot rose six times to demand that Britain must deal with the crisis through the United Nations and should now send the foreign secretary to New York to put its case to the U.N. secretary general and to negotiate there. He also asked Mrs. Thatcher not to make "any steps further in the escalation of these military matters" before Parliament was consulted. But his calls were rejected by Mrs. Thatcher. She said her government was still determined to find a negotiated settlement, but she repeated the warning that "time is fast running out." She insisted on bringing military pressure to bear on the Argentines, saying until the terms of the United Nations resolution are complied with, Britain would continue to "exercise the right to self-defence."

Amid growing speculation about the possible attack on the Falkland Islands, other opposition leaders are also beginning to distance themselves from the government. David Steel, leader of the Liberal Party, made it clear this evening that in the absence of all-party consultations in private, he was not willing to commit his party to "escalating military conflict." The Social Democratic Party has also been pressing for the need to examine peaceful solutions and to involve the United Nations in the mediation.

The tough stand taken by the government is seen here as an indication that military action on the Falkland Islands could be imminent. Early this morning, the Ministry of Defence denied a report in THE TIMES newspaper that a small advance party of British troops had landed on the islands to look for a landing site for the main force, but later it changed the tone by refusing to make any comment. Meanwhile, it said that there were to be no more statements about the operations of the British task force in the South Atlantic until further notice. The implication of such a partial news blackout was proved later by the Argentine foreign minister, who said he had received information that British troops were going to launch the attack in 24 to 48 hours.

PENG ZHEN EXPLAINS DRAFT REVISED CONSTITUTION

[Text] Beijing, 28 Apr (XINHUA) -- Explanations on the draft of the revised Constitution of the People's Republic of China by Peng Zhen, vice chairman of the PRC Constitutional revision committee, at the 23d Session of the Fifth NPC Standing Committee on 22 April 1982:

Entrusted by Chairman Ye Jianying of the national constitutional revision committee, I will now explain the draft of the revised constitution on behalf of the committee.

Since the founding of the PRC, we have had three constitutions, the 1954, 1975 and 1978 constitutions. The 1954 constitution was relatively comprehensive in content, while the 1975 and 1978 constitutions, restricted by the historical conditions at that time, were very undesirable. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee at the end of 1978, the country's situation has greatly changed and developed. The 1978 constitution no longer suits the needs of the current situation. Hence, the constitution has been revised and the system of people's democracy in the draft of the revised constitution has been considerably strengthened and developed as compared with that in the 1954 constitution.

The draft of the revised constituion has been worked out by the national constitutional revision committee in accordance with a resolution of the Third Session of the Fifth NPC on revising the constitution and establishing the committee and after a serious and detailed discussion of opinions gathered from various localities, departments and quarters in the past 1 1/2 years. The draft of the revised constitution is divided into five parts: "Preamble," "General Principles," "Basic Rights and Obligations of Citizens," "The State Structure" and "The National Flag, the National Emblem and the Capital." In addition to the preamble, the draft consists of 140 articles. Here I shall make explanations on the following eight major questions.

1. In the preamble of the draft of the revised constitution, it is affirmed to uphold the four basic principles, that is, to uphold socialism, people's democratic dictatorship, Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought and CCP leadership. This sums up the basic experience our country has gained in modern times, a truth tested in practice. It reflects the law of historical development in our country.

Historic, earth-shaking changes have taken place in our country in the 20th century. There are at least four great events:

The first event is that the 1911 revolution led by Dr Sun Yat-sen brought feudal monarchical rule to an end and founded the Republic of China. Since then it has been not so easy for anyone to be an emperor. However, this revolution, whose fruits were usurped by the reactionary forces, failed to accomplish the historical task of doing away with oppression and exploitation by imperialism and feudalism. Thus, China remained in the status of semi-colonial and semifeudal society.

The second event is that the Chinese people, under the leadership of the CCP headed by Chairman Mao Zedong, overthrew the imperialist, feudalist and bureaucrat-capitalist rule and founded the People's Republic of China. In the past century and more, many advanced Chinese had put forward various plans for national salvation in order to achieve national independence and prosperity. However, all these plans failed. After its founding, the CCP formed, through a protracted revolutionary struggle, Mao Zedong Thought, which integrated the universal principles of Marxism-Leninism with China's concrete conditions and guided the revolution to victory. This brought to an end the situation in which old China had been rent by disunity and trampled upon by others. Since then the Chinese people have taken state power into their hands and become the masters of their country.

The third event is that in our big country in 3 years we rehabilitated our national economy which had been damaged by protracted wars, and continued to accomplish the task of democratic revolution.

In 1956 we successfully completed the socialist transformation of private ownership of the means of production, abolished the system of exploitation which had existed for thousands of years, and established the socialist system.

The fourth event is that tremendous achievements have been made in economic construction. Take the machine building and energy industries for example. In 1950 we were unable to make precision and large machine tools and produced 200,000 dun of petroleum and 43 million dun of coal a year. But now we make motor vehicles, aircraft and guided missiles, have 2.7 million rather complete sets of machine tools and produce 100 million dun of petroleum and 600 million dun of coal a year. The level of economic development in our country is still somewhat lower than that in developed countries, and we have made mistakes and experienced twists and turns in this regard over the past 32 years. However, our rate of economic development is higher than that in the past or in other countries. Our country has basically set up an independent and fairly comprehensive industrial base and economic system that does not depend on foreign countries and is socialist, not capitalist. We have considerably developed agriculture, thus basically solving the problems of food and clothing for 1 billion people. On the basis of the development of industrial and agricultural production, the people's material and cultural life has been considerably improved. Now we have a solid material foundation for building a modern, powerful socialist state.

The preamble of the draft of the revised constitution points out: The victories in China's new democratic revolution and socialist cause have been won by the Chinese people under the leadership of the CCP and under the guidance of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought. The Chinese people will continue to uphold the four basic principles and build China into a highly democratic and civilized socialist country with modern industry, agriculture, national defense and science and technology.

In upholding the four basic principles it is most important to uphold CCP leadership and socialism. Historical facts show us that it would have been impossible to win the victory of the revolution and uphold socialism in our country without the leadership of the CCP armed with Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought. By upholding party leadership, it of course does not mean that the party will make no mistakes. The party made major and minor mistakes in the past, but it corrected its own mistakes. When the mistakes were corrected, bigger, fresh developments were made in the revolutionary cause. In undertaking such a great and new cause as building socialism, the party and the people have been making progress while groping their way. In the future, we may again make mistakes on the road of advance; however, the CCP which works for the maximum interests of the overwhleming majority of the people, in the test through practice and together with the people, can certainly sum up experiences, uphold truth, correct its mistakes, continue to improve its leadership, strengthen its fighting capability and push our cause forward.

In upholding the leadership of the Communist Party, it is most fundamental and important to rely on the party's correct ideological and political leadership; on its correct mass line, principles and policies; on the close ties between the party and the masses; on the party's propositions reflecting the maximum interests of the overwhelming majority of people by repeatedly consulting with the masses and summing up their ideas; and on the exemplary leading role played by large numbers of party members. At the same time the Communist Party will exercise its leadership and carry out its activities within the framework of the constitution and laws.

The draft of the revised constitution stipulates that all powers belong to the people and that the people's congress is the organ through which the people exercise their state power. The opinions of the party and the people can become laws and the will of the state only when they are adopted and decided upon by the National People's Congress or its Standing Committee. The party leads the people in formulating the constitution and laws as well as in abiding by them. The constitution and laws are an expression of the unity of the party's propositions and the people's will.

2. Article 1 of the general principles of the draft of the revised constitution states that our country is "a socialist state of the people's democratic dictatorship led by the working class and based on the alliance of workers and peasants." This is our state system, which determines the nature of our country and the positions of all classes in the state.

The preamble of the draft states that the people's democratic dictatorship is the dictatorship of the proletariat. China's people's democratic dictatorship is a specific form of the dictatorship of the proletariat. China has 800 million peasants. Without a consolidated alliance of workers and peasants, we would not have a broad united front led by the working class, the consolidation of the People's Republic of China would be out of the question, and our socialist state could not be built. The content of the general principles of the present draft definitely reflects our national conditions and the conditions of classes in our country. It can also prevent the distortion and abuse of the dictatorship of the proletariat.

The state system is determined by class relations. The absolute majority of China's intellectuals have belonged to part of the working class, and there are also many intellectuals among the peasants. The alliance of workers and peasants includes intellectuals. If we list intellectuals out of class relations, we are practically regarding them as an independent class and even exclude them from workers and peasants. This runs counter to the actual situation and the inevitable trends of the historical development and will needlessly confuse people ideologically and in practical work.

In our country, the exploiting class has been eliminated as a class, and socialist democracy is being continuously strengthened and perfected. This is the most widespread high degree of democracy enjoyed by the largest number of people in the history of mankind. However, because of factors at home and influence from abroad, class struggle will still exist within a certain range on a long-term basis. Spies, secret agents and new and old counterrevolutionaries are still launching counterrevolutionary activities. Corruption, taking bribes, smuggling, peddling smuggled goods, profiteering, fraud, stealing public property and other serious criminal activities have given expression to class struggle under the new historical condition. We must keep sober-minded and heighten our vigilance to maintain the functions of the dictatorship of the state. The draft states: "The state maintains social order, suppresses treasonable and counterrevolutionary activities, applies sanctions against the crimes of endangering social security and order and sabotaging the socialist economy and other crimes, and punishes and reforms the criminals." This is necessary to the defense and development of socialist democracy.

3. The socialist system is China's fundamental system. In our country, the economy under the ownership by the whole people, the economy under the working masses' collective ownership and the workers' individual economy, have their respective superiority within certain limits. Although their positions and roles are different, they are all indispensable. The draft states: "The basis of the socialist economic system of our country is the socialist system of public ownership of the means of production, that is, the system of ownership by the whole people and the system of the working people's collective ownership. It abolishes the system of exploitation of man by man and implements the principle of 'from each according to his ability, to each according to his work.'" The economy under the ownership by the whole people "is the leading force in the national economy." In the rural area, the economy under the collective ownership is the principal form of the economy. It is superior and progressive because it fits the level of the development of China's agricultural productive forces at the present stage. In the urban area, the economy under the collective ownership also fits some of the handicraft, repair, service and other trades. In China's cities and countryside there still exists some individual economy which cannot be replaced by the economy under the ownership by the whole people or the economy under the collective ownership for a long time to come.

The draft states: "The economy of individual workers in rural and urban areas within the scope stipulated by law is a supplement to the economy under the socialist system of public ownership." "Working people who join rural collective economic organizations have the right to keep private plots and hills, engage in household production and raise animals for personal needs within the scope stipulated by law."

It is necessary to mention that the draft has stated China permits foreign countries' legitimate investments in China and economic cooperation between China and foreign countries. By relying on our own efforts and according to the principle of equality and mutual benefit, our country may use foreign capital and import advanced technology. This is favorable to speeding up socialist modernization.

4. The socialist society has highly developed productive forces as its material foundation. After the socialist transformation of private ownership of the means of production is basically completed, the work focus naturally has to shift toward economic construction. The eighth party congress has defined this policy, but this shift has not been steadfastly materialized in practice since then. The 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee has redefined this strategic policy. The revised draft constitution stipulated that "from now on, the basic task of the Chinese people is to concentrate our efforts in carrying out socialist modernization," and that the state, through various forms of activities, "seeks to constantly raise labor productivity, improve economic results and develop the society's productive forces." Our country has 1 billion people and abundant resources and tremendous potential both in manpower and material.

Provided the people of the whole country are mobilized to put the superiority of the socialist system into play, rely on our own labor, wage arduous struggle and turn human talents and land and other material resources to good account, difficulties can be surmounted and socialist modernization can certainly be realized.

5. While developing a highly material civilization, the development of a highly spiritual civilization remains a long-term task. This task embraces two areas: the first is to carry out ideological and ethical education, and the second is to develop education, science and culture. The purpose is to turn the people of all nationalities throughout the country, men and women and young and old, into people with ideals, ethics and culture who abide by discipline. The revised draft constitution stipulated that "the state promotes the social ethics of loving the motherland, the people's labor, science and socialism, and conducts education on patriotic, collectivist, internationalist and communist ideology and morality." It also stipulated that workers of the state-run enterprises and the collectively-owned economic organizations in the rural and urban areas must conduct their own work with the attitude of the masters of the state, and that all citizens must safeguard state secrets, take care of public property, observe labor discipline, observe public order and respect social ethics and good customs and habits. "Citizens have the obligation to safeguard the security, honor and interests of the motherland. They should not assume conduct harmful to the security, honor and interests on the motherland."

6. Raising the cultural, scientific and technological level of all the people is an essential condition for developing socialist material and spiritual civilization. We must have not only large numbers of experts and scholars with higher level of professional knowledge and specialized techniques but also broad masses of workers and peasants with culture. Lenin once said that no communist society could be built in a country of illiterates. If the broad masses of workers and peasants are deficient in essential cultural knowledge, it would be impossible to realize the four modernizations nor would it help develop socialist democracy and consolidate the socialist system; it would also make it impossible to effectively overcome bureaucracy. The revised draft constitution stipulates that the state systematically develops socialist education, science and culture and operates and encourages social organizations to operate all kinds of schools to eliminate illiteracy, popularize primary education and develop secondary, vocational and higher education.

The state trains the youth, teenagers and children for overall development morally, intellectually and physically. While running regular schools well, "the state develops all kinds of cultural, scientific, technical and professional education for workers, peasants and other laborers;" "The state promotes standard spoken Chinese," strengthens workers' and peasants' education, sparetime education, work-study education, television and broadcasting education, and on-the-job training of workers and staff on rotational basis, and, through various forms of activities, encourages and supports workers, peasants, other laborers and state personnel to take the road of becoming useful persons through self-study. Today, the number of university and middle school graduates is daily increasing and large numbers of intellectuals are working in various enterprises and institutions, rural communes and production teams, social organizations and state organs. This provides conditions for operating all kinds of schools. We should mobilize people with higher cultural level to help those of lower cultural level to study and get them organized so that those who teach and those who learn will make progress together; we should also implement corresponding evaluation and promotion systems. By so doing, we will not only be able to eliminate illiteracy faster but also raise the cultural, scientific and technological level of the whole people within a comparatively short period of time.

7. Concerning the fundamental rights of citizens: The political power under the people's democratic dictatorship and the socialist system ensure that our country provides fundamental rights far more extensive and genuine than under the capitalist system. The revised draft constitution has realistically and clearly defined the fundamental rights of citizens in accordance with the principles of socialist democracy and the socialist legal system. The draft restores the provision in the 1954 constitution that citizens are equal before the law. Our country's law is formulated by the people of the whole country under the leadership of the working class and is the concentrated expression of the will and interests of the broad masses of the people. The people obey the law, which means that they accept the leadership of the working class and obey the people's own will. Equality before the law is a fundamental right of our citizens and also a fundamental principle of our socialist legal system. The draft stipulates that "all state organs and the people's armed forces, all political parties and social organizations, and all enterprises and establishments should obey the constitution and the laws. No organization or individual holds the special privilege of standing above the constitution and the law."

Through the deputies produced by democratic election, the people are exercising their power to organize the government, administer the country, supervise and exercise the right to recall people holding political power at all levels. This is the greatest and most fundamental right of the people. The draft stipulates that citizens, who have reached the age of 18, have the right to vote and stand for election, with the exception of persons deprived of their political rights by law. The number of people who have the right to vote and stand for election has increased daily since the exploitation system perished; according to the 1981 national general election statistics, the number of voters accounted for over 99.9 percent of citizens over 18 years of age. Such an extensive democracy gives expression to the characteristics of socialist democracy in our country.

Citizens of our country enjoy freedom of religious belief. This has been the consistent principle of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought toward the question of religious belief. The draft has restored and developed the related provisions in the 1954 constitution by making them more clearly defined and specific. Citizens in our country, regardless of religious belief and those who do not believe in religion, have one thing in common politically: they are patriotic and support socialism. The belief in this or that religion by some people is a question of social ideology in objective reality that cannot and should not be solved by coercive means. The draft stipulates that "no organ of state, mass organization or person is allowed to force any citizen to believe or not believe in religion. It is impermissible to discriminate against any citizen who believes or does not believe in religion."

While "the state protects legitimate religious activities," "no person is permitted to use religion to conduct counterrevolutionary activities or activities of disrupting social order, harming people's health or obstructing the educational system of the country." At the same time, China's religion should be preached, governed and cultivated by the Chinese religious believers themselves; to this end, the draft stipulates that "religion is not subject to the control of foreign countries."

To effectively protect the citizen's right of person and personal dignity from being infringed upon, the draft stipulates that freedom of person is inviolable. Extralegal detention of citizens or extralegal deprivation or restriction of citizens' freedom of person and the unlawful body search of any citizen is prohibited. Personal dignity is inviolable. Insults or slanders against citizens in any form is prohibited. The homes of citizens are inviolable. Unlawful search into citizens' homes is prohibited.

The citizens of our country have the right to work and rest, the right to receive education, the right to material assistance when they have lost the ability to work and the right to enjoy such benefits as social insurance, social assistance and medical services at public expense. To ensure that these reights are materialized, the draft has provided corresponding basic policies and fundamental measures of the state.

The draft stipulates that "the rights of citizens are inseparable from their duties. Every citizen enjoys rights as prescribed by the constitution and the law and at the same time has the duty to abide by the constitution and the law." There has never been so-called absolute and unrestricted freedom and rights anywhere in the world. While the state protects the legitimate freedom and rights of citizens and prohibits any organization or individual from infringing upon them, it also prohibits any person from utilizing such freedom and rights at any time to engage in counterrevolutionary activities or other criminal activities that undermine social order, production order and work order. The draft stipulated that "in exercising freedom and rights, our citizens should not harm the state, social and collective interests or the legitimate freedom and rights of other citizens."

8. The revised draft constitution stipulates, "state organs implement the principle of democratic centralism." This is the form of government of our country. Our political power is in the hands of the people and controlled by 99.9 percent of the people. The people "manage state affairs, economic and cultural undertakings and social affairs in various forms through various channels," implement a high degree of centralism on the foundation of a high degree of democracy and are truly masters of the desinty of the state, nation and their own. Some of the draft's stipulations concerning state organs have reflected major reforms and new development in the state system.

First, the system of the people's congresses has been strengthened, and the authority of the NPC Standing Committee has been expanded.

The system of the people's congress is the basic political system of our country. The draft stipulates, "the organs through which the people exercise state power are the National People's Congress and the local people's congresses at various levels." The National People's Congress is the supreme organ of state power and exercises unified supreme state power. Due to the relatively large number of NPC deputies, it is inconvenient for the National People's Congress to perform day-to-day work and exercise authority. A reduction in the number of NPC deputies was once considered. But ours is a big country with a large population. It has over 50 nationalities and more than 2,000 counties. The various classes, social strata, nationalities, localities, circles and political parties all have to have an adequate number of deputies to the National People's Congress. Inadequate representation simply will not do. For this reason, the draft has transferred a portion of authority that used to belong to the National People's Congress to its Standing Committee, expanded the NPC Standing Committee's authority, and strengthened its organization so that the National People's Congress will be able to perform its role as the supreme organ of state power.

In fact, the NPC Standing Committee can be regarded as a body of deputies who handle the day-to-day work. Since it represents various quarters and has an adequate number of deputies, the NPC Standing Committee can easily hold meetings frequently. The draft stipulates that the National People's Congress and the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress "exercise the state legislative power and draft laws and decrees;" that a number of special committees are set up to examine and draw up relevant motions; that the chairman, vice chairmen and secretary general of the NPC Standing Committee form the Chairman's Council to handle the NPC Standing Committee's important daily work; and that members of the NPC Standing Committee "should not hold positions in the state administrative, judicial and procuratorial organs." In this way, the majority of the NPC Standing Committee members are in fact full-time workers. As a result of the useful experience gained over the past several years, the draft requires responsible persons of the people's congresses of provinces, autonomous regions and municipalities directly under the central government to attend the NPC Standing Committee meetings. This will increase the NPC Standing Committee's contacts with the localities and masses and enable it to make decisions more suited to the national situation and to meeting national needs.

To bring into fuller play the role of local organs of state power, the draft stipulates that local people's congresses at county level and above set up their own standing committees.

Second, the draft reinstates the post of the chairman of the state to represent it in domestic affairs and relations with foreign countries; nominates a candidate for the premiership at the National People's Congress; and in line with the decisions of the National People's Congress and the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress, promulgates laws, appoints or removes component personnel [zu cheng ren yuan 4809 2052 0086 0765] of the State Council, approves or repeals treaties or important agreements signed with foreign countries, and performs other duties stipulated by the constitution. Practice since the founding of the republic shows that the post of the chairman of the state is indispensable to perfecting the state system and is in line with the customs and wishes of the Chinese people of various nationalities.

Third, in order to raise the administrative work efficiency of the State Council, the draft of the revised constitution clearly stipulates: The State Council adopts the responsibility system with the premier assuming responsibility for the council. The ministries and commissions adopt the responsibility system with the ministers in charge of ministries and those in charge of commissions assuming the responsibilities for these bodies. There will be two to four vice premiers. State councillors will be appointed. The premier, vice premiers, state councillors and the secretary general make up the State Council routine conference. The premier convenes and presides over the State Council routine conference and the State Council plenary conference.

Fourth, the draft of the revised constitution stipulates: The state sets up a Central Military Council to lead the armed forces of the country. The council adopts the system of responsibility of the chairman. The chairman is to be elected and removed by the NPC. The building of the armed forces is still under the control of the State Council. This has clearly defined the army's position in the state structure, and will help strengthen the building of a revolutionized, modernized and regularized armed force, and at the same time is appropriate in view of the present turbulent international situation.

Fifth, on the basis of the principle of bringing into play the initiative from both the central and local levels, the draft of the revised constitution stresses the appropriate division of power between the central and local levels, strengthens the local powers and authority under the unified leadership of the central authorities, and reaffirms that the people's congresses and their standing committees in various provinces, autonomous regions and municipalities directly under the central government have the right to formulate and publish regulations of a local nature.

Ours is a big nation. Some provinces have tens of millions of people while others have nearly 100 million people -- a population equivalent to that of a large or medium-sized nation. The political, economic and cultural developments in various localities are not so balanced. This kind of stipulation would help various localities act according to local conditions and the particular time, and bring into full play their initiative and enthusiasm in speeding up the construction of the whole nation.

Sixth, autonomy in areas inhabited by national minorities will be strengthened. Ours is an unified multinationality country jointly founded by all nationalities. Socialist nationality relations characterized by equality, unity and mutual assistance have already been established among all nationalities. To exercise regional autonomy in areas inhibited by minority nationalities has been our consistent policy. The draft of the revised constitution expands the power of autonomy in national autonomous areas. It stipulates that the chairmen of autonomous regions and heads of autonomous prefectures and counties are to be appointed from among the nationalities that exercise autonomy; that under the guidance of the state plans, the organs of self-government decide for themselves how to manage affairs for local economic construction and manage local affairs in education, science, culture, public health and sports; and that the state should consider the interests of the national autonomous areas. The draft of the revised constitution also stipulates that the state will help the national autonomous areas train a large number of cadres at all levels and various professionals and technical workers from among the local people of various nationalities and assist various national minorities financially, materially and technically in accelerating their economic construction and cultural developments.

Historical facts have proved that only by exercising national autonomy in regions inhabited by various nationalities in a unified nation, will it be possible to resist aggression and the subversive activities from outside and ensure the common prosperity of the whole nation and various nationalities. This conforms with the common interests of the people of all nationalities throughout the country.

Seventh, basic-level political power will be strengthened. Basic-level political power is the foundation of the people's democratic dictatorship and an important cornerstone for all the work of the state. Only when the basic-level political power is truly in the hands of the people, and will be directly elected, supervised and recalled by the people, and at the same time when it accepts the leadership and supervision of the political power at the higher level, will it be possible to build a solid foundation for a high degree of socialist democracy.

In order to strengthen the basic-level political power in the rural areas and improve rural collective economic organizations, the draft of the revised constitution, on the basis of the principle of separating government administration from commune management, stipulates that state power is to be set up at the township level and that people's communes are to be retained as collective economic organizations. This is not only conducive to improving and enhancing political power and strengthening the ties between the government administration and the masses, but is also beneficial to the growth of collective economic organizations. Separating government administration from commune management only means that the functions of political power are separated. The ownership of the enterprises and all other property of the communes, production brigades and teams will remain unchanged. It is necessary to clearly explain this point to the broad masses of peasants and cadres in various communes, brigades and teams so as to avoid unnecessary confusion and causing losses in economy and production. As for how to put this into practice, various localities must proceed from their own actual conditions and act under proper leadership and in a planned and orderly manner. We must not take any hasty action or "demand uniformity in everything."

Neighborhood and village committees are important and effective forms of organization in China over a protracted period. Facts have shown that in places where they are doing a good job, they play a significant role in mediating civil disputes, maintaining social order, handling public affairs and public welfare and promoting public health. They have been included in the draft of the revised constitution, which stipulates that they are mass organizations of self-government. Their relations with the basic-level political authority will be specifically defined by law.

The stipulation of the draft of the revised constitution on the state structure has strengthened and developed the system of people's congresses. At the central level, the chairman of the state, the State Council, the Central Military Council, the Supreme People's Court and the Supreme People's Procuratorate are all installed by the National People's Congress. They have their own division of labor and their own jobs to do. All are responsible to the National People's Congress and its Standing Committee and are supervised by the congress and its Standing Committee. Thus, the responsible division of labor and the effective exercise of state power will help our state withstand the test of an even greater storm than in the past and do an even better job in safeguarding the development of the cause of socialism. At the same time, the division of functions and powers in all organs of state power from the central to the basic levels and administrative organs at all levels will become even more reasonable and clear cut. This is conducive to strictly implementing the responsibility systems in work, raising work efficiency and overcoming bureaucracy. The reform of the economic system and the ongoing restructuring and reform of the economic system as well as other systems of leadership will further improve the entire system of the state and reliably guarantee the smooth development of socialist modernization.

The draft of the revised constitution has already been adopted by the third plenary session of the constitutional revision committee on 21 April and submitted to the NPC Standing Committee for discussion by the people of all nationalities throughout the country. The constitutional revision committee will revise the draft constitution again on the basis of the opinions derived from the nationwide discussion and forward it to the Fifth Session of the Fifth National People's Congress for examination.

HK291150 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 29 Apr 82 pp 1, 2

[Editorial: "Mobilize the Whole People To Discuss the Draft Constitution"]

[Text] "The draft of the revised Constitution of the People's Republic of China" has been promulgated for discussion by the whole people. This is an important event in our people's political life. The people of all nationalities throughout the country must take prompt actions and actively start off the discussion of this draft.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, things which had been thrown into disorder have been set right. Having worked out a series of correct principles and policies, the CCP Central Committee is now actively and smoothly carrying out reforms of the political and economic systems. As our country's political and economic life has undergone great changes and developments, a stable, concerted and lively political situation has emerged. Since the 1978 constitution is no longer applicable to the developing situation, it is necessary to make a comprehensive revision of the constitution for which the necessary conditions are now at hand. This draft of the revised constitution was prepared by the constitutional revision committee according to the resolution adopted at the Third Plenary Session of the Fifth National People's Congress on the revision of the constitution and on the establishment of the constitutional revision committee. It is the fruit of 1 1/2 years of work; it is based on thorough investigations and extensive solicitation of opinions of various central and local departments and various circles; it has been written by using "The Resolution on Certain Problems in the History of the CCP Since the Founding of the People's Republic of China" as the guide; and it is in accord with the experiences gained in socialist revolution and construction in our country in the past 30-odd years.

This draft of the revised constitution is a relatively sound one which conforms with the actual situation in our country.

After it is extensively and thoroughly discussed by the people of all nationalities throughout the country, and after it is examined and approved by the forthcoming Fifth Plenary Session of the Fifth National People's Congress, this draft of the revised constitution will become the fundamental law of the state in the new historical period, and the code of conduct which defines the activities of the people of all nationalities throughout the country, all state organs and the people's armed forces, all political parties and social organizations, and all enterprises and commercial units. It will also serve as the basis for the institutionalization of socialist democracy and the promotion of the socialist legal system in our country. All central and local party, government and army organs, all mass organizations and all urban and rural grassroots units must have a full understanding on the great significance of this discussion of the draft of the revised constitution. And they must put this discussion on their agenda.

Our country is a socialist state of the people's democratic dictatorship led by the working class and based on the alliance of workers and peasants. In this country, all power belongs to the people. Only by mobilizing the whole people to discuss the draft of the revised constitution, extensively soliciting the people's opinions, and revising and supplementing the constitution based on these opinions, can we make the draft of the revised constitution represent more fully the people's will. On the other hand, in taking part in the discussion of the state's fundamental law which is closely related to their own immediate interests, the whole people will be able to strengthen their sense of responsibility as the masters of the country, and thus, they will conscientiously implement and observe the stipulations of the constitution, strengthen their supervision of governments at verious levels, and struggle against all violations of the constitution. Thus, we will be able to guarantee the enforcement of the constitution and its functioning as the fundamental law.

Mobilizing people of all nationalities throughout the country to start a discussion of the draft of the revised constituion also provides very good opportunity to conduct education in socialist democracy and in the legal system among the whole people. To build a modern and powerful socialist country, we must give full play to socialist democracy and perfect the socialist legal system. Only by developing socialist democracy can we arouse the enthusiasm and initiative of the masses of people in carrying out modernization. Only by perfecting the socialist legal system can we guarantee the progress of the country's various tasks in a normal manner and consolidate and carry forward the political situation of stability and unity. Our party has summed up historical experiences since the founding of the PRC. The NPC has taken many legislative measures. The administrative system of the state has also undergone many reforms. The socialist democratic and socialist legal system of our country have embarked on the road of healthy development. The reform of organs and the reform of the political system, the economic system and the leadership system being carried out at present will make the various fundamental systems of our country more complete and more perfect and will ensure the smooth progress of our country along the socialist road and the smooth progress of socialist modernization. The draft of the revised constitution now the subject of discussion by the whole people has incorporated the results of various reforms since the third plenary session and has affirmed the direction of continuing the revolution. Given this situation, after the discussion of the draft of the revised constitution by the whole people, the people's awareness of the great importance of socialist democracy and their concept of the legal system will be further raised. In the draft of the revised constitution, it is stipulated: "The people have the right to manage state affairs, economic and cultural undertakings and social affairs in various forms through channels according to law." Discussing the draft of the revised constitution is a form and a channel for the people to exercise this right.

After the discussion process, the whole people will further understand that our constitution and law are formulated by the whole people -- led by the working class -- through their own organ of power -- the National People's Congress. They are a concentrated embodiment of the will and interests of the masses of people. No organization nor individual can claim privileges beyond the constitution and the law. It can be said that the current discussion of the draft of the revised constitution by the whole people is not only an exercise of the rights of the people as the masters but also a very good opportunity for the people to study socialist democracy and the legal system. This will lay a good foundation for the further development of socialist democracy and the strengthening of the socialist legal system. Therefore, properly handling this discussion effort is of great significance.

Party committees at all levels and the comrades of the whole party must pay great attention to the discussion of the draft of the revised constitution and realistically strengthen leadership and take the lead in the discussion. Party committees must act in close cooperation with various quarters concerned and arouse and organize propaganda departments and the media to explain in an easy-to-understand language the fundamental spirit and content of the draft of the revised constitution, its guiding ideology and important stipulations about citizens' fundamental rights and obligations, the state's political and economic systems, and so forth. What should be known about the constitution must be made known to every household and every individual. Discussion must be marked by the full development of democracy, so that people of all nationalities and in all circles can air their views and speak their minds. This discussion must go on for 4 months. All areas and all units should keep reality in mind and make satisfactory arrangements for this task. This discussion must be lined with other tasks, so that all tasks can stimulate each other.

The discussion of the draft of the revised constitution by the whole people is a lively embodiment of socialist democracy. We believe that through this discussion, we can smoothly accomplish the task of revising the constitution and bring our constitution in line with the demands of the new historical period and guide our people in wresting a new victory in socialist construction!

JIEFANGJUN BAO, OTHER PAPERS VIEW CONSTITUTION

OW300333 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1148 GMT 29 Apr 82

[Excerpts] Beijing, 29 Apr (XINHUA) -- JIEFANGJUN BAO, ZHONGGUO QINGNIAN BAO, [CHINA YOUTH NEWS], ZHONGGUO NONGMIN BAO [CHINA PEASANT NEWS] and ZHONGGUO CAIMAO BAO [CHINA FINANCE AND TRADE] today carried either an editorial or a commentator's article on the publication of the draft of the revised Constitution of the People's Republic of China for discussion by the people throughout the country.

The JIEFANGJUN BAO editorial was entitled "Earnestly Study and Discuss the Draft of the Revised Constitution." It says: The constitution is closely related to every revolutionary soldier and to army building as a whole. All PLA cadres and fighters, like the people throughout the country, should conscientiously discuss the draft of the revised constitution as called for by the NPC Standing Committee. They should clearly understand the significance of revising the constitution and the guiding ideology and grasp the basic contents of the draft of the revised constitution, especially the main spirit embodied in the articles of the draft concerning the army. At the same time they should make suggestions for revision on the basis of their study and comprehension of the draft. The leading organs at all levels throughout the army should attach prime importance to discussing the draft of the revised constitution and make proper arrangements for organizing discussion sessions so that the discussion will serve its purposes. PLA companies and other units at the grassroots level should see to it that the lecture and discussion sessions enable the cadres and fighters to understand the nature of our socialist country and its tasks and to understand every individual citizen's obligations in safeguarding the motherland's security, honor and interests so that they will be able to heighten their socialist and patriotic awareness and be worthy of the glorious title of people's fighter.

The ZHONGGUO QINGNIAN BAO editorial was entitled: "Young People, Be Enthusiastic in Taking Part in Sessions To Discuss the Draft of the Revised Constitution." It urged youth of all nationalities to fervently and actively attend sessions to study the draft of the revised constitution in earnest so that they will become a new generation of people who understand, observe and safeguard the constitution.

The editorial called on CYL organizations at various levels to attach prime importance to directing young people to participate in the nationwide discussion. It pointed out: Discussing the draft of the revised constitution provides an excellent opportunity to carry out ideological, political and patriotic education among CYL members and other young people. Under the leadership of the party committee, the CYL organizations at various levels should act according to the special traits of young people and arouse their enthusiasm for discussion and study in various lively forms so that the fundamental spirit of the draft of the revised constitution will be understood by everyone, be everyone's concern and will guide everyone's actions.

ZHONGGUO NONGMIN BAO pointed out in its commentator's article: The stipulations in the draft of the revised constitution regarding this country's political and economic systems and its citizen's rights and obligations (such as the worker-peasant alliance, the rural economic system, rural land ownership, popularization of primary education, the principle of separating government administration and commune management and so on) are matters of great importance directly related to agricultural modernization in the country and the immediate interests of the peasants. The broad masses of rural cadres and people should actively participate in the discussion, speak without any inhibitions and fully express their opinions in the attitude that they are the masters of the country.

ZHONGGUO CAIMAO BAO in its editorial urged cadres and workers of the financial and trade departments to join the people of the country in doing a good job of revising the basic law of the country so as to contribute to the formulation of a still better constitution for the country.

XINHUA CARRIES 1981 NATIONAL ECONOMIC REPORT

[Text] Beijing, April 29 (XINHUA) -- A communique on the fulfillment on China's national economic plan for 1981 was issued here today by the State Statistical Bureau. Full text follows:

The people of all nationalities in China, under the leadership of the Chinese Communist Party and the people's government, worked hard and made remarkable results in 1981 in implementing the policy of readjusting the national economy. China's revenue and expenditure were basically balanced, and prices, in general, stable. The year 1981 also saw a further improvement in the ratio between major sectors of the national economy and construction. Total value of annual industrial and agricultural output, calculated with 1980 constant prices as the base, was 749,000 million yuan, up 4.5 percent compared with 1980. The preliminary estimate of national income is 388,000 million yuan which, calculated with 1980 constant prices as the base, was up three percent. (Note: The 1980 national income has been adjusted from 363,000 million yuan to 366,000 million yuan). Domestic and international trade grew and people's living standards were improved along with the development of production. Nevertheless, the balance achieved between revenue and expenditure was not consolidated and, while efforts were made to basically stabilize prices, prices for some commodities rose. The economic results of most departments and enterprises were not satisfactory and energy production dropped slightly. The increase in consumer goods failed to keep pace with that in social purchasing power.

Fulfillment of plans by various departments of the national economy is as follows:

1. Agriculture

In 1981, many parts of the country were hit by serious floods and drought. Despite this, China achieved good harvests. Credit goes to the fact that the correct policies of the Communist Party and government were seriously implemented, the job responsibility system in various forms was instituted and improved and efforts were made to diversify the rural economy, thus raising peasant enthusiasm for production. Total value of agricultural output, calculated at 1980 constant prices, was 231,200 million yuan, 1.8 percent above the 1981 annual plan and 5.7 percent over the 1980 figure. (Note: The total value of agricultural output in 1981, calculated at 1970 constant prices, was 172,000 million yuan.) Of this, the total output value of farm crops was 148,900 million yuan, 5.3 percent over 1980; the corresponding figure for forestry was 9,500 million yuan, up four percent; for animal husbandry and fishery, 39,700 million yuan, up six percent; and for rural sideline production, 33,100 million yuan, up 6.8 percent (of this, the total value of output of industries run by production brigades and teams was 27,800 million yuan, 9.3 percent over 1980). As regards the output of the eight major farm products, the total output of grain exceeded that of 1980, sharp increases were again registered in the output of cotton and oil-bearing seeds on top of three consecutive years of growth, and production quotas for sugarcane, beetroot, jute (ambary hemp included), silkworm cocoons and tea were met or overfulfilled. The year also saw a fairly fast expansion of sidelines run by rural communes and their subdivisions and domestic sidelines of commune members.

Output of the major farm products follows:

	1981 Output	Percentage Increase Over 1980
Grain (1980 grain output adjusted from 318.22 million tons to 320.52 million tons)	325,020,000 tons	1.4
Of which:
Paddy	143,205,000 tons	2.8
Wheat	58,490,000 tons	8.0
Tubers (counted on the basis of 5 kilograms of tubers equivalent to one kilogram of grain)	24,995,000 tons	-10.2
Soybeans	9,245,000 tons	17.3
Cotton	2,968,000 tons	9.6

Oil-bearing crops	10,205,000 tons	32.7
Of which:
Peanuts	3,826,000 tons	6.3
Rapeseed	4,065,000 tons	70.5
Sesame	510,000 tons	96.9
Sugarcane	29,668,000 tons	30.1
Beetroot	6,360,000 tons	0.9
Jute, ambary hemp	1,260,000 tons	14.8
Silkworm cocoons	311,000 tons	-4.6
Tea	343,000 tons	12.8

A total of 4,110,000 hectares were afforested, 9.7 percent less than in 1980, but the survival rate of saplings was better. Production of some forest products increased by big margins, including rubber, 128,000 tons, 13.3 percent over 1980; raw lacquer, 2,950 tons, up 20.4 percent; tung oil tree seeds, 360,000 tons, up 18.8 percent; and oil tea seeds, 654,000 tons, up 33.5 percent. The output of walnuts and chestnuts dropped. In some areas, indiscriminate felling of trees continued.

In 1981, increases were registered in the output of major animal products on the basis of the sharp increases in 1980, but the number of hogs in stock at the end of 1981 and the number of hogs slaughtered dropped.

Output of major animal products and the number of livestock follow:

	1981 Output	Percentage Increase Over 1980
Total output of pork, beef and mutton	12,609,000 tons	4.6
Of which:
Pork	11,884,000 tons	4.8
Beef	249,000 tons	-7.4
Mutton	476,000 tons	7.0
Milk	1,291,000 tons	13.1
Sheep wool	189,000 tons	7.4
Hogs slaughtered	194,947,000 head	-1.8
Hogs in stock at year end	293,702,000 head	-3.8
Large animals at year end	97,641,000 head	2.5
Sheep and goats at year end	187,730,000 head	0.2

The total output of aquatic products was 4,605,000 tons, 12.3 percent over plan and 2.4 percent over the 1980 figure. Output of fresh water products was up 10.8 percent; and that of marine products, however, dropped 0.8 percent due to cntrol imposed on fishing to protect offshore aquatic resources.

State farms under the authority of land reclamation made fairly big increases in the output of major industrial crops and animal products, but the output of grain by these farms dropped, as the harvest in Heilongjiang Province was affected by serious waterlogging. Their output of cotton was 25.4 percent over 1980, oilbearing crops, 28.5 percent up, and sugarbearing crops, 23.5 percent up. The output of pork, beef and mutton was up 10.3 percent and milk, up 8.2 percent. These state farms realized profits exceeding 200 million yuan.

By the end of 1981, China had 792,000 large and medium-sized farm tractors, 47,000 more than the previous year. The number of small-capacity and walking tractors reached 2,037,000, an increase of 163,000. Lorries for farm use numbered 175,000, an increase of 40,000. The corresponding figure for total horsepower of irrigation, drainage and power equipment was 74,983,000, an increase of 338,000 horsepower over 1980. The country had a fairly great increase in the number of small farm machines and implements. A total of 13,349,000 tons of chemical fertilizer was applied in 1981, an increase of 5.2 percent over the previous year. China's countryside used 37,000 million kilowatt-hours of electricity, up 15.3 percent.

Fairly accurate forecasts were made in good time by meteorological departments of drought, flood and other natural calamities, which occurred on a scale rarely seen since the founding of new China in 1949, and especially of the extraordinarily great flood peaks in the upper sections of the Yangtze and Yellow Rivers.

2. Industry

There was a sustained increase in industrial production in the course of readjustment in 1981. Total annual output value of industry, calculated in 1980 constant prices, was 517,800 million yuan, 1.7 percent above plan and 4.1 percent over 1980. (Note: Total output value of industry in 1981, calculated in 1970 constant prices, was 519,900 million yuan, of which the total output value of light industry was 267,500 million yuan, and that of heavy industry was 252,400 million yuan. Output targets were reached or surpassed for 87 of the 100 major industrial products, including cotton yarn, cotton cloth, sugar, salt, bicycles, sewing machines, wristwatches, television sets, coal, crude oil, electricity, steel, rolled steel, sulphuric acid, soda ash, caustic soda and chemical fertilizers. Targets for synthetic fatty acid, asbestos and 11 other products were not reached.

With the further improvement of the internal structures of industry and active expansion of the production of daily-use consumer goods, light industrial production continued to maintain a fairly high rate of growth. Total annual light industrial output value, calculated in 1980 constant prices, was 266,300 million yuan, 14.1 percent over 1980. The proportion of the output value of light industry in total industrial output value increased from 46.9 percent in 1980 to 51.4 percent in 1981. Output targets were reached or surpassed for 31 of the 35 major light industrial products which are under state plan, and the output of 21 of them was more than in 1980 by a big margin. The output of high-grade products and famous brand quality products increased with new varieties and designs added.

Output of major light industrial products follow:

The state in 1981 lowered the output of many heavy industrial products in a planned way to readjust the proportional relations in industry and, calculated in 1980 constant prices, total annual output value of heavy industry was 251,500 million yuan, 4.7 percent less than in 1980. Output targets were reached or surpassed for 56 of the 65 major heavy industrial products under state plan, while targets for nine products were not fulfilled; compared with 1980, the output of 24 products increased and 41 decreased, mostly as set in the state plan. New achievements were made in heavy industry in changing its service orientation, reducing the production of some overstocked products, and increasing the output of products urgently needed for daily life and products for export. For example, the output of the daily-use electrical appliances and specialized equipment manufactured for light industry by factories under the First Ministry of Machine Building rose 53 percent over 1980; the iron and steel and rubber industries registered a fairly big increase in the output of strip steel, sheet steel, tires for carts and bicycles and other products urgently needed in the market; the total exports of heavy industrial products also rose considerably over 1980. Heavy industry made new contributions to the technological transformation of the national economy and the modernization of national defence.

Output of major heavy industrial products follows:

	1981 Output	Percentage Increase over 1980
Coal	620 million tons	0
Crude oil	101.22 million tons	-4.5

As a result of restructuring the mix of industrial products, energy consumption for each 100 million yuan of total industrial output value in 1981 was six percent less than in 1980. However, the economic results of industrial production as a whole were relatively poor.

The output value of industrial enterprises owned by the whole people, calculated in 1980 constant prices, was 11,863 yuan per worker and staff member, 1.8 percent lower than the previous year. Thirty-two of the 65 major quality indices for industrial products dipped, while 48 of the 101 indices for average consumption of material rose; total cost of comparable products went up one percent and the amount of profit turned over to the state was down by 8.5 percent. About 27.1 percent of industrial enterprises still suffered losses to varying degrees. Owing to the blind pursuit by some enterprises of output value and speed in disregard of quality of products and market demand, the output of some products that should be limited under the plan also increased blindly, so that there is warehouse overstocking.

3. Capital Construction

A number of projects for which there were no proper conditions for construction were cancelled or suspended in 1981. As a result, the scale of capital construction was curtailed to some extent, while the rate of availability of fixed assets increased. The fixed assets turned over to state-owned units in 1981 through capital construction were valued at 37,100 million yuan, a 13.1 percent decrease compared with 1980. But the rate of availability of such assets reached 86.7 percent, a 7.5 percent increase over 1980. Buildings completed in 1981 totalled 126 million square meters in floor space, 13.1 percent less than in 1980.

Of the planning targets for increasing the production capacity for 27 major products, those for 24 products were met or topped, with the exception of sulphuric acid, plastics and logs. Newly added production capacity accounted for by capital construction consisted of facilities for producing 13.73 million tons of coal, 5.19 million tons of crude oil, 620 million cubic meters of natural gas, 2.64 million kilowatts of power-generating capacity, 67,000 tons of chemical fibers, 510,000 cotton spindles, 174,000 tons of sugar, 324,000 tons of salt, 44,000 tons of machine-made paper and paperboard, 4.75 million tons of iron ore, 323,000 tons of chemical fertilizer, 1.54 million tons of cement and 297,000 cubic meters of logs. The cargo-handling capacity at newly built or expanded sea ports was increased by 2.36 million tons.

The 79 big and medium-sized projects completed and put into operation in 1981 include the Liaoyang petro-chemical fiber plant, the Changshou vinylon plant in Sichuan Province, the Nanjing alkyl benzene plant, the Shentou power plant in Shuoxian County, Shanxi Province, and a 500,000-volt power transmission line from Pingdingshan to Kuhan. The 181 single-item projects that were completed and put into operation include two power-generating units at the Gezhouba hydroelectric power station in Hubei Province, each with a capacity of 170,000 kilowatts; the Xinglongzhuang coal mine in the Xanzhou coal mining area in Shandong Province, with an annual production capacity of three million tons; and a container wharf at Tianjin harbor, with an annual handling capacity of one million tons. Three fewer big and medium-sized projects and 35 fewer single-item projects were completed and put into operation in 1981 than in 1980. The ratio that went into operation of big and medium-sized projects to the total number under construction rose from 8.3 percent in 1980 to 10.6 percent.

Total investment in capital construction in state-owned units in 1981 was 42,800 million yuan, 11,100 million yuan less than in 1980 or a 20.6 percent decrease. Of this total, the investment covered by the national budget was 20,800 million yuan, 7,300 million yuan less than in 1980 or a decrease of 26 percent. One hundred and fifty-one big and medium-sized projects were cancelled or suspended. The number of big and medium-sized projects under construction was 663 by the end of the year, 241 less than in 1980.

The investment orientation was readjusted in 1981. Of the total investment in capital construction, investment for productive use was 25,200 million yuan, and the proportion dropped from 66.3 percent in 1980 to 58.9 percent. The investment in nonproductive construction to meet the needs of the people's material and cultural life was 17,600 million yuan, the proportion rising from 33.7 percent in 1980 to 41.1 percent, of which, investment in housing constuction went up from 20 percent in 1980 to 25.5 percent. Investment in construction of light and textile industries was 4,260 million yuan, the proportion rising from 9.1 percent in 1980 to 10 percent.

The 1981 investment in capital construction covered by the national budget was basically brought under control. But that not covered exceeded the plan to a fairly large extent, and blind and duplicate construction was not eliminated.

Efforts were made to intensify geological surveys of energy resources, non-ferrous and precious metals and non-metallic minerals, hydrogeological surveys and regional geological surveys of mineral resources. The service fields of geological work were expanded step by step. A number of oil and gas fields and metallic and non-metallic mineral-bearing areas were discovered. General seismic surveys were completed in part of the South China Sea and south Yellow Sea areas. A number of exploratory oil wells in the Bohai Sea and the Beibu Gulf yielded oil, showing good prospects. Through the first exploratory oil well in a general survey of the East China Sea, high pressure natural gas zones and oil-bearing sandstones were discovered. Newly verified reserves of 12 major minerals, including oil, coal, iron, copper, gold and phosphorus, met or topped state targets. Verified deposits of iron ore increased by 1,040 million tons, and coal by 10,310 million tons. Additional reserves were verified for 57 kinds of minerals, including nickel, tungsten, molybdenum, mercury, platinum, silver, heavy rare-earths, blue asbestos, diamonds, kaolin, clay for making ceramics, limestone for making cement, marble and stones for building materials. Total drilling footage for geological prospecting was 8,843,000 meters. But geological work still could not meet the requirements of the modernization program, and the management of geological prospecting should be improved.

4. Transport, Posts and Tele-Communications

At the end of 1981, China's total railway operating mileage reached 50,000 kilometers; total mileage of highways was 897,000 kilometers, an increase over 1980 of 9,000 kilometers; total civil aviation route mileage, including sections repeated in different routes, reached 348,000 kilometers, 37,000 kilometers more than 1980; total mileage of inland river navigation was 109,000 kilometers.

Total freight volume handled by various means of transportation reached 1,214,300 million ton-kilometers, up one percent over 1980. Of this, the volume of railway freight transport was 571,200 million ton-kilometers, 0.1 percent lower than the previous year; the volume of waterway cargo transport was 515,000 million ton-kilometers, an increase of 1.9 percent; the volume of road freight transport was 78,000 million ton-kilometers, an increase of 2.1 percent; the volume of air freight was 170 million ton-kilometers, an increase of 21.4 percent; the volume of oil and gas carried through pipelines was 49,900 ton-kolometers, an increase of 1.6 percent. The volume of cargo handled at major sea ports was 219.31 millon tons, an increase of 0.9 percent.

The volume of passenger transportation by all means reached 250,000 million person-kilometers, a 9.6 percent increase over 1980. Railways accounted for 147,300 million person-kilometers, an increase of 6.5 percent; waterways, 13,800 million person-kilometers, seven percent more; roads, 83,900 million person-kilometers, a 15.1 percent increase; air, 5,000 million person-kilometers, up 25 percent.

Post and tele-communications transactions for the whole country were 1,952 million yuan in terms of 1980 constant prices, an increase of 5.1 percent over 1980. There was a 2.3 percent increase for letters, a 10.3 percent increase for the distribution of newspapers and magazines, a 9.4 percent increase for telegrams and a three percent increase for long-distance calls. There was also a notable increase in international correspondence.

Fuel consumption throughout the country by steam and diesel locomotives per 10,000 ton-kilometers decreased 1.4 percent and 2.6 percent respectively, compared with 1980.

Transport and communications departments improved their passenger service and the railways added 64 round-trip runs to their passenger train schedule in 1981. At the same time, new railways such as those between Beijing and Tongliao and between Zhicheng and Liuzhou as well as the Jinan transport and communications hub were used to divert the flow of freight, relieving the pressure on the Beijing-Shanhaiguan, Beijing-Guangzhou, Tianjin-Pukou (Nanjing) and other trunk railways. Railway transportation of coal was better organized and coal from Shanxi Province to other places reached 81.5 million tons, an increase of 12.7 percent over 1980. At present, the situation in railway transport and main sea ports is still tight and there has not been a fundamental change in the wastefulness arising from a lack of unified management in road transport.

5. Internal Trade

The total value of commodities purchased by state-owned commercial departments reached 246,900 million yuan in 1981, topping the previous year by 9.1 percent. This included 76,470 million yuan worth of farm produce and sideline products, an increase of 13 percent (or 6.7 percent if the rise of purchasing prices is excluded), and 168,510 million yuan worth of manufactured goods, an increase of 7.5 percent over 1980. Purchases of most of the major manufactured goods and farm produce surpassed those of 1980. Among them, the purchase of grain rose by 10.8 percent, edible oil 43.5 percent, cotton 10.1 percent, tobacco 78.7 percent, jute and ambary hemp 12.1 percent, sugar 14.8 percent, cloth 2.8 percent, knitted underwear 17.4 percent, and bicycles, radios, sewing machines, wrist watches, television sets and cassette recorders 23 to 90 percent. But purchases by state-owned commercial departments of hogs and eggs declined by 6.7 percent and 7.6 percent. This was because policies on pig raising were not carried out well in some places, eggs were not purchased in good time and the amount of pork and eggs consumed by the peasants themselves and sold by them on rural market all increased.

Total value of retail sales was 235,000 million yuan, a 9.8 percent increase over 1980, or a 7.2 percent increase if the rise in retail prices is excluded. Compared with the 1980 retail sales of main consumer goods, the sale of grain went up 11.1 percent, edible oil 36.9 percent, pork 1 percent, sugar 8.7 percent, cloth 4.2 percent, knitted underwear 11.3 percent, woolen fabrics 19.5 percent, radios 13 percent, wrist watches 14.1 percent, bicycles 33.4 percent, sewing machines 39.3 percent, cassette recorders 42.2 percent and television sets 74.5 percent.

By the end of 1981, state-owened commercial departments had 10.8 percent more goods in stock than at the end of 1980.

Supplies for the domestic market in 1981 continued to increase, but still could not keep pace with the growth of social purchasing power. Some famous brand quality consumer goods still fell short of the demand and there was a shortage in the supply of building materials for the rural areas. On the other hand, some varieties and specifications were not popular with customers and high-priced products of inferior quality found no ready market and were overstocked.

The government again raised the state purchasing prices of some farm produce in 1981, including soybeans, tobacco and vegetables. In addition, more farm produce was purchased at negotiated prices and at prices for the surplus above purchase quota. As a result, the total purchasing price index for farm produce and sideline products went up 5.9 percent over the previous year.

Following the raising of the price of cigarettes and alcoholic drinks in November 1981, there was a considerable increase in the price of a number of commodities and, as a result, the overall level of retail prices in December was 4.2 percent over the same period of 1980. Calculated according to the average prices for the year, the overall level of retail prices (including state listed prices, negotiated prices and prices on the rural market) was 2.4 percent over 1980. There was a 2.7 percent increase in cities and a 2.1 percent increase in rural areas; a 2.6 percent increast in comsumer goods retail prices and a 1.7 percent increase in the retail prices of means of production for rural use.

As for retail price fluctuations of consumer goods, the price of food as a whole rose 3.7 percent (4.1 percent for non-staple foodstuffs, including a 10.6 percent increase for vegetable prices), daily necessities 1.3 percent, commodities for cultural and recreational activities 0.4 percent, pharmaceuticals 0.2 percent and fuel 0.6 percent. But the price of clothing dropped 0.4 percent.

The rise in retail prices increased the expenditures of the consumer. In addition, some enterprises sold shoddy goods for quality goods, in insufficient quantities or at higher prices in disguised forms. This also increased the burden on the consumer.

6. Foreign Trade, Tourism

Customs statistics give the 1981 total value of imports and exports as 73,530 million yuan, a 29 percent increase over the 57,000 million yuan in 1980, or an 11 percent rise if price fluctuations are excluded. The total export value was 36,760 million yuan, a 35.5 percent increase over the 27,120 million yuan in the previous year, or an 18 percent if price fluctuations are excluded. Total import value was 36,770 million yuan, a 23.1 percent increase over the 29,880 million yuan in 1980, or a 5-percent increase if price fluctuations are excluded. Value of imports was 10 million yuan over exports.

The proportion of manufactured goods (including products of the machinery, light and textile, chemical and metal industries) exported rose of 53.4 percent from 49.7 percent in 1980; and the proportion of primary products (such as farm produce, food, minerals and raw materials for the light and textile industries) dropped from 50.3 percent in 1980 to 46.6 percent. Of the imported commodities, the proportion of manufactured goods fell from 65.1 percent in 1980 to 63.4 percent and the proportion of primary products rose from 34.9 percent in 1980 to 36.6 percent.

The total number of foreigners, Overseas Chinese and Chinese compatriots from Hong Kong and Macao coming on tours and visits and for trade, sports, scientific and cultural exchanges reached 7,767,000, a 36.2 percent increase over the previous year. Included were 675,000 foreign tourists, a 27.6 percent rise over 1980. Annual foreign exchange income was 1,380 million yuan renminbi, 49.7 percent over 1980.

7. Science, Technology, Education and Culture

In 1981, there were 5,714,000 scientists and technicians of natural sciences working in state-owned units, 418,000 more than in 1980. The number of major research results in science and technology came to 3,100 items, including 120 creations and inventions approved by the state.

Schools at all levels continued to carry out the principle of readjustment. Compared with the previous year, the number of students in institutions of higher learning, agricultural middle schools, secondary vocational schools and institutions of secondary education for workers and peasants showed some increases, while in other schools the number of students was reduced. Enrollment in institutions of higher learning was 1.28 million, or 136,000 more than the previous year; in secondary technical schools, 1,069,000, or 174,000 less; in regular secondary schools, 48,596,000, a drop of 6,485,000; in agricultural middle schools and secondary vocational schools, 481,000, an addition of 27,000; in technical schools, 670,000 a decline of 10,000; in primary schools, 143,330,000, a drop of 2,940,000; in kindergarten [word indistinct] 10,562,000, a drop of 946,000. Enrollment in institutions of higher learning for workers and peasants (including T.V. colleges, factory-run colleges, spare-time colleges and correspondence schools) was 1,346,000, or 208,000 less than the previous year. The enrollment in secondary schools for workers and peasants (including technical schools for workers, staff members and peasants, and spare-time secondary schools) was 8,207,000, a rise of 160,000.

Cultural undertakings including literature, the theater, films, ballad-singing, music, the dance and the fine arts continued to develop, with a number of good works that were particularly popular among readers and audiences. One hundred and five feature films were produced in 1981, an addition of 23 over 1980, to make it the best year since the founding of new China. A total of 143 new full-length films of all kinds were distributed, 27 more than in 1980. The number of film projection units came to 130,000; performing art troupes, 3,483; cultural centers, 2,893; public libraries, 1,787; and museums, 383. There were 114 radio stations throughout the country, 482 transmitting and relay stations; 42 T.V. centers and 265 T.V. transmitting and relay stations with capacities above 1,000 watts. A total of 14,070 million copies of national and provincial newspapers, 1,460 million copies of magazines of all kinds and 5,580 million copies of books and pictures were published in 1981.

The major problems in the fields of science, technology, education and culture are that not enough effort was made to popularize research results in science and technology, cultural facilities were insufficient and the specialties offered by institutions of higher learning were not balanced.

8. Public Health and Sports

New progress was made in public health undertakings. The total number of hospital beds for the country reached 2,017,000, an increase of 1.8 percent over the previous year. The number of professional health workers totalled 3,011,000, a 7.6 percent increase over the previous year. This included 1,244,000 registered doctors (290,000 doctors of traditional Chinese medicine, 2,000 senior doctors skilled in both Chinese traditional and Western medicine, 516,000 registered doctors of Western medicine, 436,000 assistant doctors of Western medicine), 7.9 percent more than in the previous year; the number of registered nurses and nurses was 525,000, an increase of 12.8 percent over the previous year.

The patriotic health campaign made new achievements. Work was strengthened to prevent and treat snail fever, endemic goiter, Kaschin-Beck disease and other parasitic and endemic diseases. The incidence of such diseases dropped to a certain extent.

Big advances were made in sports as well as new development in mass participation sports. A total of 25 world championships were won, the best year in the annals of China's sports. Chinese athletes broke eight world records and 124 national records. A total of 23,000 sports meets were held at the county level and above. As many as ten million people were qualified for the "state standards for physical training."

9. People's Livelihood

1981 saw a continued improvement in the people's living standards both in cities and the countryside. A sample survey of 18,529 peasant households in 568 counties of 28 provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions showed an average annual income per capita of 223 yuan (including income from farming and sideline production and from redistribution), 16.8 percent over that in the previous year which was 191 yuan.

In 1981, a total of 8,200,000 people were given jobs, including young people waiting for jobs in cities and towns, other categories of people and the year's graduates from colleges and secondary vocational schools who are covered by the state job assignment program. By the end of the year, the number of staff members and workers in state-run and urban collective units came to 109,400,000, this being 4,960,000 more than it was a year before. Of these, 83,720,000 were in state-run establishments, 3,530,000 more than the previous year; 25,680,000 were in collective establishments in cities and towns, an increase of 1,430,000. In addition, individual workers in cities and towns reached 1,130,000 in number, 320,000 more than the previous year.

Annual wages of workers and staff members throughout the country totalled 82,000 million yuan, a rise of 6.1 percent over 1980. The total for state-employed workers was 66,000 million yuan, 5.2 percent more, and for collectively employed workers in cities and towns, 16,000 million yuan, an increase of 10.4 percent.

The average annual money wage was 772 yuan (812 yuan for state-employed workers and 642 for collectively employed workers in cities and towns), 1.3 percent more than in the previous year. The slight increase in the average money wages was due mainly to the big influx of new workers. With more people employed, there was a bigger increase in the average income per person in a worker's or staff member's family. The average income that could be spent as living expenses in 1981, according to a sample survey of 8,715 households in 46 cities of 28 provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions, were 463 yuan per capita, 19 yuan more than in 1980, an increase of 4.3 percent. Deducting the 2.5 percent rise in the cost-of-living index from this, average real income per capita rose 1.8 percent.

The total amount of bank savings in urban and rural areas was 52,400 million yuan by the end of 1981, or 31 percent more than for the end of the previous year.

Housing projects completed by state-run and collective units in cities and towns in 1981 totalled 97 million square meters, showing a 5.5 percent increase over the previous year, which was 91.9 million square meters. Houses constructed by rural commune members were about 600 million square meters, an increase of about 20 percent over the 1980 figure of 500 million square meters.

The problem for people's living standards are: Life was fairly difficult for peasants in some of the disaster-stricken areas; housing for part of the urban dwellers was still fairly crammed; the price rises affected the living standards of part of the staff members and workers who had no or little bonuses. Some places extended at will the scope of agricultural produce which by policy could be sold at negotiated or above-quota prices; some units issued bonuses and allowances indiscriminately. All these pushed prices up, which in turn increased the burden on the consumer.

10. Population

Population by the end of 1981 was 996,220,000, which was 13,670,000 more than the previous year's figure of 982,550,000, showing an increase of 1.4 percent.

Note: Figures in the communique do not include those for Taiwan Province.

CHINA DAILY PRAISES ECONOMIC CLEANUP DRIVE

HK300125 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 30 Apr 82 p 4

[CHINA DAILY commentator article -- "The Clean-Up Drive"]

[Text] The decision by the party Central Committee and the State Council for dealing with serious crimes in the economic sphere has won commendation and approval across the land. The public is applauding party and government determination to clean up corruption in government offices and enterprises and the measures proposed to do the job.

There is nothing strange about the widespread support. Primarily, the recent spate of smuggling, tax evasion, graft, bribery, embezzlement, speculation and stealing of state and collective property were committed by offenders taking advantage of the initial introduction of the government's new economic policy of opening up to the world and adopting a flexible approach in running the domestic economy.

The success of this policy is essential to China's modernization programme. People know that if economic offences are allowed to continue unchecked, successful implementation of this popular policy, and even the modernization programme itself, would be out of the question.

The past two or three years have seen economic offences rising sharply, and there are places, such as some coastal areas, where they were rampant. In both number and seriousness they dwarf similar crimes uncovered during the movement against the "three evils" (corruption, waste and bureaucracy) 30 years ago. Should the culprits be allowed to get off scot-free, corruption would spread to other fields, corroding our socialist system as a whole.

Public Concern

Last but not least, many crimes involved state functionaries, party members and even senior officials. In most cases these were committed by taking advantage of position and power. In general, such people incur the greatest public wrath. If these criminal practices are allowed to go on and spread, the proletarian character of the party and the nature of the socialist state would be harmed. The result would be catastrophic. Hence, the public concern and demand for action.

It was wise for the government to start moving early this year. A number of cases have been uncovered and individuals put on trial since. In March, the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress met to adopt the decision to punish criminals severely for disrupting the economy, and accordingly amended the nation's penal code to provide tougher punishment for the guilty. The Standing Committee also called on those involved to turn themselves in before May 1. Confessors before this cutoff time will get lighter sentences than under the amended penal code.

Clear-Cut Guidelines

It is encouraging to note that as of last week some 3,000 people guilty of economic offences throughout the country have turned themselves in and repented. However, it would be unrealistic to think that all other culprits will do the same. Diehards will not give up without a struggle, which is expected to last for some time. The clean-up drive has barely started.

The Central Committee and State Council decision has laid down clear-cut guidelines for the drive, which should be sufficient to dispel any misgivings and apprehension. The target is major crimes. Strict distinction is urged between ordinary errors in work and economic crimes.

The decision stresses that no officials, regardless of how high their position or how lengthy their service, will be spared if they are involved in economic crimes. Party members and officials will be dealt with more severely than others. If found guilty, they must be removed from their posts and expelled from the party, plus punishment by law, up to the death penalty if called for.

Also the recipient of widespread acclaim is the decision that the anti-corruption drive will not take the form of a mass movement, and all cases of criminal offences will go through proper legal procedure in accordance with the penal code. There will be no witch-hunt.

The clean-up drive will soon shift into high gear. More serious crimes certainly will be uncovered, and more culprits go on trial.

Because it is for the good of the country and to introduce a healthy environment for China's modernization programme, there is every reason for us to give the anti-corruption drive our blessing. There are no grounds for anyone to have misgivings or to worry, except, of course, offenders.

STRENGTHENING LITERARY, ART CRITICISM URGED

[Article by Luo Yuanwen [5012 3293 2429] and Qi Junmin [2058 0193 3046]: "Some Suggestions About the Work of Literary and Art Criticism"]

[Text] Over the past few years, literary and art criticism have become more prominent. Many articles were very well written with clear-cut viewpoints and good reasoning. They have had a very good impact on literary and art creations. However, we must also see that in comparison with literary and art creation, literary and art criticism is still very weak. Where does the problem lie? We think that it lies mainly in the fact that we have not paid enough attention to this work and made it a normal and regular practice.

In order to make literary and art criticism a normal practice, we would like to put forth the following suggestions:

1. Do a better job in organizing the contingent of literary and art critics, for demobilized fighters are not combat-ready. Originally there were not enough literary and art critics in our country, but after 20-odd years of rains and storms, they have become even fewer. In many places there are very few critics or even not a single critic in the literary and art field. Owing to the vicious influence of the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing cliques, some comrades have gotten tired of or become afraid of literary and art criticism. Some of them even resist or oppose it. For this and other reasons some of the literary and art critics have changed their profession to some other jobs or just do some creative work. Under such circumstances, if we do not start with strengthening the contingent of literary and art critics, it will be difficult to make literary and art criticism a normal and regular practice. Some comrades said with emotion that although there are novelists and poets who are in their twenties, we seldom see such young critics and essay writers. This shows that training literary and art critics is an urgent task and the work of literary and art criticism must be strengthened right away.

2. Support normal practice of literary and art criticism and make things easy for literary and art critics to study and to plunge into the thick of life. Without book knowledge and the knowledge acquired from practical life, critics are unable to write good articles and offer original views. Thus, literary and art critics are required to study better than those who are engaged in literarty creation, so that they will be able to offer correct and original views on literary and art works and literary and art problems, become good friends of the writers and promote the development of literary creations.

At present, it is patricularly urgent to advocate pondering and probing into problems and contention among literary and art critics. It is necessary to continue to follow the guiding principles that the CCP Central Committee has mapped out since its third plenary session, further implement the spirit of the national conference on ideological work and continue to overcome the influence of the "leftist" ideology. It is also necessary to take a step further in checking the tendency toward bourgeois liberalization, which deviates from party leadership and the socialist path. This will help raise the level of the contingent of liberary and art critics and promote literary and art criticism while promoting literary and art creation itself.

3. Open up and broaden the fields of literary and art criticism. Now, many literary periodicals have been published, but very few of them are on literary and art theory. They are as few as morning stars, as a proverb goes. It seems there are many reasons for this phenomenon, and being afraid of stirring up trouble may be one of them. For example, the supplement of a certain paper has time and again stated that it will not carry articles on disputed literary and art problems on a regular basis, for fear that once such articles are published and discussion is unfolded, such criticism would be difficult to wind up. In reality, this is "letting a hundred flowers blossom" without "letting a hundred schools of thought contend," which will result in doing harm to "letting a hundred flowers blossom" in the long run. Some other journals hold that articles of literary and art criticism are not interesting and do not attract readers. This is why various avenues for expressing literary and art criticism have all but disappeared. Without such avenues for expressing literary and art criticism, how can it be promoted!

4. Correct the wrong attitude towards literary and art criticism. Now, there are not only a few people who regard literary and art criticism as an act of "imbeciles." It seems to them that only literary and art creation needs talent. Literary and art criticism can be made by anybody. Some writers have even said: "I am afraid I cannot go on doing creative work. I had better do something else, say, make some criticisms." In Chinese or foreign history of literature, many great writers were simultaneously outstanding critics as well. For example, Balzac, the author of "Human Comedy," was also the author of the outstanding critical piece "The Study of Stendhal" which he wrote in the prime of his literary life. This could not be a product of an untalented author. Did other modern great writers like Lu Xun, Mao Dun and Ba Jin not also write many brilliant critical essays while creating their immortal masterpieces? As a matter of fact, to write a good critical essay is not at all easier than writing literary works. Sometimes it requires more time and greater efforts.

NATIONAL MILITARY LITERATURE FORUM ENDS 28 APR

[Text] Beijing, 28 Apr (XINHUA) -- Speaking at the concluding session of the national forum on creative writing of military literature on 28 April, Hua Nan, deputy director of the PLA General Political Department, extended a warm invitation, on behalf of all PLA commanders and fighters, for nonarmy writers to visit PLA units to experience their life and engage in creative writing. He said: In order to develop socialist military literature and to make it flourish, it is the responsibility of leading bodies in the army at all levels to provide the conditions necessary for the writers. We are willing to serve and back up the writers.

Hua Nan said: The forum on creative writing of military literature has been a great success. On behalf of the General Political Department, I warmly congratulate the comrades present today. We are convinced that under the party Central Committee's correct leadership and through the common efforts of writers inside and outside the army, the flower of military literature, which has its own special characteristics, will certainly blossom more luxuriantly and contribute greatly to the building of socialist spiritual civilization.

The forum opened in Beijing on 19 April. Well-known military literature writers and critics from inside and outside the army throughout the country happily got together and discussed, in particular, the question on developing the creative writing of military literature. They exchanged their experience in writing in a lively and harmonious atmosphere. The discussion helped the writers enhance their understanding of the great significance of developing literature, inspired their enthusiasm for creative writing and strengthened their unity. During the forum scores of nonarmy writers asked to visit PLA units to experience army life. Many comrades said that the forum was a meeting of unity, mobilization and marching forward, which will play a positive role in flourishing and promoting military literature.

During the forum, Hu Qiaomu, member of the CCP Central Committee Secretariat, and Zhou Yang, adviser of the CCPCC Propaganda Department and chairman of the All-China Federation of Literary and Art Circles, addressed the participants, wishing the forum a success.

The forum held that during the first 17 years after the founding of new China, there was a thriving period for creative writing of military literature which later was destroyed by Lin Biao and the "gang of four." Although progress has been achieved in revitalizing military literature in recent years, creative writing, both in quality and quantity, still cannot cope with the demand of the people and the times. Therefore it is necessary to fully recognize the responsibility of writers, learn from historical experience and lessons, break away from the influence of the "leftist" thinking, eliminate the interference of bourgeois liberalization and take active measures to provide more and better military literary works for the people.

After conscientiously studying the measures for further developing creative writing of military literature, the forum held that the key to this work lies in the leadership at all levels paying keen attention to strengthening the building of the contingent of writers and providing for them to publish their works. The forum suggested that a nationwide research organization on military literature be established to intensify the organizational and research work and reviews of creative writing of military literature and that military literature awards be set up to encourage outstanding writers.

GUANGMING RIBAO ON SUSPENSION OF PUBLICATIONS

HK290620 Beijing GUANGMING RIBAO in Chinese 22 Apr 82 p 3

[Article by Hua Ran [5478 3544]: "What a Precious Thing It Is To 'Know Yourself' -- A Talk Based on 'Farewell to Readers' From Two Publications"]

[Text] At the beginning of 1982, amid the hue and cry of "soliciting subscriptions" and "increasing volumes of issues" by quite a large number of periodicals, I unexpectedly found in RENMIN RIBAO's advertisement column "farewell to readers" statements from two publications which gave notice to the readers of suspension of publication. At first sight, I was surprised and wondered why these periodicals should suddenly stop publication without reason. But when I had carefully thought it over, I was of the opinion that the suspension of these two publications precisely showed the work style of seeking truth from facts that our party had always advocated and showed the precious wisdom of "knowing oneself."

Perhaps some people may think that it was because these publications were of low quality and were poorly received by the readers or because their sales were very unsatisfactory that they were forced to close down. This is not true. The fact is precisely the contrary. Since DA DI [GREAT EARTH], the literary and art supplement to RENMIN RIBAO, was first published -- initially it was called ZHAN DI [BATTLEFIELD], -- it has carried quite a few good articles exposing and criticizing the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques' crimes in bringing disasters to our country and people and to extol the glorious deeds of the old generation of proletarian revolutionaries. In recent years, we could still find quite a large number of beautiful and moving prose works, poems, reportage items, essays and sketches with lively illustrations.

What I was most fond of reading were the special columns of DA DI Forum, "Small Bouquet of Morning Flowers" and "Page of Prefaces and Postscripts." On the other hand, XIN SHIQI [NEW PERIOD], a monthly on political theory that was edited and published by the Beijing Publishing House, had, since it was first published in 1979, often used vivid and simple language to propagate the party's line, principles and policies and give people guidance in studying the basic theory of Marxism-Leninism. This publication was also well received by the readers.

Since this is so, why then did these publications nave to be suspended? Was this not unreasonable? In my opinion, it was not. In the "Farewell to readers" statements, the editors of DA DI and XIN SHIQI gave a very reasonable account. They said that the present situation has changed. A large number of literary and art periodicals have mushroomed and these periodicals can satisfy the demands of the readers. Throughout the country, we can find many periodicals of the same nature as the two publications, and some periodicals are even identical with the two publications in their policies, tasks and the readers they are intended for. Faced with this situation, the editors promptly decided to voluntarily suspend their two publications and concentrate their limited manpower and material resources on publishing their newspaper and books. Thus they would be able to concentrate on editing the literary and art column of RENMIN RIBAO and on publishing books on political theory. These are indeed far-sighted decisions. Are they not good decisions?

According to the initial statistics of the relevant department, at present there are 634 provincial, prefectural and municipal literary and art periodicals. If the periodicals on political theory, popular science and other subjects are all included, the total number of periodicals throughout the country amounts to more than 2,600. As ours is a big country with a population of 1 billion, we should not think that it is excessive for the country to publish 1,000 or 2,000 periodicals if we regard this number from the angle of the whole situation and from the angle of our long-term interests. We can find readers for so many literary and art periodicals. Furthermore, we cannot neglect the significance of having so many periodicals in raising the scientific and cultural level of our whole nation, in meeting the ever increasing demands in the cultural life of the masses of people and in building socialist civilization. We should try every possible means to support these periodicals and help them to raise their quality. Thus these periodicals will surely be increasingly prosperous.

However, I always have another question in mind: How should our cultural and publishing undertakings adjust themselves to and coordinate with the economic readjustment and reform in our country? This is a question that warrants our discussion. Take the periodicals that have mushroomed throughout the country for example. Are there any that are of poor quality and poorly received by the readers? Are there any periodicals that lack strong leadership and competent editors? Are there any periodicals that are being published by organizations that are publishing newspapers and periodicals or publishing books and periodicals at the same time and that are therefore not able to run their periodicals satisfactorily because of the dispersal of their strength? If an organization is faced with this difficulty and cannot find a way out, it had better bravely learn from RENMIN RIBAO and the Beijing Publishing House's precious spirit of seeking truth from facts and doing things according to their resources. By so doing, they will be able to make a careful choice and give up what they do not have enough resources to do, and they will learn how to satisfactorily and promptly adjust their deployment along with the change in conditions and make the necessary readjustment in their work. As a result, they will be able to strengthen the publications they should strengthen and stop the publications they should stop. When their strength is concentrated, they will be able to raise the quality of their publications. We would rather have fewer but better publications. We should do our best to strive to supply the best spiritual food for the people and we should do our best to avoid forcing rough and slipshod things on our readers.

In short, my impression is that the statements of suspension by the two publications have given us a beneficial message and have provided us with a good theme to discuss.

OW260249 Nanjing Jiangsu Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 25 Apr 82

[Excerpts] On the morning of 24 April, Comrade Tan Zhenlin, vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, who was passing through Nanjing, paid a special visit to the forum on the history of the struggle against Japan in southern Jiangsu to call on old comrades who fought side by side with him behind enemy lines in southern Jiangsu during the war years. Vice Chairman Tan Zhenlin made a speech. He talked about the struggle against Japan in those years and encouraged the comrades to act according to the guidelines of the party Central Committee's instructions, do a good job in accurately compiling material for party history, inherit and carry forward the party's fine traditions and make concerted efforts to build a modern, powerful socialist country.

The forum on the history of the struggle against Japan in southern Jiangsu was called by the committee for the collection of material for party history under the provincial party committee. Guan Wenwei, adviser to the provincial party committee and chairman of the committee for the collection of material for party history, presided over the opening ceremony on 20 April. SHANDONG FORUM ON SECONDARY EDUCATION REFORMS

SK290514 Jinan Shandong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 28 Apr 82

[Text] According to sources, the recent provincial forum on structural reforms of rural secondary education held in Jining stressed that we must enhance our understanding, step up leadership and accelerate the structural reforms of rural secondary education in our province.

The forum pointed out: Our province has made some progress in reforming the structure of secondary education in recent years. Sixty ordinary senior high schools have been transformed into agrotechnical middle schools. The number of agricultural and agrotechnical schools in the province has topped 300. However, they still fall far short of the requirements for development of agricultural production. The forum urged localities to make vigorous efforts to attend to this work, strive to make rapid progress and markedly improve the quality of education in the near future. We must ensure that by 1985 students in the agricultural schools or attending agricultural and professional courses account for 40 percent of all rural secondary school enrollment.

The forum urged all counties and districts which do not have an agrotechnical middle school to transform a senior high school into an agrotechnical middle school by the end of this year. Every county must transform one or two senior high schools into agricultural middle schools. All ordinary middle schools in rural areas must run agricultural courses. The forum urged localities to step up leadership and overcome the tendency of ignoring professional and technical education on the part of the leadership. Meanwhile, efforts should be made to attend to ideological and political education among students and solve the problems involving financial shortages, teaching materials and a lack of qualified teachers to ensure a rapid development of agrotechnical education in both quantity and quality.

Vice Governor Ding Fangming attended the forum and spoke.

WEN HUI BAO CALLS FOR COMMUNIST PURITY

OW261415 Shanghai WEN HUI BAO in Chinese 20 Apr 82 p 1

[Commentator's article: "Communists Should Preserve the Purity of Communism"]

[Excerpts] For Communist Party members and state cadres, the current struggle against serious criminal activities in the economic field is a struggle for preserving communist purity and against corruption and degeneration. It is in this sense that the important "decision" of the party Central Committee and the State Council seriously pointed out: The struggle "has a bearing on the success or failure of our country's drive for socialist modernization and on the prosperity or decline of our party and state." Each and every Communist Party member and state cadre must have a sober and clear understanding of this.

Our party, the vanguard of the working class, is the central force leading the Chinese people in carrying out the socialist revolution and construction. For this reason, our party has always paid close attention to resisting the corrosive influence of the ideologies of the bourgeoisie and all other exploiting classes and to the struggle against corruption and degeneration. Our party has always attached great importance to maintaining its nature as the vanguard of the working class and to preserving its community purity.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee made the important strategic decision to shift the emphasis of our work to socialist modernization, we have implemented the correct policies of opening to the world and revitalizing the domestic economy. Opening to the world means entering a new, vast world. Now our country is developing economic and trade relations with 174 countires and regions, greatly increasing our ability to build our country though our own efforts. At the same time, foreign decadent ideas and ways of life are unavoidably making inroads on us.

Revitalizing the domestic economy means the end of the long-time "leftist" guidelines for economic work. With the economy under socialist public ownership being in the dominant position, we have in the past few years implemented the principle of the long-term coexistence of various economic forms and various forms of management as well as a series of policies designed to revitalize the economy, thus making remakable achievements. At the same time, the influence of exploiting classes' ideologies may also spread.

In the new situation, a small number of weak-willed persons in our ranks who cannot stand the test seek comfort and pleasure and are degenerating. Some of them have even colluded with lawbreakers in society by carrying out criminal activities, thus causing serious damage to the economy. Those persons have cast communist ideals aside and betrayed the party's cause.

Decadent bourgeois ideology has made inroads on the militant Community Party. Taking note of this harsh fact, the party Central Committee has repeatedly put forward to the whole party this slogan: "Preserve the communist purity of our party." Since the struggle against serious criminal activities in the economic field was started this spring, some shocking facts have been brought to light. However, some comrades have not yet clearly understood the serious situation and have failed to see how harmful economic criminal activities and the degeneration of a small number of party members and cadres are to our party and the cause of socialist modernization.

In the struggle against serious criminal activities in the economic field, we should use both positive and negative teching materials to carry out vivid ideological and political education among the paety members, cadres and masses. This is aimed at enabling our party to maintain its nature as the vanguard of the working class and party members to preserve their communist purity.

In their important "decision," the party Central Committee and the State Council called on "every party member to faithfully fulfill the solemn oath he took when being admitted to the party, to keep firmly in mind the party's basic purpose of serving the people wholeheartedly, to always bear in mind that the ultimate aim of the party is the realization of communism and to struggle for communism all his life."

Let us vigorously respond to the call of the party Central Committee, take a firm and clear-cut stand, vigorously participate in the struggle against serious criminal activities in the economic field and contribute to maintaining the communist purity of the party and protecting the socialist system and the interests of the people in our country!

TIE YING URGES FIGHTING ZHEJIANG ECONOMIC CRIME

[Text] The Zhejiang Provincial CCP Committee held its standing committee meeting on 15 and 16 April to conscientiously study and discuss the "resolution adopted by the CCP Central Committee and the State Council on dealing heavy blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field." The participants of the meeting voiced determination to continue strengthening the leadership and to unswervingly carry the struggle to strike at serious criminal activities in the economic sphere through to the end.

In their speeches, the standing committee members unanimously supported the "resolution." They pointed out: This "resolution" is a militant call to further mobilize the whole party and all the people in the country to vigorously strike at serious criminal activities in the economic sphere, a major and new strategic plan drawn up by the CCP Central Committee and the State Council after summing up the struggle in the past 3 months and a sharp weapon to help this struggle develop in a sound manner. It is necessary to immediately organize all party members and cadres in the province, particularly the leading cadres at all levels, to earnestly study this document and resolutely put it into practice.

In his speech, First Secretary of the provincial CCP committee Tie Ying pointed out: The "resolution" is an extremely important document. On the one hand, it profoundly analyzes the harmfulness of serious criminal activities in the economic sphere and the necessity of launching this struggle and reflects a clear-cut, solemn and firm stand in manifesting the determination of the central authorities; on the other hand, it clearly specifies the guidelines, steps and measures in waging this struggle and draws a clear demarcation line between policies. It elucidates many issues even more clearly. Therefore, the party committees at all levels must pay full attention to and thoroughly understand this document and grasp its spirit.

Comrade Tie Ying added: We must faithfully implement the guidelines laid down in this document. Only by so doing will it be possible for us to develop this struggle not only resolutely and vigorously but also steadily and correctly.

The decision strictly prohibits state organs, mass organizations, PLA units, schools and institutions from engaging in commercial activities or import and export trade. The decision also strictly prohibits the workers and staff members in our state organs, mass organizations, PLA units, schools, institutions and enterprises from conducting commercial activities on their own.

The decision emphatically points out that the malpractices of conducting commercial activities by all people, doing business without authorization, carrying out commercial transactions beyond the scope of one's area, driving up the prices of food and carrying out import and export trade without authorization have not only brought about confusion in our unified socialist market and harm to the planned economy of the state, but also facilitated the unlawful and criminal activities of smuggling, trafficking in contraband, embezzlement, bribery, speculation and fraud. These malpractices have also corrupted our party's work style and the general mood of our society and brought about serious harm. The decision sternly declares that in the future, any unit or person that wants to engage in commercial activities must first apply to register with the industrial and commercial administrative and managerial departments. No unit or person is permitted to conduct any commercial activity unless a certificate is issued to the unit or person after the application of the unit or person is checked and approved.

All the retail departments for trial sales and for exhibiting products that have been set up by the state-owned and collective-run enterprises must undergo an overhaul and reorganization. All of these departments are strictly prohibited from conducting speculative resales, engaging in wholesale trade or conducting business beyond the scope of their respective areas. The purchase and marketing departments of people's communes, of brigades and production teams in people's communes and of industrial enterprises run by neighborhood organizations are strictly prohibited from conducting speculative resales. All state organs, PLA units, schools, institutions and enterprises are prohibited from engaging in wholesale trade or speculative resales. No brigades, production teams or persons are allowed to run warehouse operations. Those enterprises that combine agriculture, industry and commerce and those enterprises that combine the purchasing, manufacturing and marketing of special lines of goods are prohibited from conducting business beyond the scope of their areas and from combining the operations of two or more different trades in their business activities. No units or persons are allowed to use foreign currencies, foreign exchange certificates and foreign exchange coupons to buy commodities for resale and use these commodities to engage in speculative activities.

HUNAN COMMUNE DEALS WITH CADRE-PEASANT PROBLEMS

HK260313 Changsha Hunan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2310 GMT 25 Apr 82

[Text] According to HUNAN RIBAO, the CCP Committee of (Meitang) commune in Qidong County has strengthened ideological and political work and taught the masses to treat the cadres correctly and spontaneously accept the cadres' correct leadership. It has also taught the cadres to treat the masses correctly and win their help and support.

After the institution of production responsibility systems of various types in the commune last year, the CCP committee publicized the relevant party documents among the masses to deal with the notion of "why do we need cadres now that the land is contracted to the households." The committee cited local typical cases to enhance the masses' understanding in three respects:

1. It taught everyone to correctly evaluate the cadres. They should realize that many of the grassroots cadres have been leaders since the land reform and cooperativization drives. They have undergone trials and hardships for many years and made very great contributions to consolidating and developing the collective economy.

2. It has cited specific cases to explain that cadres are still needed after the land has been contracted to the households. The masses have thus understood that the functions of the rural grassroots organizations can only be strengthened and cannot be weakened.

3. It has taught everyone to realize that although the grassroots cadres did some leftist things in the past, the responsibility for that was not theirs, but lay with higher authority.

The commune CCP committee has also taught the cadres to treat the masses correctly, spontaneously accept the masses' criticisms and supervision, care for the masses' woes and truly promote the masses' interests.

YUNNAN CIRCULAR ON PROMOTING GRAIN PRODUCTION

HK200248 Kunming Yunnan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 17 Apr 82

[Text] The Yunnan Provincial CCP Committee and People's Government recently issued an important circular on grasping well this year's grain production task.

The circular said: The present economic situation in the rural areas of our province is very good. However, the better the situation, the more we must see the existing problems, keep a level head and exert efforts to solve the existing problems so that we can promote the continuous development of the favorable situation. At present, the most outstanding problem is that if some relationships are dealt with improperly, grain production may drop this year. Therefore, we must pay close attention to promoting grain production so as to ensure the fulfillment and overfulfillment of the general plan for grain production assigned by the state.

The circular pointed out: The CCP committees and people's governments at all levels must be clear about the gravity of this issue. First of all, due to the reduction of grain area last autumn, the task for spring sowing this year is bound to be heavier. Again, due to the expansion of area for such industrial crops as flue-cured tobacco and sugarcane this spring, the grain area should be reduced by a certain proportion. On the other hand, though our province reaped an unprecedented bumper harvest in grain production last year, there still exists the problem of the uneven regional distribution of grain production and grain varieties.

The circular stressed: Our principle for agricultural development still requires actively promoting diversification without any relaxation of grain production, as proposed by the central authorities. For making more contributions to the country, most areas in our province are advantageous for promoting diversified undertakings, but we must strive to attain grain self-sufficiency and surplus. This is also the principle we should adhere to. At present, we must focus on the major task of increasing the total output of grain when we ponder problems or offer suggestions. To this end, the circular put forth the following demands:

1. We must earnestly develop scientific cultivation and strive to increase yields in the present area sown to grain crops. We must pay particular attention to raising yield in medium- and low-yield fields. At the same time, we must make further efforts to maximize the output of the high-yield cropland. We must also greatly popularize all scientific results and production experiences which have been proved effective and useful in practice and energetically advocate interplanting of corn and potato in order to promote better economic returns in agriculture.

2. In our province, there is a large amount of land on fallow rotation, semi-wasteland, corners of fields and scattered plots. So long as there is no destruction of forests because of reclamation and no damage is done to soil fertility, we can make full use of these lands for planting as much grain as possible, and sow and harvest more.

3. Continuously readjusting the internal structure of agriculture to promote the growing of industrial crops is one of the major measures in developing the agriculture in our province. However, we must strengthen leadership and make overall plans in this regard. Our attitude must be positive, and our steps must be firm as well. The important prerequisite to this is that no arbitrary reduction to the area sown to grain crops is allowed. In promoting industrial crops, we should utilize the area presently sown to grain crops as little as possible. In particular, we should utilize only a small area of the paddyfields, or no paddyfield area if possible. If we have used some fertile farmland for promoting industrial crops, we should by all means reclaim that area for grain. In growing flue-cured tobacco, we must resolutely implement the notice which the provincial government transmitted in accordance with the urgent circular issued by the State Council on strictly controlling the area for growing flue-cured tobacco. In using rural land for building housing, we should also firmly apply the relevant regulations formulated by the provincial CCP committee and people's government.

4. At present, we must concentrate our efforts on firmly grasping spring sowing and preparations for sowing, so as to lay a good foundation for farming this spring. At the same time, by drawing on past experiences, we must make early arrangements for the cultivation of late autumn crops, which is a major crop season. Legumes, potatoes, buckwheat and miscellaneous grains, as well as cucurbits, vegetables and so on are quite nourishing in varying degrees, and are edible for man and can also be used as fodder. We should plant as much of these as we can. The climate is abnormal this year. Therefore, we must base our efforts on fighting disasters to strive for bumper harvests and take various precautions in a flexible way so that, through preparedness, we can avert disaster.

5. We must strengthen the weak links in grain production. As for those communes and brigades whose grain production has dropped successively, we should adopt effective measures to change this situation as soon as possible. Now, we must rapidly dispatch work groups [words indistinct] to the production teams and brigades where grain production has been at a standstill in accordance with the arrangements made by the provincial CCP committee.

6. We must correctly carry out the policy of grain purchases by the state, and protect the benefits of both consumers and producers, so as to accelerate the growth of grain production.

7. The designated bases for commodity grain should make further contributions in supplying commodity grain this year.

YUNNAN CIRCULAR ON PORNOGRAPHIC MATERIALS

HK161349 Kunming Yunnan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 11 Apr 82

[Summary] The Yunnan Provincial CCP Committee and the provincial people's government recently issued a circular on inspecting, prohibiting and seizing reactionary pornographic books, drawings and audio and video tapes. The circular demands that all places and departments mobilize all forces to resolutely withstand the corruption by decadent bourgeois ideology and culture. Over the past few years, many reactionary pornographic books, drawings, audio and video tapes and other obscene goods have been unlawfully brought into the province from abroad and have seriously poisoned the minds of some staff and workers, particularly young people and juveniles, so that they are physically injured and mentally affected and even embark on the road of degeneration and crime; social values are also corrupted. Organs of the party and the government at all levels and all departments must clearly understand this and seriously solve this problem. Those who have in their possession reactionary pornographic books, drawings and audio and video tapes must voluntarily hand them over to the government for disposal or destroy them. Those who refuse to hand them over to the government for disposal must be strictly dealt with in accordance with regulations. Those who compile, publish, produce, smuggle, peddle, conceal, possess and unscrupulously disseminate pornographic books and drawings must be severely punished. In the future, the provincial broadcasting bureau will be responsible for the publication and distribution of audio and video tapes. No other units are allowed to produce and sell audio and video tapes without the authorization of the provincial broadcasting bureau.

GANSU FIRST SECRETARY ON SPECIALIZED PRODUCTION

OW250917 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1200 GMT 24 Apr 82

[Excerpts] On a recent visit to a household engaged in specialized production, First Secretary of the Gansu Provincial CCP Committee Feng Jixin said: Development of specialized production not only provides jobs for a vast number of laborers, but also creates wealth for our society. This is a new approach to providing work for educated young people, that is, by developing production.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, households engaged in specialized production of one kind or another have quickly come into being in Gansu's rural areas. Now there are more than 40,000 such households in the province.

On 21 April Comrade Feng Jixin visited (Chen Shigong) and his four brothers and sisters at the (Yaoyuan) production birgade of (Xibu) commune in suburban Lanzhou, and saw the chickens they raised, as well as the electric incubator they used for hatching eggs. At the end of the visit, Comrade Feng Jixin told them: By what you have done in developing specialized production, you have set a good example for other educated youths. In looking for work, educated youths should not merely direct their attention to the commercial field. Since there are many ways to develop production, they should also look to the production field for work. Comrade Feng Jixin called on leading organs and the people of all walks of life throughout the province to help develop specialized production in households by effecting encouraging policies, giving technical guidance and providing materials in support of such production.

NINGXIA MEETING DISCUSSES RURAL PROBLEMS

HK180227 Yinchuan NINGXIA RIBAO in Chinese 8 Apr 82 p 1

[Report: "At Forum of Cadres Sent Down to Rural Areas, Regional CCP Committee Arranges the Next Stage of Work, Demands That Three Things Be Tackled Well"]

[Text] The Ningxia regional CCP committee recently held a report forum of cadres sent down to the rural areas. At the forum, many cadres transferred from the regional organs to work in various municipalities and counties aired their views on the fine rural situation, exchanged the experiences of various progressive units and reported on the present rural situation and the new problems that need solving there. They also put forward a number of suggestions on solving these problems. The discussions were centered on the production responsibility systems.

Xue Hongfu, secretary of the regional CCP committee; Ma Sizhong, vice chairman of the regional people's government; and other leading comrades attended and spoke at the forum. In his speech, Comrade Xue Hongfu affirmed the achievements in the previous stage of work done by cadres sent to the rural areas, and also made arrangements for the next stage. How should the current rural situation be viewed? The cadres sent to the rural areas held that the rural situation in Ningxia is very good. As a result of studying and implementing the spirit of the "minutes of the national rural work conference," production responsibility systems of various types have been established everywhere during the winter and spring, and these have already been stabilized. The peasants are at ease in carrying out production, and their enthusiasm is something rarely seen for many years. Spring farming started early this year, and the progress is rapid and quality good.

The cadres attending the forum held that at present, there are many problems that need solving with respect to how to perfect the production responsibility systems. One problem is that propaganda and implementation of the spirit of the "minutes of the national rural work conference" have not been engaged in with sufficient depth, and the masses in many places still do not understand the spirit of the conference. The "two misinterpretations" pointed out by the conference have still not been cleared up, and many people still mistakenly hold that the only form of production responsibility system is that of assigning the land to the households in exchange for fixed levies, which means dividing up the land for individual farming, and so they advocate that the more completely and thoroughly the collective property is shared out, the better.

There are instances of renting or transferring responsibility land or building houses and manors on it, and of sharing out and even looting collective property. Second, the relationship between centralized control and individual responsibility has not been handled properly in some places; this is shown mainly by the fact that certain industrial, sideline and diversification production items suitable for centralized collective management have been placed under centralized control. [as published] Third, many grassroots leadership groups are in a paralyzed or semi-paralyzed state, no one is taking charge of many important items of work and no action is taken against sabotage of collective property and production installations, superstitious activities, gambling and so on. Fourth, the tendency of freedom of choice in crops to be grown exists in certain places; people grow whatever makes most money, and state cultivation plans and collective contracts cannot be implemented. Some counties have already completed spring sowing, but have not signed contracts with households undertaking contract resp nsibility. Fifth, certain cadres engage in corruption and other violations of law and discipline, while the financial management of certain units is chaotic. There are also problems of remuneration for brigade and production team cadres. The reason these problems have emerged is that in the course of practicing the responsibility system of assigning land to each household in return for fixed levies, our thinking, work and measures have been unable to keep up with the situation; the problems are certainly not the inevitable consequence of instituting this system. Practice has proved that the abovementioned problems can be solved as long as our guiding ideology is clear-cut, our leadership is strengthened and we do our work in a thoroughly sound way.

The meeting arranged the next stage of work, and demanded that the cadres sent down to the rural areas tackle the following three tasks: First, get a good grasp of tree planting, sapling cultivation and forest preservation. In light of serious problem in forest destruction, which harm the masses' enthusiasm for afforestation, the work groups can propose that each county investigate incidents of forest destruction in recent years, deal with them according to their seriousness and take legal measures where criminal activities are involved. The comrades of the work groups should also take active part in planting trees. Second, get a good grasp of summing up and perfecting the agricultural production responsibility systems. It is necessary to continue to implement the spirit of the "minutes of the national rural work conference" in an all-round and correct way, get a clearer picture in terms of ideological understanding of the principle of "upholding one thing," "keeping two things unchanged" and "taking simultaneous account of three things," and clear up the "two misinterpretations." It is necessary to correctly handle the relationship between centralized control and individual responsibility, suitably assign production items to one or the other and also establish and put on a sound basis the contract system and the cadre post responsibility system. By setting up the cadre post responsibility system, we should strengthen the cares' sense of responsibility, intensify administrative discipline and solve the problems of paralysis or semi-paralysis in certain grassroots organizations. Third, it is necessary to implement the sowing plans for industrial crops. The agricultural economy is a major part of the national economy and it must follow the principle of taking planned economy as primary and regulation by market mechanism as secondary. The new situation that has emerged since instituting the system of assigning land to households in exchange for fixed levies has brought some new problems in implementing the state plans and the economic contracts. Now we cannot reckon that the state plans are on a sound basis once they have been conveyed to the production teams; they must be conveyed to the households.

XINJIANG INDUSTRY, TRANSPORT WORK MEETING ENDS

HK170221 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1300 GMT 16 Apr 82

[Excerpts] The Xinjiang regional industry and communications work conference concluded on 16 April after 10 days in session. The meeting called on workers in the region's industry and communications enterprises to brace their spirits, work hard, achieve relatively great progress in improving economic returns and accomplish the target of ensuring a 4 percent production increase and striving for a 5 percent increase.

The participants seriously studied the relevant documents in connection with the central task of improving economic returns, and summed up experiences and lessons. They held: due to the influence of leftist guiding ideology for many years, we onesidedly stressed progress without paying heed to economic results, and only made political, not economic reckonings. It is now imperative to correct the guiding ideology for industrial production. We must switch from our protracted emphasis on output value to emphasis on economic returns, and shift the focus of industry and communications work to the track of improving economic returns. We must further clarify the aims of production and work wholeheartedly to make the country rich.

Regional CCP committee Secretary Huang Luobin spoke at the conclusion of the conference. He said: We must carry out all-round straightening out of the enterprises in groups and batches in order to improve their economic returns. While carrying out this work, we must give priority to rectifying and staffing the leadership groups, and select effective cadres as managers and secretaries. We must promote the economic responsibility systems and pay attention to properly handling the relations between the interests of the state, the enterprises and the individual workers. We must seriously tidy up financial and economic discipline and do a good job in completing the inspection of finances. We must deal resolute blows at elements who commit serious crimes in the economic field.

TA KUNG PAO ON BUSH'S UPCOMING CHINA VISIT

HK300700 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in Chinese 30 Apr 82 p 2

["Political Talk" column by Shih Chun-yu [2457 0689 3768]: "China Announces That Bush Will Pay an Official Visit"]

[Text] Beijing announced yesterday that U.S. Vice President George Bush will be making an official visit to China in the early part of May.

Bush is at present making a tour of the Asian and Pacific region, and his itinerary was originally scheduled for five countries. His decision to visit China was added after he began his journey. There are two points which merit attention regarding his visit. First, 2 weeks ago, the Chinese Ministry of Foreign Affairs lodged a protest over the U.S. sales of military-related spare parts to Taiwan. Second, he is the highest official in the Reagan administration to visit China. His position as vice president is higher than that of Secretary of State Alexander Haig and therefore, the Sino-U.S. talks this time may be upgraded as a result.

Last Time He Shouldered a "Difficult Mission"

Since the word official has been added to his visit, this will not be merely an exchange of views but should be an official talk for the solving of problems.

Bush used to be the director of the U.S. Liaison Office in Beijing. That was before the establishment of Sino-U.S. relations. He is an old friend of China.

Bush visited Beijing in August 1980 when he was campaigning for Reagan. At that time, there were already people pointing out that he "shouldered a very difficult mission," because Reagan was then repeating time and again his "two Chinas" view in contradiction of the statement made by Bush in Beijing.

Now, Bush is coming to China for the first time in his capacity as vice president to discuss the same problem. We can see the great obstacles created by the Reagan administration in Sino-U.S. relations. However, we do not know whether or not there will still be any difference between Bush's performance and Reagan's.

Bo Yibo's Talk

Bush arrived in Singapore the day before yesterday. His press secretary, Tilly, said that Bush's visit to Beijing is an expression of the importance attached by the United States to China's concern over the U.S. arms sales to Taiwan.

Attaching importance to the matter is one thing. How to judge and deal with it is another.

Vice Premier Bo Yibo in his meeting with Phillips, chairman of the U.S.-China trade council yesterday discussed this matter and pointed out that some of the people in America have not clearly judged China's stand.

He held that these Americans only see the flexible aspect of China's policy but not the principled aspect. If the United States continues along this line of reasoning, it will be making a serious mistake.

The Three-Point Assurance Cannot Be Abandoned

A spokesman of the Chinese Ministry of Foreign Affairs in the protest on 14 April clearly declared that China has taken note of the three-point assurance of the United States and has therefore adopted the attitude of not allowing such a thing to be repeated and seeing how the other side behaves. Therefore, should the U.S. side go back on its three-point assurance, it must bear all consequences arising therefrom.

These three points are: 1) This batch of spare parts which the Reagan administration is preparing to sell to Taiwan is something that had been promised in the past and is not a new sale. 2) This batch will not involve the supply of weapons. 3) The United States will not consider military transfers to Taiwan while the two sides are continuing their bilateral discussions on a settlement of the question of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan.

Therefore, should the United States turn around and become entangled again in such matters as saying they are defensive and not offensive weapons, and they are spare parts and not weapons, this will be in violation of the above-mentioned three-point assurance.

China will absolutely not stand for U.S. disregard of her sovereignty or interference in her internal affairs. This is a matter of principle. Should the United States violate this principle, not only will the relations between the two countries not improve, but it will also be impossible to maintain the status quo.

There Is Still Hope for Agreement

Since the Reagan administration has sent Vice President Bush for talks, China of course welcomes this. However, taking the stand of hoping for the best and preparing for the worst, China first of all hopes that the U.S. authorities will realize their errors and mend their ways and will come to an agreement with China acceptable to both sides.

PAPERS DISCUSS ARTICLE 30 OF CONSTITUTION

HSIN WAN PAO

HK291306 Hong Kong HSIN WAN PAO in Chinese 29 Apr 82 p 1

["New Talk" column: "Article 30 of the Draft Constitution Attracts Attention"]

[Text] The part of the draft of the revised constitution of China that attracts the greatest attention of people is Article 30, which declared that the state is authorized to set up special administrative districts if necessary and that the system for a special administrative district will be stipulated by law in accordance with actual conditions.

It is declared in the draft of the revised constitution that China is a unitary multinational state. The draft of the revised constitution also declared that China is administratively divided into provinces, municipalities, counties and villages and besides, in those areas where minority nationalities live in compact communities into autonomous regions, autonomous prefectures and autonomous counties. But the stipulated special administrative district is not included in the above-mentioned administrative structure. As China is a country with a vast stretch of territory and a huge population, some exceptions in its administrative structure will not be detrimental to the unification of the state. Compared with the previous constitutions, the new constitution that is being discussed throughout the country will enlarge the power of local authorities and empower the local people's congresses to draw up and promulgate legislation of a local nature. The localities that enjoy nationality autonomy will be granted even greater power and they will be authorized to formulate ordinances of autonomy and independent local regulations. Nevertheless, in exercising these powers the localities will remain under the unified leadership of the central authorities. For example, the autonomous administration and the local construction in autonomous areas should still be carried out under the guidance of state planning.

It is believed that the special administrative district mentioned in the draft of the revised constitution will enjoy even greater local power than any of the existing administrative areas in the Chinese mainland. It is only mentioned in the draft of the revised constitution that the system and structure of the special administrative district will be stipulated by law in accordance with actual conditions and the draft of the revised constitution does not provide any regulations or restrictions.

Therefore as long as there is a need due to actual conditions, corresponding legislation can be drawn up to establish an appropriate system in a special administrative district.

When people read this article in the draft of the revised constitution, they will naturally associate this article with Taiwan. For the nine-point proposal on Kuomintang-CCP talks issued by NPC Chairman Ye Jianying on the eve of the last National Day mentioned that after the realization of the reunification of the country, Taiwan might become a special administrative district and enjoy a high degree of autonomy including the power to retain its own army. The central government would not interfere in the local affairs in Taiwan.

It is attempted, by drawing up this new constitution, to set up a national Central Military Council to lead the armed forces of the country. The chairman of the council will be appointed and can be dismissed by the National People's Congress. This is aimed to show that the command system of the army is headed by the state instead of the party. Thus the local armed forces that Taiwan will retain after it is reunited with the mainland will be able to be a part of the national armed forces, and the local armed forces need not be opposed to the national one because of politics and differences between political parties.

Since China is such a big country, it is only natural for a large number of political parties to coexist and reflect different political views. The differences and disputes between political parties should not harm the unity of the country, and the various political parties may coexist for a long time and compete with one another in making more contributions for the whole people. The draft of the revised constitution definitely provides that a united front made up of all political parties should be continuously consolidated and expanded rather than being weakened and lessened. As one of the important organizations of the united front, the CPPCC will continue to play its important role instead of being abolished.

A constitution is a fundamental law of a country. In China, it represents the unity of the views of the CCP and the will of the people. The draft of the revised constitution, if formally adopted, will have the highest authorization and no political party and no individual is allowed to violate it. Therefore, judging from the relevant clauses in the constitution, we can see that the Chinese mainland's peaceful policy on the return of Taiwan to the motherland is a permanent one.

SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST

HK300252 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 30 Apr 82 p 6

[By foreign affairs editor David Chen]

[Text] China has proposed a system by which Taiwan could be reunited with the mainland. And the system is incorporated in the country's draft constitution which was published earlier this week for discussion and subsequent approval at the coming annual session of the National People's Congress.

Some observers believe the special provision could also have an application to Hong Kong and Macao.

The provision is short, so short that it appears to have eluded the close scrutiny of most analysts when the draft was published.

Article 30, under the first chapter titled General Principles, provides that when absolutely necessary, the nation could set up "special administrative regions." And the administrative system to be adopted will be set up by law in accordance with the conditions existing in these regions. This article follows immediately after another on how local governments are to be set up.

The "special administrative region" was first proposed in a nine-point reunification statement by the chairman of the National People's Congress, Marshal Ye Jianying, on September 30, the eve of the Chinese National Day. Among the nine points are a proposal that Taiwan can enjoy "a high degree of autonomy as a special administrative region and it can retain its own armed forces." In the same proviso, China also guarantees that the central government (in Beijing) would "not interfere with local affairs on Taiwan."

Among the other provisions are:

-- Taiwan's current socio-economic system will remain unchanged, so will its way of life and its economic and cultural relations with foreign countries. There will be no encroachment on the proprietary rights and lawful right of inheritance over private property, houses, land and enterprises or on foreign investments.

-- People in authority and representative personages of various circles in Taiwan may take up posts of leadership in national political bodies and participate in running the state.

-- When Taiwan's local finance is in difficulty, the central government may subsidise it as is fit for the circumstances.

The special administrative region, when it was first mentioned by Marshal Ye, received no more attention than that of the other conditions the elderly chairman had pointed out. It was then simply regarded as a convenient phrase for this kind of political system similar to such other terms as "free zones" and "special economic zones." However, this term has been given great significance now that it is going to be part of the country's constitution.

Observers pointed out that such "special administrative regions" are distinct from the many autonomous regions, prefectures, districts and counties where ethnic minorities reside. These political regions enjoying so-called autonomous status do not enjoy the wide degree of autonomy as has been proposed for Taiwan; they do not have armed forces, and they have the same socio-economic system as the rest of the country.

Indeed, provisions for the autonomous regions and prefectures, etc, are set out in another article.

And there is a section in chapter 3 on government structure which sets out the forms and functions of administrative bodies, and the people's bodies that elect officials for these autonomous regions.

Observers said while Article 30 states only briefly the system of administration that could be used in the "special administrative regions" it does provide scope within which some of the most liberal governments could operate. This means Taiwan could have its own socio-economic system and way of life without any interference from Beijing.

Analysts said the inclusion of the specific article indicates that the Beijing leadership is not only serious about the unification of Taiwan with the motherland, but has also provided measures leading to this goal, at the same time bearing in mind the long-term prospects of the issue.

The draft constitution, the most comprehensive of four since the People's Republic was founded, also states in its preamble that accomplishing the reunification of the motherland is the "holy task and duty" of the whole people, including the compatriots of Taiwan. This is a modified call compared with the 1978 constitution, which says: "We are determined to liberate Taiwan and accomplish the great cause of unifying our motherland."

Analysts, however, do not believe that the regime in Taiwan would be impressed either by the preamble or Article 30. Its attitude is likely to remain unchanged from that in respect of Marshal Ye's statement last year.

Nevertheless, the draft constitution just published by Beijing will be scrutinised in earnest by Taiwan officials and there is expected to be lively debates on it in general, and Article 30 in particular, analysts said.

WAN JEN JIH PAO: PLANE CRASH DUE TO SABOTAGE

HK301050 Hong Kong WAN JEN JIH PAO 30 Apr 82 p 1

[Text] According to reports from Guangzhou, the "plane crash" over Guangxi a few days ago was a manmade tragedy, not merely an air accident. It was caused by a bomb set off by a group of children of senior communist cadres in a hijacking attempt. A striking rumor has been going the rounds these days both in Guangzhou and Guilin that the crash of the Trident CA3303 near Gongcheng, killing more than a hundred persons on board, was most probably caused by a bomb detonated by a group of children of high-ranking communist cadres who attempted to hijack that plane. And official communist sources have confirmed that the crash was preceded by an explosion.

According to a Beijing television broadcast, Wan Li, "premier [as published] of the State Council," has ordered the Guangzhou authorities and "CAAC" officials to conduct a thorough investigation into the real cause of the incident, thus implicitly suggesting that something other than mechanical trouble was involved.

This was not the first time that children of senior communist cadres attempted a hijacking. It was learned that last year a group of children of high-ranking cadres attempted to hijack a civil aircraft and fly it to Taiwan. The hijackers had succeeded in boarding the plane, but as their secret was leaked, they were stopped at the last minute and all were arrested.

It was said that before the Trident crashed into the Benshan Valley in Gongcheng an explosion occurred, shattering the plane into pieces and killing all its passengers and crew members.

[Editorial note: The paper also carries three other short reports on the incident on page 1: 1) It quotes sources in Guilin as saying that the plane crashed 1,400 meters above sea level against the required flight altitude of 1,800 meters on that route and that on the day of the crash the weather was fine, not rainy. 2) The paper cites the rumor circulating in Guangzhou that the co-pilot of the plane was the son of General Chen Xilian, a rival of Deng Xiaoping, and he was the target of an assassination. 3) The paper concludes from its analysis of the editorial statements of the leftwing TA KANG PAO that this paper has implicitly criticized the aviation authorities on the mainland for attempting a coverup as they delayed more than 10 hours in reporting the incident.]

RENMIN RIBAO ACCLAIMS RECENT OPEC MEETING

HK261131 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 25 May 82 p 7

[Short commentary: "New Achievement in Solidarity and Militancy of the Developing Countries"]

[Text] The 64th meeting of the OPEC ministerial conference recently decided to maintain the oil production ceiling at 17.5 million barrels a day and to keep the benchmark crude price at $34 a barrel. This is a result of OPEC's fruitful struggle against the Western oil monopolies.

Since a glut of oil appeared in the world market which sent down the oil prices, some Western countries and oil monopolies have substantially dumped their stocks on the market to pressure OPEC into lowering oil prices.

This even more seriously aggravated the situation. OPEC was confronted with a grave challenge. At the 63d meeting of the OPEC ministerial conference in March, oil ministers decided to cut back production and maintain the organization's price lines. However, the Western oil monopolies further intensified their sabotage activities and attempted to push prices even lower. They chose Nigeria and Ecuador, which were suffering from fairly grave economic difficulties as the point to make a breakthrough and suspended oil contracts with them as a means to force them to cut their prices in order to achieve the goal of breaking up OPEC. For a time, in the West, it was publicly and maliciously foretold that OPEC was going to collapse. But only 2 months later, their expectations were hopelessly dashed to pieces. OPEC provided Nigeria and Ecuador with financial aid to help them stand up against the pressure from the West. On the other hand, it continued to readjust its production ceiling in accordance with the conditions of the market and vigorously strived to maintain its price line. Meanwhile, with the substantial reduction of their stocks, the oil monopolies made new purchases of oil. All this has brought about a change in the relations between supply and demand in the world oil market. As a result, oil prices have stabilized and oil business is becoming more lively. OPEC has thus withstood severe test and achieved initial victory in stabilizing oil prices.

The present OPEC struggle is a just struggle waged by raw material producing countries to jointly defend raw material prices against world monopolies' plunder. Using oil as its weapon, OPEC has played a significant role in the struggle against the United States and Israel. Recently, it has persisted in its struggle and despite unfavorable conditions has maintained its invincible position. This proves that as long as the Third World countries are firmly united and determined to defend their common legitimate rights and interests against the world monopolies, they will finally achieve their goal in varied degrees.

OPEC is the most powerful organization of the raw-material-producing countries of the Third World. The large number of raw-material-producing countries that have united together with other developing countries have been playing an increasingly vigorous role in strengthening the cooperation between developing countries and promoting the North-South dialogue. Not long ago at the recently concluded Law of the Sea Conference and the conference of the International Tin Council. The developing countries united and cooperated with one another and showed their strength in safeguarding their rights and interests and opposing the obstinate stand of the superpowers. Though the struggle to establish a new economic order in the world is a prolonged cause and there are quite a few difficulties and obstacles ahead of us, we should never underestimate the strength, significance and role of the unity and fighting spirit of the developing countries.

XINHUA HAILS ADOPTION OF LAW OF SEA CONVENTION

OW021958 Beijing XINHUA in English 1829 GMT 2 May 82

[Text] United Nations, May 1 (XINHUA) -- After nine years of tough negotiations, a draft convention on the law of the sea was adopted at the 11th Session of the Third U.N. Conference on the Law of the Sea yesterday. 130 countries voted in favor, 4 (U.S., Turkey, Venezuela and Israel) against with 17 (including the Soviet Union, the Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom) abstentions.

The draft convention consists of 320 articles and 9 annexes dealing with most human uses of seas and oceans, including shipping, fishing and resources exploitation. One of the important provisions stipulates that every coastal state has the right to establish up to 12 nautical miles of territorial sea. An exclusive economic zone provision says that every coastal state has sovereign rights in the waters up to 200 nautical miles from its coast with regard to natural resources and certain economic activities and also has certain types of jurisdiction over marine scientific research and protection and preservation of marine environment. A provision stipulates that the continental-shelf of a coastal state extends to a distance of 200 nautical miles, or 350 nautical miles under specific circumstances. The coastal state exercises over the continental-shelf sovereign rights for the purpose of exploring and exploiting its natural resources.

The provision on land-locked states provides that these states shall have the right of access to and from the sea.

The convention contains certain provisions guiding the use of territorial seas and straits for international navigation.

Another important provision explicitly stipulates that the international sea-bed area and its resources are the common heritage of mankind. It provides that a "parallel system" will be established for exploring and exploiting the deep sea-bed. Under the system, all activities in the area would be controlled by the international sea-bed authority. This authority would be empowered by states parties to the convention to conduct its own mining operations through an organ called "Enterprise" and, at the same time, to contract with private and state ventures to give them mining rights in the area. It also stipulates that licensed miners must make payments ranging from 35 to 70 percent of their returns on investment to the enterprise, and that they are obligated to transfer their technology to the enterprise.

A few industrialized countries, the United States in particular, attempted to monopolize the exploitation of trillion-billion dollars of minerals lying in the international sea-bed area by using their fabulous capital and advanced technology. Not long ago, the United States introduced amendments on the draft convention's sea-bed provisions, calling in effect for the renouncement of the principle which regards the international sea-bed area as the common heritage of mankind. This unreasonable demand was categorically rejected by the developing countries. The adoption of the draft convention is, as a whole, an outcome of the long struggle waged by the Third World countries for equitable rights over seas and oceans and against big-powers' hegemonic activities in these waters. At the same time, it is also a compromised package that takes into account the interests of different types of countries with different conditions.

The draft convention is expected to be signed at Caracas, Venezuela, in December.

(Shen Weiliang), vice-chairman of the Chinese delegation, said yesterday that the adoption of a new convention on the law of the sea was the result of many years of negotiations and consultations and represented only a first step toward the establishment of a new legal order of the sea. There are still imperfections or even serious defects in quite a number of provisions of the present draft convention, he added.

He said that the numerous developing countries should make continued efforts toward defending the aims and principles of the convention and safeguarding their legal rights and interests. He pointed out that, with regard to the international sea-bed regime, the draft resolution on preparatory investment has accommodated too much of the demands of a few industrialized powers and provided privileges and priority status to these countries and their companies. "We do not consider this appropriate," he said.

He pointed out that in order to safeguard the principle of the common heritage of mankind and the provisions of the convention, no country should enact unilateral legislation in relation to deep sea mining. Any such act is illegal and null and void.

With regard to the question of the regime of the passage of warships through territorial sea, he reiterated the Chinese Government's stand that the coastal state has the right to require prior authorization or notification for the passage of foreign warships through territorial sea in accordance with the laws and regulations of the respective coastal state. "As to the questions concerning the definition of continental shelf and the delimitation of sea areas between states with opposite or adjacent coasts, I have already expressed our principles underlying these issues at the plenary meeting of 31 March. My delegation maintains its previous position," he said.

ZHONGGUO QINGNIAN BAO NOTES EGYPT-USSR RELATIONS

HK301252 Beijing ZHONGGUO QINGNIAN BAO in Chinese 24 Apr 82 p 3

[Article by Ying Huai [2503 2037]: "New Trends in Egyptian-Soviet Relations"]

[Text] Recently, there are indications of a relaxation of the tense Egyptian-Soviet relations that have existed for a long period since the 1970's. This has attracted people's attention and there is much talk about it.

Egypt is located at a very important strategic position in the Middle East and has always been the target of acute contention and fierce rivalry among the big countries. When President Jamal 'Abd an-Nasir was in office, Egypt mainly depended on Soviet "aid" in its military, economy and other undertakings. President Anwar as-Sadat, who succeeded Nasir in 1970, saw through the Moscow authorities' intention of trying to interfere in Egypt's internal affairs and to seize strategic advantages by means of providing "aid." In 1972, 20,000 Soviet military experts were expelled. In 1976, the Egyptian-Soviet friendship treaty was abrogated. Last year, the Soviet ambassador accredited to Egypt was expelled. Since the Egyptian-Soviet relations became more tense with each passing day, Egypt gradually turned to the United States.

Gaining Room To Maneuver in Diplomatic Activities

After President Muhammad Mubarak was sworn in, proceeding from the needs of safeguarding Egypt's independence and initiative and its political and economic rights and interests, Egypt began to cautiously improve relations with the Soviet Union while continuing to strengthen its relations with the United States. Not long ago, Egypt's deputy prime minister and concurrently foreign minister said to reporters that if Soviet diplomats took measures to guarantee that they would act in accordance with diplomatic norms, the Soviet ambassador who was expelled in September last year would be welcomed back in Egypt.

Mubarak himself also once openly expressed the willingness of developing relations with the Soviet Union on the basis of equality and not interfering in each other's internal affairs and that "principally speaking, it is unavoidable that the two countries will exchange ambassadors." International public opinion holds that these words and deeds of the Egyptian leaders are to gain the initiative for gaining room to maneuver in diplomatic activities.

The Need To Readjust its Economy

Egypt is faced with rather serious economic problems. This domestic situation acts to prompt Mubarak to readjust policy towards the Soviet Union. This is because the Aswan Dam hydropower station, which generates 65 percent of the power needed by Egypt, and most other large-scale enterprises were built with Soviet assistance in the 1960's have worn machines and spare parts for them in these projects badly need repairing and replacing. But aid from Western countries cannot solve this problem. Therefore, Egypt can only place its hopes on inviting Soviet experts to come and help overcome its present difficulties.

No sooner had President as-Sadat died than Moscow adopted a "friendly" posture towards Egypt and intensified its contention with the United States. The Soviet Union has agreed to help overhaul some equipment of the Aswan Dam hydropower station which was built with Soviet assistance. It will also send some 60 industrial technological experts to work in Egypt. The chairman of USSR Council of Ministers has also sent a telegram to Egyptian Prime Minister Muhyi ad-Din expressing his hope for a normalization of Soviet-Egyptian relations.

Egyptian-U.S. Relations Will Not Be Affected

Relaxation of Egyptian-Soviet relations has caused uneasiness for the other superpower. Washington worries that this will affect the U.S.-Egyptian relations. As to this, Mubarak has repeatedly reaffirmed that easing up of Egyptian-Soviet relations will not affect Egypt's policy towards the United States and that Egypt will continue to fulfill the Camp David accords and the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty.

Egypt is an important mainstay of the United States in promoting peace in the Middle East. In order to prevent its relations with Egypt from being interfered with by the Soviet Union, the United States satisfied, on the whole, Egypt's military and economic demands during Mubarak's visit to the United States. The United States has agreed to provide Egypt with $1 billion in economic aid in 1982 and increase the military aid from $900 million to $1.2 billion.

The Egyptian people once suffered from Soviet "aid" and they are fully aware of the Kremlin's astuteness and stratagem. Mubarak has stressed that Egypt's fundamental stand continues to be opposition to Soviet expansion and infiltration in the Middle East. However, the Soviet Union is attempting to take advantage of relaxation of Egyptian-Soviet relations to meddle in Egypt's internal affairs again and to have a hand in events in the Middle East. This will lead to the danger of an even more unstable situation in this area and can only arouse people's vigilance.

PRC GIVES FARM AID TO DEVELOPING COUNTRIES

OW280752 Beijing XINHUA in English 0737 GMT 28 Apr 82

[Text] Beijing, April 28 (XINHUA) -- China now provides agricultural aid to 22 developing countries in Asia, Africa, Latin America and Oceania, according to the Ministry of Agriculture. The ministry is building 32 agricultural projects in these countries, involving more than 300 Chinese agricultural experts, said an official of the Foreign Affairs Department of the ministry.

These projects include opening reclamation areas; building of agrotechniques popularization stations, scientific research experimental stations, vegetable, tobacco, veterinary and methane stations, tea plantations, silkworm breeding farms and agrotechniques training centers. The Chinese experts either undertake whole projects, including surveys, designs, construction, trial production and personnel training, or provide technical services.

Since the 1960s, China has been providing agricultural aid to the developing countries, the official said.

Chinese expert groups have delivered six or seven agricultural aid projects to the recipient countries in each of the past four years, while undertaking new projects, he said. They have already begun or will soon begin surveys on new agricultural aid projects in Kenya, Nigeria, Niger, Rwanda, Benin and Barbados.

In providing aid to other countries, China places emphasis on agricultural aid, he said. In building each agricultural aid project, Chinese experts also train technicians of the recipient countries to enable them to master techniques and learn managerial skills. In this way, the recipient countries will be able to expand their agricultural production with their own efforts, he said.

In the 1970s, the official said, Chinese experts helped Sierra Leone rebuild eight agro-techniques stations, build five new ones, and reclaim and transform 5,000 acres of farmland. China also undertook 80 agricultural projects in 40 countries, including Tanzania, Zambia, Zaire, Algeria and the Sudan. Most of these projects have been completed, he said. Working in these countries were groups of Chinese agro-technicians, veterinarians, and experts in vegetable, tea and cotton growing and silkworm breeding.

With the expansion of international multilateral economic and technical cooperation, he said, the number of the projects is increasing for which international organizations provide funds to the developing countries and China provides technical aid. With its experience in agricultural production, China will expand cooperation in this field with the developing countries, he said.

PRC AT REGIONAL TECHNICAL COOPERATION SEMINAR

[Text] New Delhi, May 1 (XINHUA) -- Technical Cooperation Among Developing Countries (TCDC) constitutes an important part of the struggle to break the old international economic order and to establish a new one. This was stated by Zhang Xianwu, Chinese representative to the "Regional Seminar on TCDC for Senior Government Officials of Asia and the Pacific," which was held here from April 23 to May 1.

He said that although China is still rather backward in economy and technology as compared with the advanced world level, the Chinese people are willing to share their accomplishments and expertise with other developing countries and introduce appropriate technologies to them. China also welcomes them to extend to it technical assistance in many areas.

The seminar was attended by representatives from 18 developing countries of Asia and the Pacific and observers from some developed countries. Many representatives emphasized the importance of TCDC. They considered it improper to raise the slogan of buying the most up-to-date and sophisticated technology from the developed countries. Instead they believed that technology from developing countries could be more suitable to developing countries.

WORLD FOOD PROGRAM POSTPONES SRV AID TALKS

OW281941 Beijing XINHUA in English 1914 GMT 28 Apr 82

[Text] Rome, April 28 (XINHUA) -- The committee on food aid policies and programs, leading body of the World Food Program, decided at its 13th session this afternoon to postpone discussion on food aid for "irrigation projects" in Vietnam's Tay Ninh Province. Representatives from Kampuchea, Thailand, Argentina, Britain, Canada, West Germany, Japan and the United States strongly opposed any discussion on such aids. They pointed out that Vietnam is using these aids for other purposes than production development. The examination of aid programs to Vietnam has been postponed for the third time since 1980.

RENMIN RIBAO COMMENTS ON U.S. ARMS TO TAIWAN

[Text] Beijing, May 2 (XINHUA) -- A PEOPLE'S DAILY commentary points out today that the maintenance of Sino-U.S. relations depends on whether or not Washington is determined to earnestly respect China's sovereignty and settle the issue of its arms sale to Taiwan. The commentary, entitled "He Who Ties the Knot Should Untie It" reads as follows:

At present, the world shows deep concern over the prospects of Sino-U.S. relations, because up to now no agreements have been reached in the negotiations between China and the United States on the issue of U.S. arms sale to Taiwan, and there still exists a crisis of relations between the two countries. People cannot but worry about the impact that any deterioration in Sino-U.S. relations, if it occurs, might produce on the international situation.

Everybody knows that the key to the development of the Sino-U.S. relations lies in an appropriate settlement of the issue of U.S. arms sale to Taiwan. China's position on this issue is always clearcut: Washington's arms sale to Taiwan constitutes an encroachment upon China's sovereignty and interference in its internal affairs. China will in no case tolerate a long continuation of U.S. arms sale to Taiwan. On its part, Washington insists on regarding arms sale to Taiwan as its own right and has refused to make a determination to settle the issue in earnest.

At the time when Sino-U.S. diplomatic relations were established, both sides solemnly declared that their relations should be based on mutual respect of each other's sovereignty and territorial integrity and non-interference in each other's internal affairs. Violation of these fundamental principles by any side would bring about harmful results to their normal relations. Since the United States has recognized that there is only ony China, Taiwan is part of China, and the Government of the People's Republic of China is the sole legitimate Government of China, it has no reason whatsoever to persist in selling arms to Taiwan, a matter which infringes upon China's sovereignty and interferes in its internal affairs. On this matter of principle concerning its national sovereignty, China will never retreat. If the United States clings obstinately to its course, it will inevitably bring the Sino-U.S. relations to a dangerous situation.

Some Americans, while claiming that they respect China's sovereignty and do not want to interfere in China's internal affairs or to follow a two-China policy, regard Taiwan as an independent political entity and insist that the U.S. has a right to sell arms to it. They even assert that in selling weapons to Taiwan, the U.S. is performing its "legal obligations" and that China has no say on this matter. Meanwhile, the U.S. side has repeatedly changed its tricks in an attempt to create "two Chinas" or "one China, one Taiwan" in disguised form. This self-contradictory, double-faced behavior shows that the U.S. only pays lip service to the principle of non-violation of China's sovereignty, but in practice goes against this principle. It affirms the principle in an abstract way and denies it in a concrete way: One may ask how can problems be solved when such an attitude is adopted? [THE RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese text of this commentary on page 6 reads: "...a concrete way; it affirms it in words but denies it in deeds. One may ask..."] The Chinese people will never barter away principles. On questions concerning its sacred sovereignty, there is no room for flexibility.

The Sino-U.S. relations are now at an important juncture. The problem of U.S. arms sale to Taiwan has reached a stage where it must be solved. As a Chinese saying goes, he who ties the knot should untie it. The time bomb of the arms sale issue which constitutes a threat to Sino-U.S. relations is created by the U.S. and can only be defused by Washington.

The maintenance of Sino-U.S. relations depends on whether or not Washington is determined to earnestly respect China's sovereignty in settling the issue of its arms sale to Taiwan. Only when the U.S. shows a concrete, not abstract; an explicit, not ambiguous sincerity in respecting China's sovereignty and not interfering in her internal affairs, and takes concrete actions in this respect can a retrogression in Sino-U.S. relations be avoided. Talking alone, however sweet it is to the ear and how ever often repeated, will not help in solving the problem. As for China, it will make its own effort for a favorable development in Sino-U.S. relations but at the same time it is fully prepared for a possible bad situation. [The RENMIN RIBAO text reads:"..."possible bad consequences."]

DEMONSTRATIONS CONDEMN U.S. ECONOMIC POLICIES

[Text] Washington, May 1 (XINHUA) -- Several thousand demonstrators marched through downtown Washington to the Capitol Hill and held a rally there this afternoon in protest against the Reagan administration's economic policies. The demonstration was organized by the "All-Peoples Congress," which is made up of about 700 labor, student, and other social organizations. The demonstrators shouted slogans such as "jobs, food, equality, human needs, not war."

Speakers at the rally voiced their complaints about the government's drastic cuts in social welfare and its increasing expenditures on military build-up. Some pointed out that the administration's economic policies are "unfair to the poor and minorities" and the cuts "are really hurting the people." A leaflet distributed by the All-Peoples Congress said: "The economy is very, very sick; but Reaganomics is making it even worse, especially for those already suffering, like the elderly and the chronically under-employed and discriminated against."

Today's demonstration marked the end of week-long nationwide protests reportedly involving over 100 cities and 800 campuses.

RENMIN RIBAO VIEWS SOVIET ENERGY DIFFICULTIES

[Article by Yan Zheng [0917 2973]: "The Soviet Union Faces Energy Difficulties"]

[Text] Recently, the Soviet leaders and press have repeatedly and openly talked about the energy difficulties of the Soviet Union, pointing out that fuel and power have been in "rather short supply" in the Soviet Union, that "there is a shortage to a certain extent," and that "the period of cheap energy resources has ended." Brezhnev personally called on people to show "special concern" for the problem of fuel and power.

The difficulties of the Soviet energy production have, first of all, been reflected in the drop of growth rate output year by year. The rate of production development is increasingly far from keeping pace with the demand of economic development. From the 1950's to the first half of the 1970's, the development of the energy production in the Soviet Union was fairly rapid. In 1958, coal production output reached 496 million tons, which exceeded that of the United States and ranked first in the world. In 1974, the Soviet oil output reached 460 million tons, which left the United States far behind and also ranked first in the world. Its natural gas output also ranked third in the world. However, from the mid-1970's onwards, the growth rate of Soviet energy production gradually slowed down. This tendency has been particularly marked in the production of oil, which forms the largest portion of the energy structure of the Soviet Union. The growth rate of oil production dropped from 6 percent in 1976 to 1 percent in 1981. The rate of decrease per year was almost 1 percent. From 1976 to 1980, oil production fell short of the planned target stipulated in the 10th 5-Year Plan by 34 million tons. The situation of coal production was even worse than oil. Each year's coal output was lower than the planned targets. Furthermore, from 1979 to 1981, coal output dropped for 3 years running. The output for 1981 fell short of the planned target by more than 30 million tons. During the 5-year plan period from 1976 to 1980, the actual generated energy fell short of the planned target by 85 billion kilowatt-hours. In the meantime, the plan for power station equipment and transmission line erection was not fulfilled. In energy production, only the production of natural gas has maintained a fairly high growth rate. However, at present its proportion of the energy structure is limited; therefore, its increase rate is not large enough to change the declining tendencies of the growth rate of the entire energy production of the Soviet Union.

In the meantime, the need for energy in the Soviet Union has constantly increased. It is estimated that to meet the demands of the development of the Soviet national economy, an annual increase of energy consumption amounting to 75 to 80 million tons of standard fuel is needed. However, in recent years, the annual increase of energy production in the Soviet Union has dropped to less than 70 million tons.

A few years ago, to promote energy production, the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union [CPSU] made special decisions and stressed that fuel and power departments should be regarded as "decisive" and "key" departments to the development of the national economy. It urged everybody to pay attention to them. The Soviet Union also put 30 percent of its industrial investment, 65 percent of its steel tubing, 1/5 of its rolled steel, 1/6 of its machine-building industry products and 40 percent of its volume of rail freight into energy production. It also meted out severe punishment such as removal from office for certain responsible cadres of the energy departments who failed to exercise "effective leadership." However, the vast amount of manpower and material and financial resources as well as administrative measures mentioned above were not able to put an end to the declining trend of the development rate of energy production. The main reasons for such a failure are:

Energy resources are continuously moving to the east and energy extraction has become more and more difficult. Although the Soviet Union is rich in energy resources, more than 90 percent of its total energy reserves are dispersed in the east.

The main energy consumption areas are in the European part located in the west of the Soviet Union. Now coal, oil and natural gas in the European part are nearly exhausted. Furthermore, some large oilfields in Siberia which play a decisive role in the energy production of the Soviet Union such as the largest, the Samotlor oilfield in Tyumenskaya Oblast, are in a state of excessive production. The Soviet natural gas reserves are dispersed in the areas which are further north than the oil resources. These areas are colder and much farther from the energy-consuming areas. The situation of coal is even worse. More than 80 percent of coal is produced east of the Urals and is dispersed in the frigid zone located ot the north of latitude 60 degrees north. Furthermore, about 3/4 of this coal is dispersed in the North Pole region locked in ice and snow. Under the present conditions of Soviet technology, it is particularly difficult to exploit the coal.

Moreover, the Soviet Union also lacks sufficient technical facilities, capital and manpower. The Soviet leading departments concerned have admitted that the most modernized technical facilities suitable for the conditions in Siberia "have not yet been produced to date." For example, due to weather conditions, most machines for manufacturing natural gas pipes can only operate for 5 to 6 months a year and cars with special equipment which can be used only account for 3 percent of the total number of cars. As for those cars which are not suitable for severe cold weather conditions, their rubber tires rupture and metal accessories crack as a result of freezing. The losses in this respect alone amount to R500 million every year. High-quality drills, heavy-caliber steel tubing, pit shafts and so forth are all imported. Due to the steady deterioration of production conditions and the increase of production costs, the capital construction investments for producing every cubic meter of natural gas in the eastern part of Siberia is 400 percent higher than in the Uzbek regions. Although the Soviet authorities use high wages and allowances to solicit workers, only a few workers are willing to work in the Siberian region. The number of people who are willing to stay there for a long time is even smaller. Five years ago, there was an adverse balance of the number of people who migrated and left the Siberian regions. In other words, the number of people who left exceeded the number of those who came. At present, although the situation has changed a bit, the rate of the fluctuation of population in this region is still very high. In some construction sites, the rate is as high as 100 percent. From time to time, workers are sent in rotation by plane from the old oil-producing areas in the European part to meet an urgent need.

The fact that the Soviet Union pays more attention to oil than to coal and more attention to extraction than to prospecting work has also complicated energy production. From 1970 to 1980, the Soviet industrial investment in oil increased from 8.8 percent to 11.6 percent whereas coal investment decreased from 6.1 percent to 4.4 percent. As a result, coal production has stagnated for a long time. In the meantime, the Soviet Union has also paid too much attention to the output of oil, and neglected prospecting work and the unfulfilled targets in prospecting work. Therefore, the ratio between verified energy reserves and extraction volume has continuously decreased in the Soviet Union, causing a gap between the new and old mining areas.

Energy production is of vital importance to the economic development of the Soviet Union. Energy is also the Soviet material guarantee for getting foreign exchange to import technology and grain from the West and controlling some East European countries. To find ways to extricate itself from the present difficulties, the 26th CPSU Congress specially formulated new energy policies: speeding up the production of nuclear energy, hydraulic energy and coal; increasing the production of natural gas; and devoting major efforts to economize on fuel and power. To extract its energy in Siberia, the Soviet Union is now using energy as a bait to absorb capital and technology from the West. In the meantime, the Soviet Union is trying to poke its nose into the Middle East and the Persian Gulf in order to get a strategic foothold in the oil region.

XINHUA VIEWS CURRENT MIDDLE EAST SITUATION

["Roundup: Israel Continues Policy of Hostility Against Arab People -- by XINHUA Correspondent Chen Peiming" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Cairo, April 28 (XINHUA) -- Israel is continuing to pursue a policy of hostility against the Arab people following its final withdrawal from the Sinai Peninsula on April 25. Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin announced in a speech on the second day after the withdrawal that even if the talks on Palestinian autonomy gained results, Israel would never evacuate from the West Bank, the Gaza Strip and the Golan Heights, and would never give up its domination in these Arab territories.

The Begin regime has recently more than once claimed that the Israeli evacuation from the Sinai was a "tragedy," a "sacrifice" that Israel had no other choice but to make. As for the other Israeli occupied Arab territories, it said, it would make no "concessions" whatsoever.

Israeli Defence Minister Ari'el Sharon even declared that the withdrawal from Sinai was the "limit of our concession." To show his determination, Begin is currently urging the parliament to pass a bill declaring that Israel will make no further withdrawals from its settlements in the occupied Arab land. It is obvious that the Begin regime has no intention to quit the homeland of the Palestinians and other Arab territories under its occupation, and is unwilling to realize a comprehensive and just peace in the Middle East.

As one Egyptian journalist wrote, what Israel wants is not a comprehensive peace for settling the Palestine issue. The purpose of Israel's signing of the Camp David accord with Egypt was to separate Egypt from other Arab states, and to use its so-called "autonomy talks" to prevent the Palestinian people from achieving self-determination and to deprive them of their legal rights to an independent state.

The United States expressed satisfaction over Israel's final withdrawal from the Sinai as scheduled. The U.S. wishes to have more participants in the peace talks, but it meanwhile refuses to recognize the Palestine Liberation Organization, denying the PLO's right to the negotiating table. It is known to all, however, that without the settlement of the Palestine issue, the Middle East peace talks would have no principal objective.

What the United States wants is, in fact, to maintain peace in the Middle East within its strategic pattern so as to resist Soviet expansion. But the current U.S. policy in the Middle East will, however, result in something quite contrary to its will. The Arab countries, on the other hand, have strongly demanded that the lost land be recovered and the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people be restored. Some Arab states have been expecting to iron out differences with Egypt following the return of its Sinai. They also hope that they will fight together with Egypt for the rights of the Arabs.

The way to a comprehensive and just peace may be long and difficult, but the Arab nations are becoming more closely united for the common goal.

PRC REPORTAGE ON SITUATION IN FALKLANDS

Foreign Ministry Spokesman

OW021701 Beijing XINHUA in English 1650 GMT 2 May 82

[Text] Beijing, May 2 (XINHUA) -- Following is the full text of a statement issued by a spokesman of the Information Department of the Chinese Foreign Ministry today in regard to Britain's military attack on the Malvinas (Falkland) Islands:

"Britain has subjected the Malvinas Islands to its military attack, thereby enlarging the sanguinary conflict between the British and Argentine troops and adding to the difficulty of seeking a peaceful solution. We deeply regret this serious development of events.

"We once again appeal to the two parties, Britain and Argentina, to halt their military actions immediately and prevent further worsening of the conflict. The resolutions adopted recently by the meeting of the Coordinating Bureau of Nonaligned Countries and by the consultative conference of the foreign ministers of American states should be respected.

"The fact that the United States as a mediator in this conflict has suddenly changed its attitude is obviously not conducive to the efforts of the international community for a peaceful solution of the Malvinas conflict and may give rise to serious consequences.

"The Chinese Government reiterates its hope that the two parties, Britain and Argentina, will immediately suspend their military actions and seek a reasonable and just solution of the Malvinas conflict through peaceful negotiations."

RENMIN RIBAO Commentary

[Short commentary: "The Malvinas Dispute Should Be Settled Peacefully"]

[Text] Due to the British troops' landing on South Georgia, the tension in the Malvinas Islands has been aggravated. In addition to this, the British Defense Ministry announced on 28 April that Britain would enforce a 200-mile sea and air blockade around the islands; while on the other side, Argentina claimed that it would not hesitate to resist the imminent British military attack. Many Latin American countries and nonaligned countries are deeply worried about further bloodshed in conflicts which might occur between Britain and Argentina.

Various countries and the world media are paying close attention to the situation in the Malvinas Islands. They have repeatedly urged Argentina and Britain to exercise great restraint and settle the dispute between them through peaceful negotiation. Some countries are even playing active roles in mediating between the two countries. Both Argentina and Britain declared that they would not resort to force. The British forces claimed that they would never fire the first shot, while the Argentine army announced that they would only launch a counteroffensive in the face of an armed assault. However, what is disturbing the world is that the attempt to settle the dispute by force or by means of armed intimidation somehow came to the surface while the negotiation was being carried on. This development has laid new obstacles and difficulties in the road to peacefully settling the dispute through diplomatic channels.

The Malvinas Islands (Falkland Islands) issue is one left behind by colonialism. The decolonization of the islands is imperative in our times as the Third World countries have risen and are growing in strength. All the resolutions adopted by the United Nations on this issue should be respected and enforced. With regard to the sovereignty of the islands, the nonaligned nations made known their clear-cut position many times from 1975 to 1981. At the recently convened conference of the Nonaligned Movement Coordinating Bureau, they once again declared their stand, via the conference's communique, in support of Argentina in demanding the sovereignty of the Malvinas Islands. They also appealed to all the parties concerned not to take any action which might harm the peace and security of the region, and to take the initiative to seek a peaceful settlement to the dispute. The consultative meeting of the Organization of American States [OAS], which recently closed, adopted a resolution, asking Britain to stop its hostile actions and urging the two countries to reopen diplomatic negotiations. All these resolutions and appeals of the above international organizations merit the attention of Britain and Argentina.

Feeling a great deal of concern over the serious situation in the Malvinas Islands, the Chinese people eagerly want both Britain and Argentina to try their best to restrain themselves and prevent the situation from being aggravated. They also hope that both countries can find a reasonable and fair solution to settle the Malvinas dispute through peaceful negotiations.

Reagan's Comments Cited

[Text] Washington, May 1 (XINHUA) -- U.S. President Ronald Reagan said today after the British attack on the Malvinas (Falkland) Islands this morning that the United States still "stands ready" to help find a solution to the dispute over the islands. "We hope there can be a peaceful solution.... I stand ready to be of help," Reagan said upon leaving the White House to open the World's Fair at Knoxville, Tennessee.

Later a State Department official told reporters that the United States did not have advanced warning of the British attack but said the United States "remains ready" to assist Britain and Argentina in finding a solution to the dispute. "We are in a very dangerous phase of the dispute. The United States remains ready to assist the parties in finding a fairly early settlement," the official said.

The United States yesterday blamed Argentina for "armed aggression" in the islands and suspended military sales and credits to that country after it said Argentina had rejected an American proposal. However, Argentine Foreign Minister Nicanor Costa Mendez denied in New York that Argentina has rejected the U.S. proposal. "We have made observations that do not mean rejection of the plan." He said Argentina is prepared to "negotiate" and "is always ready to comply with Resolution 502 and to accept intervention of the United Nations or any of its organs and, of course, of the secretary-general.

British Foreign Secretary Francis Pym is due to arrive in Washington this afternoon to meet U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig tomorrow before going to New York to meet the U.N. secretary-general to continue the search for a peaceful solution.

Latin American Response

[Text] Beijing, May 1 (XINHUA) -- Some Latin American countries yesterday expressed dissatisfaction with U.S. announced sanctions on Argentina and support for Britain in the Anglo-Argentine dispute over the Malvinas Islands. They demanded a justifiable solution to the dispute by peaceful means.

Peruvian President Fernando Belaunde Terry in a message to Argentine President Leopoldo Galtieri said: "At this hour when the Argentine nation is the victim of bellicose blockade and unjustifiable economic sanctions, the government and people of Peru are determined to give the support at our disposal in the defence of Argentina's legitimate national interests." "I also reaffirm our firm determination not to spare any effort to contribute to the restoration of peace (on the Malvinas Islands) based on justice," he said.

Peruvian Foreign Minister Javier Arias Stella also told reporters that the U.S. decision to support Britain and impose sanctions on Argentina was a "grave mistake." "Peru and surely all of Latin America has received with surprise and disappointment" the American decision, he added.

Ecuadoran Foreign Minister Valencia Rodriguez in a statement yesterday expressed deep concern about the U.S. decision. He announced that the Ecuadoran Foreign Ministry is now in urgent consultations with other Latin American countries, the Andes group nations in particular, to work out a common position on the situation. He said that as a partner to a treaty of mutual assistance among the American states, the United States should respect the resolution adopted at an emergency meeting of foreign ministers of the Organisation of American States not long ago. However, the decision ignored the obligation the United States undertook at that meeting.

Brazilian Foreign Minister Ramiro Saraiva Guerreiro in an urgent telegram to U.N. Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar said: "Given the continued aggravation of the crisis between Great Britain and Argentina, and the imminence of an armed conflict in the South Atlantic, the government of Brazil considers it is imperative that the mechanisms provided in the United Nations Charter be immediately activated to keep the peace and guarantee international security." "It is the responsibility of the United Nations to take swift and effective measures, including cautionary ones, to ensure the complementation of Security Council Resolution 502 in all its aspects," the telegram said. A Brazilian Foreign Ministry spokesman also said that Brazil opposed any type of unilaterally adopted sanctions.

Venezuela's Ambassador to the United Nations Hilarion Cardozo said the U.S. decision to support Britain would have "a grave affect" on U.S. relations with Latin American countries. "Aggression against a nation or part of our continent by an extra-continental force is totally unacceptable," he noted.

Chile's Foreign Minister Rene Rojas said that his country will remain neutral if war erupts between Argentina and Great Britain over the Malvinas islands. The Chilean Government has always stood for a peaceful solution to the disputes, he said.

Ye Jianying Greets Guests

[Text] Beijing, 30 Apr (XINHUA) -- Ye Jianying, vice chairman of the CCP Central Committee and chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, met at his home this morning with Overseas Chinese, compatriots from Hong Kong, Macao and Taiwan and well-known foreign nationals of Chinese origin in Beijing and celebrated "1 May" International Labor Day together with them.

At the meeting Ye Jianying and the guests talked about the restructuring of the administration now in progress. He said: We have a large number of veteran cadres who have struggled for decades and even more than half a century for the people's cause. Now, for age and health reasons, it is rather difficult for them to continue to hold first line leading posts. In the restructuring of state organs, these veteran cadres have on their own initiative asked to retire from their leading posts to do something within their abilities. Therefore, the current structural reform and personnel selection for leading bodies are progressing very smoothly. This is very encouraging.

Ye Jianying said: Our veteran comrades have, since the day they joined the revolution, cherished the ideal of thinking not of themselves but of the motherland and the people. And today it is out of consideration for the people's cause that they are retiring from the first line of leadership.

Ye Jianying said: You have come to Beijing from abroad, are all concerned about the motherland's cause and all have a fervent heart. This is extremely valuable. You all hope the motherland can be built up successfully. We now have the conditions to build up the motherland and we certainly can build it up successfully. In the current restructuring of state organs, it is first necessary to select good people for the leading bodies. With this problem properly solved, the pace of national construction will become faster. To do a good job in strengthening the leading bodies, we must rely on the joint efforts of veteran and new cadres, on scientific and general knowledge and on studying.

When the guest arrived, Comrade Ye Jianying stood at the door and shook hands with them one by one, exchanged greetings and posed for pictures with all of them. At the end of the meeting, he walked the guests into the yard. When an old Taiwan compatriot urged him to take good care of himself and to visit Ali Shan and Riyue Tan [Sun Moon Lake] when the motherland is reunified, Ye Jianying said: I hope to see Taiwan's return to the motherland to realize the great reunification cause.

Present at the meeting were Fei Yimin and his wife; Mei Wending and his wife; Mei Ziqiang; Huang Weqin; Wu Yongtai; Huang Shikai; Gao Wuyi; Huang Laishui; Zheng Shaolong; Lin Daguang; Yuan Xiaoyuan; Yang Mengdong and his wife; Chen Xuanyuan and his wife; Chen Xuanziang and his wife; Li Haian; and Li Jusheng.

Liao Chengzhi, vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, and others were present at the meeting.

OW301427 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1234 GMT 30 Apr 82

[Text] Beijing, 30 Apr (XINHUA) -- According to a report from XINHUA reporters Liu Huinian and Yu Jiafu, on the eve of May Day, representatives of model workers of China's national defense industry called on Nie Rongzhen, vice chairman of the Military Commission of the CCP Central Committee, to extend May Day greetings to him on behalf of the broad masses of workers of the national defense industry in the country.

This morning, Comrade Nie Rongzhen received at his residence these model workers who have come to Beijing to attend a national forum of model workers and advanced people. He jubilantly shook hands with each of them, asked them to sit beside him and held a cordial conversation with them. First of all he told them that he is now physically healthier than before.

He said: "We are fighters of the Long March. The new Long March depends on you people. The four modernizations represent the new Long March. The tasks of the new Long March are strenuous and difficult. You represent the main force cultivated after the liberation. The tasks of carrying out technical reforms and innovations and guiding the young people fall on your shoulders." He continued: "It is my belief that you are difinitely able to make still greater contributions to the modernization of national defense."

Among the model workers who called on Comrade Nie Rongzhen were Li Linzhuang, Lai Aiguang, Chen Huojin, Zhang Rongxiang, Wang Hanli and Chen Zhongsheng. Some of them are engineers and technicians who have made important contributions to the national defense industry, while others are "iron man-type workers." They briefed Nie Rongzhen on the achievements in China's national defense industry. Comrade Nie Rongzhen encouraged the model workers, saying: "You must not cease to make progress. The national defense industry must make fresh contributions to the modernization of national defense."

When the representatives of the model workers described how the staff and workers in their own units have worked hard, relied on their own efforts, learned from the advanced units and carried out technical innovations, Comrade Nie Rongzhen said: We have now adopted a policy of opening to the world, and it is necessary to import some advanced technology. But we should not regard everything foreign as good. We should exert our efforts to do research and make some things ourselves.

When the representatives of the model workers bid farewell to Nie Rongzhen, they expressed their determination to live up to the earnest expectation of their forerunners; to do a still better job in bringing into full play their leading and exemplary role as well as their role as a bridge, after they go back to their own units; to carry out their work well; and to strive to make still greater contributions to the modernization of national defense. Comrade Nie Rongzhen said: "Good! Right!"

Accompanying the representatives of the model workers of the national defense industry to call on Comrade Nie Rongzhen were President Ni Zhifu and Alternate Secretary Wang Shenxiang of the All-China Federation of Trade Unions.

MAY DAY EDITORIAL VIEWS SPIRIT OF WORKING CLASS

[Editorial: "Bring Into Full Play the Spirit of the Working Class as Masters of the Country"]

[Text] "Bright spring has returned to the earth." On the third May Day, the international labor festival, of the 1980's, we are happy to see that China's political situation is stable, agricultural production has recorded sustained growth, the development of light industry and daily necessities has been very rapid, heavy industry has also started to rise again from its decline, there has been a notable improvement in people's living standards, and the social atmosphere has started to turn for the better. What makes people particularly happy is that the streamlining of administrative structures and the struggle against serious economic crimes which have been launched this year are supported by the people of the whole country and have made good progress.

These achievements of our country have been scored as a result of the hard work of the workers and people of all nationalities under CCP leadership. The Chinese working class, rich in revolutionary tradition, has upheld the four basic principles and boldly forged ahead along the great road of socialism. Many labor models and progressive workers have brought into play the spirit of being masters of the country and made outstanding contributions, for which they are respected and admired.

The working class is the leading class in China. The sense of responsibility of the working class as masters of the country comes from a correct understanding of its historical mission, and is an expression of lofty revolutionary ideals and political awareness. By establishing revolutionary ideals and enhancing political awareness, they can understand the status they already have as masters of the country and strengthen their sense of responsibility in this respect.

Revolutionary ideals enable one to take a correct approach toward state affairs, work, love affairs, marriage and family problems, while helping improve the moral standards of society and the relations between people. Without revolutionary ideals, one cannot become a progressive member of the working class. Before liberation, from the "7 February" strike, the "30 May" movement, the Guangdong-Hong Kong strike, and the 3 armed uprisings of the Shanghai workers, right up to the 8-year war of resistance and the 3-year liberation war, the progressive elements of the older generation of the working class struggled bravely, advancing wave upon wave heedless of sacrifice, and took as their revolutionary ideal the overthrow of the "three great mountains" and the establishment of a new socialist China. Today we are encountering many new situations and have to solve many new problems in building socialism under new historical conditions. The question of how to help and teach the workers to establish revolutionary ideals is a major issue confronting the party committees and trade union organizations at all levels.

Marxism tells us that the workers cannot spontaneously develop socialist ideology. The working class can only become a class for itself from being a class in itself by being educated and imbued and by accepting scientific socialist ideology. In the past few years, there has been a big increase in the number of new workers in all trade and sectors, and more than half the work force now consists of young workers. They are new blood for the working class. They are filled with vigor, love studying and accept new things. They are generation with great prospects, and many of them have already become a backbone force in production and construction. However, there are also many young workers who know very little about the fine traditions of the working class and the historical mission shouldered by that class. Some of them have not yet developed the view of life of serving the people, while some do not understand the status of masters of the country that they hold; they always take an attitude of being a bystander regarding state affairs, and do not understand the reasoning that they should approach new labor with a new attitude. This situation poses an important task for us: In light of different historical conditions and of the characteristics of different sectors of the workers, we must carry out vivid and lively ideological and political work, organize the workers, especially the young ones, to study Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, modern history and the history of the party, and help them to develop the communist outlook on life. It must be pointed out that the cadres undertaking leadership work in the enterprises should make use of practical daily life to conduct this type of education for the workers. For instance, the leading cadres should set an example by doing their work in the spirit of being masters of the country; they should do a good job in convening workers' congresses and ensure the rights of the workers in managing the enterprises as masters of the house; and they should exert great efforts to solve as far as possible the practical difficulties in the workers' labor and daily life, and so on. Integrating political and ideological education with education in practical daily life in this way will enable the workers to further realize, not only in theory but also in practical life, that they are the masters of the country and the enterprises, and education in strengthening the sense of responsibility as masters of the country will yield practical results.

Activities to learn from the progressives and strive to become progressive are an effective way of carrying out education in revolutionary ideals and strengthening the workers' sense of responsibility as masters of the house. Under socialist conditions, the progressive nature of the working class is expressed in the fact that they are able to stand in the forefront of socialist construction and boldly create advanced labor norms and outstanding adchievements in work; that they are able to take the lead to practice and spread communist ideology and resolutely resist corruption by capitalist ideology, the remnants of feudal ideology and other decadent ideologies; and that they act as vanguards and models in building socialist material and spiritual civilization. Progressive workers and labor models are outstanding elements of the working class; they inherit and carry forward the revolutionary traditions and fine qualities of the working class, love the factory as they love their home, labor with selfless devotion, and boldly shoulder heavy burdens in the attitude of masters of the country.

In particular, since the third plenary session, they have resolutely implemented the party's line, principles and policies, and contributed all their talent and wisdom in building material and spiritual civilization. In learning from the progressive workers and labor models, we should learn from their sense of responsibility as masters of the country and emulate them in laboring for socialism with the attitude of being masters of the country, in viewing the affairs of state in the spirit of being masters of the country, and in handling various problems with the ideology of being masters of the country. This is very vivid and practical education for the workers. At present there is an extremely abnormal phenomenon in certain units: Progressive figures are satirized, oppressed, and dealt blows, with the result that some of them are afraid of being written up in the press, commended and rewarded. This is a sinister and bad trend of destroying the progressives. We must resolutely correct this phenomenon in which good things are not fragrant, bad things do not stink and uprightness cannot overcome evil.

Organizing the workers to discuss the question of "how to be an up-to-standard worker" and mobilizing them to spontaneously formulate and abide by worker rules and regulations are also effective ways of strengthening their sense of responsibility as masters of the country and enhancing the political quality of the worker ranks. In recent years, many industrial and mining enterprises have done this in Shanghai, Tianjin, Liaoning and elsewhere, scoring very good results. Worker rules and regulations are pacts for worker self-education, and are basic ideological and action guidelines to be observed by all the workers together. It is necessary to proceed from reality and have definite objects in view in organizing the workers to discuss and formulate worker rules and regulations, to avoid doing the thing in a formalistic way. Implementing rules and regulations must be integrated with strengthening mass political and ideological work, and practicing the rules and regulations must become the spontaneous action of the workers. They must strive to cultivate themselves into good workers with ideals, morals, discipline and culture. The trade unions, the organizations of the worker masses, should play a still greater role in this respect.

The situation is now improving every year. Although there are many difficulties yet to be overcome on the way ahead and many problems awaiting solution, the Chinese working class and the laboring people are full of confidence in the motherland's future. We will certainly be able to gradually build our country into a powerful socialist modern state with a high degree of democracy and civilization.

OW010804 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0703 GMT 1 May 82

[Text] Beijing, 1 May (XINHUA) -- Deng Xiaoping, Zhao Ziyang, Li Xiannian and other party and state leaders met with all representatives attending a national forum of model workers and advanced individuals as well as all members of a visiting group of young people of minority nationalities from border regions this morning at the Great Hall of the People. They had photos taken together.

Present at the meeting were Xu Xiangqian, Peng Zhen, Deng Yingchao, Wang Zhen, Wei Quoqing, Ulanhu, Fang Yi, Yu Qiuli, Zhang Tingfa, Geng Biao, Ni Zhifu, Peng Chong, Chen Muhua, Wan Li, Xi Zhongxun, Wang Renzhong, Yang Dezhi, Yao Yilin, Yang Shangkun, Zhu Xuefan, Yang Jingren, Wang Ping, Liu Lantao as well as responsible persons of the United Front Work Department of the CCP Central Committee, All-China Federation of Trade Unions, the State Nationalities Affairs Commission, the CYL Central Committee and Beijing Municipality.

Code of Conduct Adopted

OW022025 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1311 GMT 2 May 82

[Text] Beijing, 2 May (XINHUA) -- The national forum of representatives of model and advanced workers today unanimously adopted the "rules of conduct for workers and staff members in the whole country" as the moral standard and code of conduct to be observed by all workers and staff members in the country.

The text of the rules of conduct follows:

1. Ardently love the motherland, the Communist Party and socialism.

2. Ardently love the collective, work hard and practice economy, take good care of public property and actively participate in management.

3. Ardently love one's job, learn from and catch up with the advanced, improve quality and pay attention to efficiency.

4. Diligently study to improve one's political, cultural, scientific and technical, and professional level.

5. Observe discipline and abide by law, be honest in performing one's official duties and strictly enforce rules and regulations.

6. Care for comrades, show respect for masters and love for apprentices, maintain family harmony and unite with one's neighborhood.

7. Be civilized and courteous, clean and neat, and pay attention to social ethics.

8. Foster healthy tendencies, resist unhealthy trends and always be alert against corruption.

According to a responsible person of the All-China Federation of Trade Unions, the rules of conduct are formulated in order to implement the "decision on all-round consolidation of state-owned industrial enterprises" of the party Central Committee and the State Council. Prior to convening the forum of representatives of model and advanced workers, the All-China Federation of Trade Unions set up a "rules of conduct for workers and staff members in the whole country" drafting group. After 3 months of investigation and study and listening extensively to opinions of the masses of workers and staff members and leading cadres at various levels, a discussion draft of the rules was prepared. At the forum, the delegates seriously discussed and made changes to the draft.

The responsible persons said: There is a close relationship as well as clear distinction between the rules of conduct for workers and staff members and the factory regulations and discipline of enterprises. Factory regulations and discipline are administrative rules and regulations formulated by enterprises according to laws and decrees of the state, and the management of an enterprise can impose economic sanctions or take disciplinary actions as provided for against workers and staff members who have violated rules and regulations. In contrast, the rules of conduct are of the nature of a pledge for the masses of workers and staff members to educate themselves, or of a principle for positive guidance to be observed by all the workers and staff members. By implementing the rules of conduct for workers and staff members, the workers and staff members will receive an education in the fine traditions of the working class to strengthen their sense of responsibility as masters and increase their consciousness in observing state laws and decrees and factory rules and discipline. This is conducive to enforcing enterprise rules and regulations and consolidating labor discipline, healing the wounds caused by the 10-year turmoil, and turning the workers and staff members in the whole country into a progressive force which has the highest ideals, the strongest sense of organization and discipline, the greatest spirit as masters, the greatest devotion, and the greatest willingness to assiduously study modern science and technology.

Ni Zhifu Addresses Closing

[Text] Beijing, 2 May (XINHUA) -- The national forum of representatives of model and advanced workers, which closed today, made a proposal to workers and staff members throughout the country: The working class should march in the front ranks in building a socialist material and spiritual civilization in our country and bring into full play its role as the country's leading class. In the practice of building a socialist material and spiritual civilization, it should turn the country's workers and staff members into a progressive force which has the highest ideals, the strongest sense of organization and discipline, the greatest spirit as masters, the greatest devotion, and the greatest willingness to assiduously study modern science and technology.

The proposal also included the eight-article "rules of conduct for workers and staff members in the whole country" as the moral standard and code of conduct to be observed by all workers and staff members in the country. The proposal expressed the hope that workers and staff members of all nationalities throughout the country would actively take part in drawing up "rules of conduct for workers and staff members" adapted to the characteristics of each unit and based on the content of the "rules of conduct for workers and staff members in the whole country," and that each worker and staff member or each work team and group would also draw up a concrete plan for enforcement of the "rules of conduct for workers and staff members" to further enhance the consciousness and organization of the workers and staff members to make greater contributions to the socialist modernization program.

The forum opened on 27 April. During the meeting the delegates were cordially received by party and state leaders, listened to important speeches by central leading comrades, and celebrated the "1 May" International Labor Day together with the people in the capital. At the meeting, 18 model workers, advanced people who made outstanding achievements in building a spiritual civilization, and outstanding trade union workers reported on their advanced deeds and experiences to all the delegates.

Gu Dachun, vice chairman of the All-China Federation of Trade Unions, presided over today's closing session. Ni Zhifu, chairman of the All-China Federation of Trade Unions, made the concluding report.

Ni Zhifu said: Although the forum is not large in size, it reflects the distinct characteristics of the new period of historical development of our country. The overwhelming majority of the delegates are new, advanced and exemplary people who have come forward since the 3d plenary session of the 11th party Central Committee, and many old models have also made new contributions during this period. This fact eloquently proves the correctness of the party's line, principles and policies and the great successes they have brought about since the 3d plenary session of the 11th party Central Committee.

Ni Zhifu spoke highly of the advanced experiences exchanged at the forum. He said: Man must have some spirit. The spiritual wealth of the model workers and advanced people is very precious. We should, by launching extensive and in-depth mass activities to learn from and catch up with the advanced, spread their advanced experiences and revolutionary spirit among the masses of workers and staff members and the people in the whole country and push the building of material and spiritual civilization forward more vigorously.

Ni Zhifu then put forward a few opinions on further launching activities to learn from and catch up with the advanced:

1. The masses of workers and staff members should raise their consciousness in understanding the advanced and exemplary people and in learning form and catching up with the advanced; consciously respect, cherish, support and emulate the advanced thinking and exemplary actions of the advanced and exemplary people; and bring about an enthusiastic situation with everyone striving to become advanced and making contributions for building the material and spiritual civilization.

2. It is necessary to have the confidence and courage to learn from and catch up with the advanced, study diligently, strive to raise one's own communist political consciousness, carry forward the spirit of fighting for the success of the socialist modernization cause and courageously plunge into the mighty torrent of learning from and catching up with the advanced.

3. It is necessary to compare oneself with the advanced and find out where one lags behind; through the conscious actions of the masses of workers and staff members in learning from and catching up with the advanced, turn the advanced level of a few advanced and exemplary people into a level attained by the vast majority of workers and staff members; produce new advanced and exemplary people and create new and higher advanced levels; and push the cuase of socialist construction forward constantly.

Ni Zhifu called on the model workers and advanced people on all fronts throughout the country to bring into better play their role as initiators, backbones and bridges in activities to learn from and catch up with the advanced. He called on trade unions at all levels to bring into play their role as communist schools, to raise the class consciousness of the masses of workers and staff members, to enhance their sense of responsibility as masters, and to strive to open up new prospects for the four modernizations drive.

HU YAOBANG ATTENDS TIANJIN WORKERS MEETING

Addresses Meeting

OW012211 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1641 GMT 1 May 82

[Text] Tianjin, 1 May (XINHUA) -- Hu Yaobang, chairman of the CCP Central Committee, attended the model workers discussion meeting held by the Tianjin Municipal CCP Committee in Tianjin on the morning of 1 May. Speaking at the meeting, he expressed his hope to workers in Tianjin and the whole country: strive to open up new prospects for the four modernizations drive.

Hu Yaobang said: I am very happy to have heard you speak. On this glorious day of solidarity and militancy of the world's working class, we naturally think of the great historical mission shouldered by the Chinese working class. Our historical mission is to ultimately realize communism. However, at present and for some time to come, it is to open up new prospects for China's four modernizations. If we can open up such new prospects, we will be able to make our socialist motherland prosperous and powerful faster, and fulfill greater internationalist duties for the cause of world peace and human progress.

He said: We have many favorable conditions to take up this task. First, the Chinese working class is one of the world's most powerful working class forces. Chinese workers have grown in number from nearly 10 million before liberation to more than 100 million today. No country in the world has a working class as numerous as ours. Second, the Chinese working class has already become the master of the country, is one of the world's working class contingents with the fullest economic, political and social powers and can give full play to its intelligence and wisdom in all fields. This power of the working class and other laboring people as the masters of our country will become increasingly greater. Third, all the creative activities of the working class in our country are strongly protected and supported by the party and the state. The power of China's working class as masters was suppressed during the "Cultural Revolution" but we have corrected that. Of course, we still have bureaucracy at present, but the evil of bureaucracy is what we have always opposed. With the restructuring of state organs and improvement of party style, all the phenomena of the suppression of the initiative of workers and laboring people will be further corrected. In our country, many model workers and advanced people have come forward from among ordinary workers, and they are cherished and respected by the party, state and people. This is a concrete manifestation of the superiority of our socialist system.

He said: Of course, our working class also has its weak points. While celebrating our own festival, we should apply the law that one divides into two and give some thought to our inadequacies. I think we have two main weak points. First, in modern science and technology, culture and knowledge, we fall rather short and our level is still rather low. This is mainly because our country had long suffered from ruthless oppression by the three big mountains of imperialism, feudalism and bureaucrat-capitalism, and later again suffered from serious destruction by the "gang of four." There are now a large number of comrades diligently studying Marxism and grasping fairly advanced scientific, technological and general knowledge. However, quite a number of comrades still lack consciousness in this area. Second, the level of consciousness of being masters of the country is still uneven among the workers. Some people have a very high level of consciousness. Some people's consciousness is not so high. And there are a small number of people whose consciousness is rather low, and who even resign themselves to being backward. I think that in celebrating the festival, while fully affirming our achievements, we also should sharply point out our shortcomings and weak points. Only in this way can we do better in gloriously fulfilling our mission.

Hu Yaobang said: The Chinese Communist Party has led the Chinese working class and the Chinese people for 61 years in the great struggle to rebuild China. In the period of democratic revolution, we spent 28 years to overthrow the three big mountains and to found the People's Republic of China. Under the leadership of the Chinese Communist Party, the vanguard of the proletariat, our peasant brothers were the main force of the revolution at that time. This is because the Chinese revolution took the road of encircling the cities from the countryside and seizing political power by armed force. Now, in the socialist modernization drive, the peasantry is still a main force, and the conditions of the peasantry have an extremely important bearing on the country's future. However, as far as the requirements of modernization and the trend of social development in our country are concerned, the main force standing on the forefront in the cause of the four modernizations from now on should be the glorious Chinese working class.

He said: Lenin put it well: We must soberly take note of the actual state of consciousness and preparedness of the entire working class and the laboring masses as a whole. Today, we should strive to increase the consciousness of the entire working class and, at the same time, strive to enhance the construction ability of the entire working class. We must make up our mind to rotationally train workers in a planned way. The Communist Party members, CYL members, model workers and young workers should all take the lead in striving to raise their own political, technical and cultural level. During the Yanan period, Comrade Mao Zedong said: "The Chinese revolution has not yet triumphed and great efforts are still needed to unite the working class, the peasantry and the other sections of the petty bourgeoisie, the intellectuals, and the entire revolutionary people. This is a tremendous political and organizational task. The responsibility for its accomplishment rests on the Communist Party of China, on the progressive workers and on the entire working class. The ultimate liberation of the working class and the people as a whole will be achieved only under socialism, which is the final goal the Chinese proletariat must struggle to attain." The working class must strive to strengthen its own unity in order to better unite all the revolutionary people in the struggle for the common task."

Hu Yaobang said: We have traveled a tortuous road since the founding of the People's Republic. Now, in guiding ideology, we have accomplished the task of bringing order out of chaos. From now on, if we adhere to the correct Marxist line formulated since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, if the working class gives full play to its exemplary vanguard role and its role as the main force, if the peasant masses continue to work hard, and if the workers, peasants and intellectuals closely cooperate among themselves and with all patriotic personages, make up their minds and fight in unity, our country has very bright prospects and will assuredly be greatly developed by the end of the 20th century.

Hu Yaobang said: Tianjin's working class is a good force. It is of rather high seniority among the country's working class forces and has a glorious revolutionary tradition. In the past few years, it has displayed relatively high enthusiasm and has made remarkable achievements in developing production, fighting earthquakes and providing disaster relief, rebuilding the city, building a socialist spiritual civilization and so forth. The PLA units stationed in Tianjin have closely coordinated with local authorities and also made gratifying contributions to the four modernizations drive. The CCP Central Committee hopes that Tianjin's working class will greatly boost its revolutionary morale and become one of the forces in the foremost ranks among the country's working class as a whole. The CCP Central Committee also hopes that the country's working class will, as a whole, work hard to temper itself into a progressive force which has the highest ideals, the strongest sense of organization and discipline, the greatest spirit as masters and the greatest devotion, and is most willing to assiduously study modern science and technology, temper itself into a steel-like working force which works hard to make the country prosperous and strong, keeps on fighting despite setbacks, is capable of overcoming any difficulty and constantly pushes the four modernizations program forward.

She said with emotion: "My mother gave birth to me, but the party educated me. I can never finish talking or singing about my gratitude to the party. I am 69 years old. I will continue to sing and will train the younger generation." Comrade Hu Yaobang urged her: "Don't wear yourself out." Luo Yusheng said: "I don't feel tired but feel that I have more energy than I can use." Comrade Hu Yaobang warmly shook hands with Luo Yusheng and said: "I hope you will live to be 100."

Comrade Hu Yaobang also posed for pictures with the workers.

INTERVIEW WITH TRADE UNION OFFICIAL CHEN YU

[Text] Beijing, May 1 (XINHUA) -- Congresses of workers' representatives have been established in 95 percent of large and medium-sized enterprises in China's major industrial cities, a top Chinese union leader told XINHUA on the occasion of May Day, the International Labor Day. The system, which enables rank-and-file workers to participate in company management, has been instituted in well over 100,000 factories and mines in all parts of the country, according to Chen Yu, vice-chairman of the All-China Federation of Trade Unions. These Chinese trade unions, he said, now have nearly 70 million members. At present, the unions' primary task is to help establish and improve the system of workers' congresses in the factories and mines to enable the workers to exercise their democratic rights. The congress in each factory or mine has the right to examine and make decisions on the factory's plans for production and technical transformation. It supervises the work of leading cadres in the factory. "In many enterprises, factory managers, workshop heads and other leaders have been chosen through election," he said. "The trade union organization in the factory is the organ of work of the workers' congress."

"At present and for a fairly long period to come," he said, "the central task of the Chinese people is to build China into a highly democratic, highly cultured, powerful socialist country with modern industry, agriculture, science and technology and national defense. This is also the central task of the Chinese trade unions." To help achieve the goal, he continued, the unions will help mobilize the workers through various forms of socialist emulation.

Chinese unions are mass organizations, organized on the initiative of working people, he said. "As such, the unions represent the interests of the workers and help them solve practical problems in their life and work." "The unions also concern themselves with improvement of the working conditions in factories and mines and the living conditions of the workers," he said. In the past three years, five million workers' families have moved into new housing built for them, and the average wage of the workers has increased by 25.7 percent.

From now on, we must continue to unswervingly uphold the four basic principles and ensure that our country successfully advances along the broad socialist road.

CPPCC's Burhan

OW021105 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0045 GMT 2 May 82

[Text] Beijing, 2 May (XINHUA) -- Burhan, vice chairman of the CPPCC National Committee and honorary chairman of the China Islamic Association, has commented on the nationwide discussion of the draft revised constitution. He said that the draft revised constitution is an account of the results achieved by the CCP in leading the people of all nationalities in waging a struggle of extreme hardships and difficulties over a long period of time and that it reflects the interests and wishes of the people of all nationalities throughout the country.

In his remarks made to a XINHUA reporter, the 89-year-old Burhan enthusiastically praised the fundamental principles of the draft revised constitution. He touched particularly on the importance attached to nationality affairs in the draft revised constitution. He said: The draft revised constitution has expanded the autonomous rights of national autonomous areas. It stipulates that chairmen of autonomous regions and heads of autonomous prefectures and counties are to be appointed from among personnel of the nationality that exercises autonomy. Guided by state plans, the organs of self-government in national autonomous areas will decide for themselves how to manage affairs concerning local economic construction as well as concerning education, science, culture, public health, physical culture and sports. The state must take into consideration the interests of national autonomous areas when it exploits resources or sets up enterprises in such areas. The draft revised constitution also stipulates that the state helps national autonomous areas in training a large number of cadres of all levels as well as various types of professionals and technical workers from among the local people of various nationalities, and also helps the various national minorities financially, materially and technically in accelerating their economic construction and cultural development.

In my opinion, these provisions are of profound significance in promoting the great unity based on socialism among the people of all nationalities to join in socialist modernization. As far as the vigorous training of minority cadres is concerned, minority cadres have closer relations with the local people and better understanding of the culture, customs and mentality of the people of national autonomous areas. Therefore, provided they can foster the ideology of serving the people wholeheartedly, they will be better able to serve the local people and do a better job in carrying out their various tasks.

Touching on the issue of religion, Burhan said: The draft revised constitution has restored and improved the relevant articles in the 1954 constitution and stipulates that every citizen enjoys the freedom of believing or not believing in religion. This is the consistent attitude of Marxism and Leninism in dealing with this issue. The overwhelming majority of personages of religious circles in our country are patriotic. Practice proves that the state's respect for the freedom of religious belief among its citizens tends to arouse their enthusiasm in the common effort to build up the country.

Burhan said: The draft revised constitution has now been published for discussion by the people throughout the country. It is my belief that by soliciting the collective wisdom of the people of the whole country, we can certainly make the draft revised constitution become more perfect.

2d Plenum Held 23 Apr

SK240829 Jinan Shandong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 23 Apr 82

[Excerpts] The 2d plenum of the 13th session of the 5th provincial people's congress standing committee was held on the morning of 23 April. The meeting unanimously adopted the resolution of the provincial people's congress standing committee on implementing the two decisions on dealing blows at serious economic crimes and heard a report by Vice Governor Zhang Jingtao on preparations for the third census and suggestions for the census, a report by (Guo Chengcai), deputy director of the provincial financial department, on the province's 1981 financial final accounts and the 1982 fiscal budget and a report by (Kui Dong), director of the provincial environmental protection bureau, on increasing the province's sewage disposal fee. Xu Jianchun, vice chairman of the provincial people's congress standing committee, presided over yesterday's plenum. Group discussions, which started yesterday afternoon, will run for a day and a half.

The resolution on implementing the two decisions on dealing blows at economic crimes reads: Economic crime in our province is rampant. The struggle against criminal activities in the economic sector is gradually being carried out.

The decision of the NPC Standing Committee on harshly punishing economic criminals and the decision of the party Central Committee and the State Council on striking blows at serious economic crimes are very important and practical. These decisions are absolutely in accord with our province's situation. The plenum unanimously and warmly supports these two decisions and urges governments at all levels and various units to earnestly implement these decisions and carry this struggle through to the end.

Lu Shengyun, chief procurator of the provincial people's procuratorate, delivered a report on our province's effort to deal blows at economic crimes and his suggestions for the future work at the 13th session of the 5th provincial people's congress standing committee held on 21 April. He said: After the promulgation of the decision of the Fifth NPC Standing Committee on harshly punishing economic criminals, our province's people's procuratorates at all levels have immediately gone into action. In the course of studying these decisions, they have promptly studied specific measures to publicize and implement these decisions. By using law as a weapon, grasping this opportune time and coordinating with relevant departments, they have resolutely dealt blows at criminals in the economic sphere and urged them to clearly understand the situation and frankly confess their crimes, and have achieved noticeable results. According to incomplete statistics, by 15 April, 155 economic criminals in our province had voluntarily surrendered and confessed their crimes and returned 318,000 yuan of ill-gotten money and some spoils valued at 36,000 yuan. More than 1,400 economic crimes were exposed by the masses. Those who were held in custody confessed their crimes. Lu Shengyun said: Judging from the cases investigated in the previous period and the problems exposed by the masses, economic crimes in our province are currently very serious and criminal activities are rampant. Such cases as smuggling, trading in smuggled goods, embezzling, accepting bribes, speculating and swindling are astonishing. A considerable number of the cases have involved state personnel and cadres who were affected by the corrosive influence of bourgeois ideology. They colluded with persons inside and outside and from higher to lower levels to engage in criminal activities. The number of criminals involved, the amount of money embezzled, the scope of criminal activities and the complexity of criminal cases were even more serious than in the period of the 1950's -- the period of the three antis campaign. Criminals involved in embezzlement of over 10,000 yuan and who are now under investigation and prosecution account for 8.5 percent. According to the province's incomplete statistics, some 440,000 yuan of spoils were caputured for the state from the exposed economic criminal cases.

Budget Report Adopted

[Excerpts] According to our sources, on the afternoon of 25 April, the 13th meeting of the 5th provincial people's congress standing committee adopted a resolution on the 1981 provincial fiscal final account and the 1982 budget. The resolution notes: The 1981 provincial revenue and expenditure situation was good; revenue and expenditures were basically balanced, and achievements in this regard were very great. The arrangements for the 1982 budget are based on the guiding ideology that first we must eat, second we must construct and the stability and continuity of policies should be maintianed as well as on the principles of acting according to one's capability and achieving balance between revenue and expenditures. The arrangements are in conformity with our province's actual conditions.

However, we should note that the deficits accumulated in the past 2 years have not been made up. Contradictions between the demands and possible supply of funds are very conspicuous. Many unpredictable problems map crop up in the course of implementing the budget. Therefore, to fulfill the 1982 financial budget, arduous struggle and great efforts are needed.

People's governments at all levels and various units should continue to implement the readjustment principle, open up production avenues to increase production and make efforts to turn out products of good quality and low cost and having available markets to enliven the market and increase revenue. We must adhere to the principle of giving highest priority to the planned economy and taking the whole country and the overall situation into account, achieve an overall balance in finance, credit, supplies and foreign exchange and prevent blind factory construction and blind production to avoid new economic dislocation. We should also vigorously raise economic results, practice economy, reduce consumption, reduce production costs, convert deficits into profits and eliminate waste and losses in production, construction, circulation and administrative undertakings. We should resolutely struggle against serious criminal activities in the economic field, combine this struggle with financial inspection and enterprise consolidation, strengthen financial management, rigorously enforce financial discipline and plug loopholes to reduce revenue and increase expenditures. As for such unlawful activities as evading taxes, retaining profits, recklessly issuing bonuses and squandering and wasting state funds and property, the economic responsibility will be investigated. Those involved in serious situations should be punished according to law.

Entrusted by the provincial people's government, (Guo Changpai), deputy director of the provincial financial department, made a report on 21 April at the above meeting on the 1981 provincial fiscal final account and the 1982 financial budget. The report notes: The results of the 1981 fiscal final account are better than the estimates. The province fulfilled the revenue budget by 105.67 percent, up 6.39 percent over the previous year, and fulfilled the expenditure budget by 101.37 percent, a decrease of 14.91 percent from the previous year. In local finance, income balanced expenditures. According to a general calculation, the province suffered a deficit of 46 million yuan in 1981, basically achieving a balance between revenues and expenditures [as heard]. The report notes: Our province's financial situation improved in 1981. However, deficits over the years were not made up. Thus, we should not be unrealistically optimistic and neglect this issue. Compared with the 1981 provincial fiscal final account, the 1982 budget for revenue increases by 1.59 percent and that for expenditures increases by 7.88 percent. Although the financial target is arduous, there are many favorable conditions. We should enhance our spirit, strengthen confidence, double our efforts to increase revenue and reduce expenditures and strive to achieve balance between revenues and expenditures this year.

[Excerpts] According to our sources, the broad masses of rural commune members throughout the province have engaged in field crop sowing under a drought seldom seen in history. As of 23 April, the province sowed 11.5 million mu of field crops, one-third of the plan. In Tieling Prefecture, where the progress in sowing is faster than in other places, over half the crop fields have been sown. The area sown to field crops this year is 3.77 million mu less than last year. Nevertheless, it is really a hard-won gain that we have sown over 10 million mu of field crops under such a serious drought.

Chaoyang Prefecture has had no heavy rainfall for over 30 months, since the autumn of 1979. Dalian Prefecture suffers from a spring drought, the first since the weather forecast service was established 77 years ago. Drought extends from Chaoyang Prefecture and Jinzhou, Fuxin and Luda municipalities to 11 prefectures and municipalities. Only Dandong municipality has escaped. As of 23 April, 31 million mu of farmland were stricken by drought, of which 17 million mu were seriously affected. In late February, the provincial CCP committee and the people's government held an emergency antidrought meeting. The party and government departments at the provincial, municipal, prefectural and county levels have organized many cadres to mobilize and lead the masses in rural areas to combat drought and develop sowing.

An editorial note of this station says that our province is suffering from a serious and widespread drought seldom seen in history. Under the leadership of the party and governments at all levels, the broad masses of commune members are carrying out a tenacious struggle against the drought. Over 10 million mu of field crops have been sown, but another 20 million mu of field crops remain to be sown. All paddy fields have not yet been transplanted with seedlings. Worse still, the soil moisture situation is deteriorating. The ravages of drought have become more serious in Ahshan, Yingkou and Liaoyuan municipalities and in Tieling Prefecture. If we fail to adopt effective measures to grasp sowing, some communes and brigades will delay their farm work and their farmlands will lie idle. Cadres at all levels and the masses of commune members should gain a full understanding of the seriousness of the present drought, eliminate the idea of leaving things to chance and foster the ideology of combating drought to win a good harvest.

QINGHAI ON PREPARING FOR NATURAL DISASTERS

SK020528 Xining Qinghai Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 1 May 82

[Excerpts] According to our sources, Comrade Zhao Haifeng dwelt on current major tasks at the provincial party representatives' meeting. He discussed four tasks, the first of which is to conscientiously do a good job in economic work and strive to fulfill all production tasks for this year.

With regard to current agricultural and livestock production, Comrade Zhao Haifeng said: Our province had much snow and rain this spring. Soil moisture content is relatively adequate. The quality of farm work is relatively good. All these conditions are favorable to reaping a bumper harvest. However, we should by no means lower our guard. Instead, we should rather overestimate our difficulties. According to weather department forecast, our province's climate will be characterized by various disasters this year. We must be fully prepared mentally and materially to combat various natural disasters. Since the beginning of spring, most areas of Huangnan, Hainan, Golog and Yushu Prefectures have had several heavy snowfalls, which caused much damage.. All localities have actively carried out activities to combat disaster and protect livestock. In view of the recent situation, the damage is escalating, resulting in the death of a large number of livestock. All prefectures and counties should understand the seriousness of the problem, consider it a major task and do a good job in combating disaster and protecting livestock. All departments should provide close cooperation and support to afflicted areas. With regard to our province's industrial production, Comrade Zhao Haifeng said: The provincial CCP committee has emphasized the need to attain a certain speed in developing industrial production this year and to markedly improve economic results. We have gained some speed, but we have failed to markedly improve economic results. Except for stockpiling of products caused by [words indistinct] and changes in markets, our failure is attributable mainly to long-time pursuit of output value, neglect of economic results and ineffective management. We must shift the guiding thought in economic work to raising the economic results and better harmonize speed and economic results.

The second task is to concentrate on key links and fulfill the target of achieving a greater turn for the better in the party style. The third task is to relentlessly and effectively build the socialist spiritual civilization. The fourth task is to do a better job in the national united front work, bring into play positive factors in all circles and develop the political situation of unity and stability.

HSIN WAN PAO URGES SOLVING ARMS SALE PROBLEMS

Patience 'Reached Limit'

HK020749 Hong Kong HSIN WAN PAO in Chinese 2 May 82 p 1

["New Talk" column: "Let Us See If Bush Can Untie the Knot"]

[Text] U.S. Vice President Bush will visit China this week. So far he is the highest ranking official of the Reagan administration to come to China.

Bush has expressed himself as very keen on this China visit. Even before he had received an official invitation, he said that he intended to make China the last stop on his trip to various Asia-Pacific region countries. After starting out on his travels he again spoke of his hopes of visiting China. Last Tuesday, Washington finally announced that arrangements had been made for his visit, and Beijing released the news of his official visit 48 hours later.

Bush said he intends to have broad-ranging discussions on foreign policy issues with Chinese leaders; he said Taiwan is one of the series of issues, and not the crux of his visit.

However at present there is a crisis in Sino-U.S. relations, and this arises from U.S. dealings with Taiwan; the time has now come to solve the question of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan. There is no way Bush can avoid this question in his talks in China.

Under the Carter administration, Bush served as director of the U.S. Liaison Office in China. This trip is the second he has made to China under Reagan's commission. The last time Reagan sent Bush to China was before the inauguration. Reagan himself was making speeches at home about "two Chinas," with the result that the efforts of Bush were all wasted. Now Bush is coming as vice president, with Reagan as president, and his performance should not be like last time!

The Reagan administration's handling of the question of arms sales to Taiwan has planted a timebomb in Sino-U.S. relations. Will the Bush visit dismantle this bomb? Or will it set it off? Of course it is also possible that the timebomb may continue to be buried there, but such a state of affairs could certainly not last long. "He who ties the knot should untie it;" only the United States can dismantle the bomb.

While saying that the Bush visit cannot eliminate all Sino-U.S. differences at one stroke, the United States has also released all kinds of "atmospheres" and devised all kinds of "formulas," with the sole intention of having China accept continued U.S. arms sales to Taiwan. It is necessary to make two things clear to those people who rack their brains to preserve the bomb instead of dismantling it:

First, the United States must first be sincere in respecting China's sovereignty. If it departs from this principle, words, however sweet, will certainly be seen through, and it will be absolutely impossible to scrape through by speaking ambiguously.

Second, China is still making efforts to improve relations, but her patience has already reached the limit now that the United States has proposed selling Taiwan another batch of military parts this month.

As Bush is so enthusiastic about coming, will he be able to untie the knot?

American Attitudes Discussed

HK030855 Hong Kong HSIN WAN PAO in Chinese 3 May 82 p 2

["New Talk" column: "We Cannot Comply With the American Diehards"]

[Text] After the news that Vice President Bush would visit China was released, the granite-headed Senator Goldwater expressed his opposition; he declared that it was a U.S. right to sell arms to Taiwan and that Bush should not go to Beijing for discussions on this issue.

There are also a number of people in the Reagan administration who, basing their reasoning on the domestic rightwingers, demand that China compromise and allow the United States to continue selling arms to Taiwan. They say, Reagan cannot promise not to sell arms to Taiwan, otherwise he will get into political trouble. This of course cannot become a cause for such. Domestic political considerations cannot act as explanations for international moves. If China allows Reagan to interfere in its sovereignty on account of his political troubles, this will be tantamount to complying with the American diehards and allowing them to pursue hegemonism.

Reagan, not Goldwater, is president now, and if Reagan cannot act as the master but does what Goldwater says, his presidential status and political power will be in doubt; if he is intent on selling the arms, then Sino-U.S. relations should be allowed to retrogress, and China can wait until another U.S. president appears with the ability to lead and to properly carry out its international obligations, and then look into restoring relations.

Some Americans say that the Reagan administration hopes to maintain relations with China and recognizes China's sovereignty over Taiwan, but hold there is no harm in using somewhat abstract and ambiguous language and behaving in a somewhat equivocal fashion, in order to help Reagan explain things to the domestic rightwingers. They advocate that the United States issue a statement couched in the terms of the "Shanghai communique," and then continue selling arms to Taiwan. The "Shanghai communique" was praised as something new in diplomacy. It both sets out the points in common between China and the United States and also clearly states their differences; on key issues in dispute, it employs rather vague forms that both sides can accept. The "Shanghai communique" got Sino-U.S. relations started on the road to normalization, however it could not immediately accomplish the establishment of diplomatic relations between the two countries. What followed this communique was only the establishment of liaison offices, not embassies, in Beijing and Washington.

It was the communique on the establishment of diplomatic relations that led to the opening of ambassadorial level relations. This communique is not ambiguous at all. It states quite plainly that the United States acknowledges that the PRC Government is the sole legal government of China, that there is only one China, and that Taiwan is part of China. Does this say anything about treating Taiwan as an independent political entity? Is there any doubt about China's sovereignty over Taiwan?

China and the United States could only establish ambassadorial level relations when the United States recognized not only one China but also PRC sovereignty over Taiwan; when it not only "affirmed the ultimate aim of withdrawing all U.S. forces and military installations from Taiwan," but also set a deadline for this withdrawal.

Any negation of the principles for the establishment of diplomatic relations, even if it is "abstract affirmation and specific negation," mean a retrogression, and the consequences are predictable. Hence the Reagan administration must respect China's sovereignty and must not regard selling arms to Taiwan as a U.S. right; it must be resolved to solve this issue, and cannot continue selling arms for a long time.

WHITE HOUSE, CONGRESS DEBATE 1983 BUDGET

[Text] Beijing, April 29 (XINHUA) -- The month-long secret negotiations between the White House and the U.S. Congress on how to cut down the 1983 budget deficit ended in failure Tuesday. Secretary of Treasury Donald T. Regan had described the negotiations as "the most tedious process I have ever seen."

The new U.S. budget submitted to the Congress by President Ronald Reagan on February 8, though advocating sweeping reductions in civil expenditures, still has a deficit of as high as 91.5 billion U.S. dollars because of increase in defence spending and income tax cut. Reagan's budget proposals have not only met with opposition from Democrats but also criticism from many Republicans. They warned that if no action was taken to tone down the scope of increase in defence spending and the decrease in income tax cut, the deficit would reach 180 billion dollars. However, President Reagan was adamant as he indicated time and again that he would not go back on his original stand and even asserted that he has the power of veto. To avoid open confrontation, leaders of the two parties in the Congress and White House advisers have been meeting in secret since late March, under the suggestion of Senate Republicanleader Howard Baker. Therefore, the Congress has put off deliberations of the new budget scheduled for April 13.

For the past month and more, the negotiators have met 13 times, expressing satisfaction over the progress made during the meetings at one time and pessimism about the prospects of the meeting at other. The key figures of the meeting -- President Reagan and House Speaker Thomas O'Neill -- have remained behind the scenes. It was only in last week that Reagan told O'Neill over the telephone that he was "willing to go the extra mile" to achieve a compromise. But the latter complained that Reagan has not taken any concrete actions. Under a White House arrangement, Reagan again went to Capitol Hill yesterday to meet O'Neill and Baker, but again failed to reach a package agreement. It was disclosed that the two sides had agreed the deficit would rise to 180 billion dollars if no action was taken. They thus had set a goal of cutting it to no more than 100 billion dollars. They also reached agreement on reducing civil expenditures and cutting down defence spending, although they still have wide differences over income tax cuts. Democrat congressmen insist that the decision to cut income tax by another 10 percent in 1983 be cancelled, or they would not approve cutting welfare expenditures. However, the White House believes that it would be impossible to change the decision on tax cut, but only such measures as levying surtax on people with high-income and raising oil import tariffs could be put under consideration. As a rule, the Congress must adopt the budget before May 15. As time is running out and there is little hope for Congress and the White House to reach compromise in private, congressmen of both parties have set about preparing their separate budget proposals.

The White House-Congress debate on budget deficit has aroused concern of all the Americans. This was only natural because the trend of interest rates is closely connected with the size of budget deficit. Without the drop of interest rates the American economy which is now in a recession, can hardly be expected to turn for the better.

ANTIGOVERNMENT DEMONSTRATIONS HELD IN SEOUL

[Text] Pyongyang, April 29 (XINHUA) -- Several hundred young people staged an anti-government demonstration in downtown Seoul on April 27 and clashed with the police, according to reports from Seoul. It was the second consecutive night that an anti-government street demonstration occurred in that city.

Young people flocked into a church for a two-hour prayer meeting for political prisoners. Later, about 200 to 300 protesters marched from the church toward the intersection near the parliament building, singing anti-government songs. The protesters clashed with several hundred riot police who tried to break up the march. About a dozen demonstrators were taken to a nearby police station.

On the same day, a group of family members of political prisoners distributed copies of a statement demanding the unconditional and immediate release of political prisoners. The statement accused the South Korean authorities of continuing the arrests and trials of patriots.

JAPANESE POLITICIANS DEBATE NO-WAR CONSTITUTION

[Text] Tokyo, May 3 (XINHUA) -- Japanese political parties are expressing their different views about the war-renouncing stipulation in the Japanese Constitution. The present Japanese Constitution was enacted 35 years ago on May 3, 1947. It stipulates in Article Nine that "the Japanese people forever renounce war as a sovereign right of the nation and the threat or use of force as means of settling international disputes" and that "land, sea, and air forces, as well as other war potential, will never be maintained. The right of belligerency of the state will not be recognized."

The MAINICHI SHIMBUN today carried a public opinion survey showing that 70 per cent of the picked people stand for a maintenance of this article. Opposition parties organized meetings in Tokyo to voice support for the maintenance of the stipulation. The Socialist Party and the General Council of Trade Unions of Japan are opposed to any revision of the article. The Komei Party and the Japanese Confederation of Labor appeal for maintaining the Constitution. However, the opposition parties have different views about war-renouncing Article Nine. The Socialist Party stands for a state of neutral and unarmed Japan, saying that the presence of the Japanese self-defense forces is unconstitutional. The Komei Party, the Democratic Socialist Party, the New Liberal Club and the Socialist and Citizens League are opposed to a revision of the Constitution, but they agree to the existence of the Japanese-U.S. security treaty and deem the building of the self-defense forces constitutional.

The Liberal-Democratic Party's League of Dietmen for an Independent Constitution stands for a revision of the Constitution. At a meeting here today the league held that the Constitution does not suit the present conditions in Japan and that therefore a new constitution should be enacted independently. However, there are also different views on the subject within the ruling Liberal-Democratic Party. The YOMIURI SHIMBUN said today that Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki "takes a prudent attitude" on this question.

Representatives of the two opposing views met here yesterday and had a three-hour debate on Article Nine of the Constitution.

GU MU ATTENDS MEETING OF CHINA-JAPAN SOCIETY

Meets Japanese Delegation

OW021614 Beijing XINHUA in English 1605 GMT 2 May 82

[Text] Beijing, May 2 (XINHUA) -- Vice-Premier of the State Council Gu Mu this evening met with a Japanese delegation to the second annual meeting of the China-Japan Society for Exchange of Economic Information. The 12-member delegation is being led by Saburo Okita.

The first society meeting took place in Japan in May 1981. The current Beijing meeting will discuss the supplementary role of regulation through market under a planned economy, the technical transformation of China's enterprises and other related issues.

Gu Mu said though Sino-Japanese economic and cultural exchanges began long ago, the society is a better exchange forum than others. He hoped the society would continue to play a still greater role in strengthening the cooperative relations between China and Japan.

Present were Chinese society representatives Ma Hong and Xue Muqiao. The delegation arrived this afternoon.

Attends Meeting

OW031849 Beijing XINHUA in English 1550 GMT 3 May 82

[Text] Beijing, May 3 (XINHUA) -- The second annual meeting of the China-Japan Society for Exchange of Economic Information opened here today with discussions on planned economy and regulation through market. Vice-Premier Gu Mu was present.

Ma Hong, vice-president of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences, briefed the participants on the general blueprint for the sixth five-year plan. He said: "Proceeding from China's current economic conditions and taking into consideration long-term economic development, we have decided that the major tasks for the sixth five-year plan are to continue the policy of readjusting, restructuring, consolidating and improving the national economy; to stablize the economy and improve economic results, strive for the fundamental improvement of the financial and economic situation; and to make necessary preparations for economic development under the seventh five-year plan." "In other words," Ma Hong added, "we should focus our attention on laying a solid foundation and accumulate strength during the period of the sixth five-year plan to create conditions for a healthy development of the economy."

Noted Chinese economist Xue Muqiao spoke at the meeting on "planned economy and regulation through market." He said the general orientation for China's economic reform is to expand economic relations with other parts of the world and to enliven the domestic economy. "This orientation has not been changed and will remain unchanged in the future," he said. Liao Jili, member of the State Planning Commission, also spoke on "planned economy and regulation through market."

Noted Japanese economist Saburo Okita said that he agreed with Ma Hong's speech. "China's general blueprint for the sixth five-year plan is a down-to-earth one," he said. He also spoke of Japan's experience and lessons in economic development after the Second World War.

FRENCH AID TO SRV 'HARD TO UNDERSTAND'

OW241844 Beijing XINHUA in English 1830 GMT 24 Apr 82

["A Comment on Relations Between France, Vietnam -- by XINHUA Correspondent Mei Xintian" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, April 24 (XINHUA) -- When Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach visited France, Sweden, West Germany and Belgium to seek economic and poltical assistance, he was given cold reception for most of the time and gained little out of the tour. But his stay in France was an exception. Before Nguyen's visit, the French Government had decided to provide Hanoi with 200 million francs in financial aid and sent the president's special envoy and the minister of state for research and technology to Hanoi. While Nguyen was in Paris, French Minister of Foreign Relations Claude Cheysson accepted an invitation to visit Vietnam. These moves of the French Government are hard to understand. It is reported that France has three reasons for doing so.

First, it is part of its policy of developing relations with the Third World. For all the consideration of its own interests, the French Socialist Party government pays more attention than other Western countries to the appeals of Third World countries and upholds improvement of North-South relations and closer North-South cooperation. This of course contains some positive elements. But, Vietnam is not an ordinary Third World country. It is militarily allied with the Soviet Union. It is committing flagrant aggression against Kampuchea and thereby arousing strong condemnation from Third World countries and the majority of other states. French aid to Vietnamese aggressors, then, runs counter to the will of the Third World countries and people. If the French Government is true to its "Third Worldism", it should side with the majority of the Third World countries in their opposition to the Vietnamese aggressors both in words and deeds.

Secondly, it is for winning over Vietnam from under the Soviet clout. Contradictions do exist between Hanoi and Moscow. [XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese at 1527 GMT on 24 April transmits an item entitled "'Excerpts of a Commentary on Relations Between France and Vietnam" which renders the preceeding passage as follows: "...the Soviet clout. Undoubtedly contradictions do exist between Vietnam and the Soviet Union, and the Vietnamese people, who ardently love independence and freedom, eventually will shake off the control by Soviet hegemonism. However the Hanoi..."] However, the Hanoi authorities cannot do without the backing of Moscow so long as they seek for regional hegemony. Despite the bitter fruits it has reaped from its aggression and expansion -- international isolation and increasing domestic difficulties, Vietnam is still reluctant to mend its ways, as was demonstrated by its fifth party congress held recently. [The XINHUA Chinese version reads: "...mend its ways and still will rely on the Soivet Union and desperately go on following the blind alley of regional hegemonism, as was demonstrated..."] So it is only a wishful thinking to try to drag Vietnam out of Soviet control with some assistance. What is more, such practice could very likely fit in with Soviet hopes. An article carried in the February issue of Japan's ECONOMIC EXCHANGES said that the Soviet Union is now hard pressed economically as it has to provide over 5,000 million U.S. dollars in assistance to Cuba, Vietnam, Afghanistan and other countries. Hence, the Kremlin is encouraging these countries to seek assistances from West Europe and Japan so that the Soviet Union will be able to maintain its military and political control over them at the mere cost of military supplies.

Thirdly, it is for continuing France's historical special relations with Vietnam. It is true that there were special relations between France and Vietnam and other Indochinese countries for a long time in the past.

And it is entirely justifiable for France to develop normal relations with these countries since their independence by making use of the advantages left over by history. The question is that while quite a number of countries have terminated their assistance to an aggressive Vietnam, France, to the contrary, is itching for better relations with Hanoi. For Paris, doesn't that involve a risk of incurring blames that it is staging a comeback in Indochina for its own interests? Hanoi has met with opposition from Democratic Kampuchea, the ASEAN countries and the majority of other countries in its pursuit of regional hegemony and has thus landed itself in a dilemma. This is an auspicious result of the worldwide joint struggle against aggression and for preserving peace. People have every reason to expect that all countries which had voted for the United Nations resolutions on the Kampuchea problem to stand firm on such a matter of principle and join hands to strive for a complete withdrawal of the aggressor troops in Kampuchea.

FURTHER ON VISIT BY LUXEMBOURG PRIME MINISTER

Werner Meets Press

OW011608 Beijing XINHUA in English 1549 GMT 1 May 82

[Text] Beijing, May 1 (XINHUA) -- Luxembourg Prime Minister Pierre Werner told a press conference here today his talks with Chinese leaders have found basic agreement on the two countries' foreign policies. He told Chinese and foreign reporters that, despite the difference in the two countries' potentials, both sides love peace and advocate sovereignty for every country. The two agree that no country, big or small, should interfere in other's internal affairs. Both nations also support political and economic unity of Europe, he said.

Answering a question on Taiwan, Werner said during the talks the Chinese reiterated their position that there is only one China and Taiwan is simply a part of China's territory. In relations with Taiwan, anything which touches on official contacts will be considered interference in China's internal affairs. He described that position as "fundamental."

Luxembourg Delegation Banquet

[Text] Beijing, May 1 (XINHUA) -- Luxembourg Prime Minister Pierre Werner gave a return banquet in the Great Hall of the People here this evening attended by Premier of the State Council Zhao Ziyang. Describing his contacts with the Chinese leaders as "fruitful," Werner said the two share identical views on basic issues. "This opens good prospects for development of Luxembourg-China relations and economic, political and cultural cooperation," he said. He said the Chinese people, relying on their own ability, wisdom, patience and courage, have built an industrial and agricultural structure uniquely suited to their country of vast territory and an ancient and rich culture. He said he was confident China would be successful in both its long-term strategy and its current economic readjustment.

Zhao Ziyang said the talks between China's and Luxembourg's leaders on international issues and bilateral relations were "friendly, frank and beneficial." "We share identical or similar views on many major international issues. Facing the same serious threat to world peace and security, China and Luxembourg feel all peace-loving countries and people should make concerted efforts to contain the hegemonists' aggression and expansion," Zhao said. He said China and Luxembourg have made gratifying progress in their political, economic, and cultural contacts. The two will make further efforts to promote such relations.

Among the guests were Gu Mu, vice-premier; Huang Hua, vice-premier and minister of foreign affairs; Tang Ke, minister of the metallurgical industry; Zhou Weizhi, acting minister of culture; and Zheng Weizhi, Chinese ambassador to Luxembourg.

This morning, the guests visited the Palace Museum. Wang Bingnan, president of the Chinese Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries, called on Werner this afternoon.

Meeting With Deng Xiaoping

OW020830 Beijing XINHUA in English 0822 GMT 2 May 82

[Text] Beijing, May 2 (XINHUA) -- Deng Xiaoping, vice-chairman of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, met with Luxembourg Prime Minister Pierre Werner and his party here today at the Great Hall of the People. During the meeting, Werner said his talks with Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang and Vice-Premier Huang Hua showed that Luxembourg and China held common or similar views on many international issues.

Deng Xiaoping said the fact that China and Luxembourg had common or similar views on many international issues formed the foundation of the relations between the two countries. He noted the advancing friendly cooperation between China and Luxembourg. Speaking of a united Europe, Deng Xiaoping said: "Prime Minister Werner has done a lot of work in promoting a united Europe and I myself am an enthusiastic supporter of it."

Deng Xiaoping also briefed the Luxembourg guests on China's domestic situation. Pierre Werner said he appreciated China's efforts in readjusting its economy. He expressed the belief that through such efforts, China would play the due role of a big country in international affairs.

Present on the occasion were Huang Hua, vice-premier and foreign minister; Zhang Canming, vice foreign minister; and Zheng Weizhi, Chinese ambassador to Luxembourg. Attending were also Colette Flesch, vice prime-minister and foreign minister, and Carlo Ketter, Luxembourg ambassador to China.

RENMIN RIBAO NOTES ALGERIAN PRESIDENT'S VISIT

[Article by RENMIN RIBAO reporters Zhu Minzhi [2612 2404 0037] and Yu Jiafu [5713 1367 1788]: "Let the Third World Countries Decide Their Own Destiny"]

[Text] The current visit to China by President Chadli Bendjedid of Algeria is short but his remark in Beijing that "the developing countries are wholly capable of developing themselves and will not allow the superpowers to decide the destiny of the world" will remain in the minds of the Chinese people for a long time. Together with the Chinese leaders, he has stressed the need to oppose domination by the superpowers and to strengthen cooperation between the Third World countries. This will display its irresistible strength in the course of historical development.

An old friend of the Chinese people, President Chadli visited China 19 years ago. He received a sincere and warm welcome from the Chinese leaders and people during his current visit. Chairman Hu Yaobang and Vice Chairman Deng Xiaoping met him the day he arrived in Beijing. Later Premier Zhao Ziyang held two rounds of talks with him. The leaders of both countries deemed it necessary for the Third World countries to strengthen their cooperation. They repeatedly stressed that the Third World countries have their own characteristics and strong points, that they can learn from each other and that there are broad fields for cooperation. The Third World countries are wholly capable of freeing themselves from domination by the superpowers and developing themselves.

It is the urgent aspiration of the Third World countries and people to develop South-South cooperation, promote the North-South dialogue and reform the existing unequal and unjust international economic relations. In this respect Algeria has made important contributions. It was one of the countries which proposed the establishment of a new international economic order and was one of the earliest countries to propose South-South cooperation. It has also made great efforts for South-South cooperation in its practical deeds. In recent years, Algeria, together with the Third World countries, has set up nearly 40 mixed committees of cooperation and also a few mixed banks and corporations. Last year, Algeria provided the frontline countries in southern Africa with 30,000 tons of free oil. There are presently 1,200 African students studying or practicing what they have been taught in Algeria. Algeria also actively promotes cooperation between African countries, strengthens its multilateral economic cooperation with Mali, Niger, Chad, Libya and Mauritania and has taken an active part in the construction of the 2,900-km-long "African Solidarity Highway."

The Chinese people are pleased that there has also been a marked increase in the economic and technological cooperation between Algeria and China over the past few years. During a visit to China by the government delegation led by the Algerian Finance Minister M'hmed Hadj Yala [as published] in November last year, both sides signed an agreement on the establishment of Sino-Algerian mixed committees on economy, trade and technological cooperation; an agreement on railway cooperation; as well as a cultural exchange plan. Both sides also put forth 42 items of economic and cultural cooperation, including the establishment of medium and small light and heavy industries and the development of fishery and sanitary undertakings. Both sides adopt a positive attitude toward these items and are conducting inspection work for their implementation. During his current visit, President Chadli again expressed his hope for cooperation with China in the fields of agriculture, irrigation, the construction of residential housing and railways. Premier Zhao Ziyang indicated that in the future, China and Algeria will open up various forms of cooperation in the fields of technology, economy and trade according to the needs and possibilities. He expressed the hope that Sino-Algerian cooperation will become an example for South-South cooperation and exert an important influence on the promotion of cooperation between developing countries.

The friendship between the Chinese and Algerian people has been forged in struggle. President Chadli Bendjedid is a veteran fighter of the Algerian independence movement. In 1963 when he served as the commander of the Constantine military region, he led a military delegation on a visit to China and met with Chairman Mao Zedong and Premier Zhou Enlai. In the years while President Chadli Bendjedid has been in office, the Sino-Algerian relations of friendship and cooperation have constantly developed. He became acquainted with Premier Zhao Ziyang at the Cancun meeting. During his current visit, he met and talked with Chairman Hu Yaobang and Vice Chairman Deng Xiaoping. While in Beijing he once again indicated: "The strengthened cooperation between Algeria and China will make the voice of the Third World more powerful internationally."

Zhao, Doe Speak at Banquet

[Text] Beijing, May 3 (XINHUA) -- A banquet in honor of the visiting Head of State of Liberia Samuel Kanyon Doe and his party was given by Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang here this evening.

Premier Zhao Ziyang said at the banquet that China and Liberia are developing countries belonging to the Third World. The Third World is populous, vast in area and rich in resources. As long as we close our ranks, we will be able to give play to our latent tremendous power and gradually build our respective countries into independent, prosperous and strong countries. "In our past protracted struggles for national independence," he said, "we Third World countries were closely united, sympathizing with and supporting each other, defeated imperialism and colonialism and won historic victories. Today, in the struggle to win economic independence so as to consolidate our political independence, it is all the more necessary for us Third World countries to strengthen unity and cooperation among us."

Zhao Ziyang reiterated: "As a member of the Third World, China highly treasures its unity with other Third World countries. China will, as always, firmly stand by the other Third World countries and make joint efforts with them for the just cause of opposing the hegemonist policies of war and aggression and safeguarding world peace." He said that five years have passed since the establishment of diplomatic relations between China and Liberia in 1977. "Thanks to our joint efforts, our economic and technical cooperation is proceeding smoothly while cultural and other friendly exchanges are daily increasing. Your excellency's current visit has provided us with an opportunity to conduct friendly talks on international issues of common interest and on bilateral relations. This will further enhance our mutual understanding and friendship and push forward the friendly relations existing between China and Liberia."

In his speech, Doe said that Liberia intends to expand the scope of friendships, based on the appreciaion of mutual interests. "In this connection." he said, "we are pleased to note with satisfaction, that the intercourse between our two countries has been predicated upon the premise of seeking common ground, while agreeing to differ, and that our relations have been characterized by the adherence to the five principles of peaceful co-existence." Doe spoke highly of the cordial features of China's diplomacy in upholding the principles of justice; opposing colonialism and foreign aggression; fearing to face no force, however formidable; and siding with the weak and small countries. "Liberia has observed with immense satisfaction, the generous support which the People's Republic of China has given, and continues to give, to the liberation struggle in general and the African experience in particular," he continued. "Liberia's stand remains uncompromising in the demand for the total liberation of Africa from the last pockets of racist minority rule, oppression and repression. The people of Namibia must be given total freedom. The criminal system of apartheid in South Africa must be dismantled and destroyed." Doe called on the international community, and all peace loving people, to continue to decry these inhumane acts perpetrated by the racist Pretoria regime.

Referring to the proposals being advanced by Third World countries for the establishment of the much desired new international economic order, based on justice and equity, Doe said while seeking to press on with the North-South dialogue, it now becomes more imperative than ever to speed up the promotion of cooperation among developing countries, on the basis of collective self-reliance.

Doe also dealt with the measures his country has taken to restructure the economy and the achievements gained in this regard. Doe expressed his deep conviction that his current visit to China will be a great success and beneficial.

The banquet proceeded in a friendly atmosphere. Present were Bainqen Erdini Qoigyi Gyaincain, vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress; Ji Pengfei, vice-premier; Huang Hua, vice-premier and minister of foreign affairs; Puncog Wangje and Luo Qingchang, members of the N.P.C. XINHUA Hails Doe

["Round up: Liberia's Achievements Under Military Regime" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Monrovia, May 1 (XINHUA) -- The April 1980 military coup which overthrew the 133 year-old rule of Liberia by the descendants of ex-American black slaves for the first time transferred state power into the hands of the native black people. The military regime under the leadership of Head of State Samuel Kanyon Doe in the past two years have overcome many difficulties and made progress in the efforts to achieve stability and improve Liberia's relations with neighbouring countries.

At home, the present regime encourages national reconciliation to enhance unity between the Americo-Liberians and the native black people. In the early days after the coup the new regime executed a number of high ranking officials of the former regime, put in prison a large number of political offenders and had their properties confiscated. Consequently many Americo-Liberians fled to the United States. The military regime later switched to a policy of national reconciliation, stressing that Liberia is one nation and one people. Government officials even went to the United States to explain the new policy to the Americo-Liberians and advised them to return home. At the same time, the government began the release of political prisoners pledging that they would enjoy all the civil rights and no discrimination after their release. After the abortive coup engineered by Thomas Weh Syen, co-chairman of the People's Redemption Council last August, Doe speeded up the implementation of the policy of national reconciliation. Last Christmas he gave an order to release all political prisoners, pardon all those who were staying abroad and unfreeze all of their assets. He again appealed to them to return home. Some of the officials released have been given jobs and some have been appointed ministers or vice-ministers. The present regime has spared no effort to eliminate chaos after the coup. The People's Redemption Council has been reorganised and no member of the council is now allowed to interfere in the cabinet's affairs. Armymen who created disturbances in society have been severely punished. The overall situation has obviously improved.

The economic crisis of the capitalist world of the past few years has seriously affected the Liberian economy which depends heavily on foreign capital. After assuming power, the military regime took many steps to overcome the economic difficulties including the adoption of "free enterprise system" and "open door policy." The government has set up a National Investment Commission and revised the investment law to make it more attractive to foreign investments.

Owing to the gradual stabilization of the situation, most of the foreign enterprises are continuing their operations in Liberia. And new investors have shown interest to invest in the country. The new regime is also seeking foreign aid to tide over financial difficulties. In the past two years the government has obtained aid totalling 200 million U.S. dollars from the United States, West Europe and international financial organizations.

The government has begun to pay attention to the development of the national economy, agricultural production in particular. When the four-year development plan was published last July Doe said: "A great deal of emphasis will be given to agriculture which plays a central role in our economy." Of a total expenditure of 615 million U.S. dollars for the four-year development plan, agriculture and forestry get the lion's share, amounting to 203 million U.S. dollars. To realize self-sufficiency in grain and reduce the import of rice, the government encouraged the peasants to organize producers' co-operatives and grow more rice. Last August Doe announced that October each year would be a farming month and officials and chiefs of counties and territories in every state must engage in agricultural production. Last October Doe himself helped in harvesting upland rice.

The military regime has pursued a non-aligned policy and opposed foreign interference in any country. It has expressed opposition to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and the Vietnamese aggression against Kampuchea. It wants to develop relations with all peace-loving countries and lays emphasis on improving relations with the United States and other countries which are traditionally on good terms with Liberia. At the early days after the coup, Liberia had increased contacts with the Soviet Union, as the U.S. and Western countries adopted a wait-and-see policy toward it. But not long afterwards, the United States, in order to maintain its interest in Liberia, opted for the policy of supporting the country by giving it about 100 million U.S. dollars in aid and conducting joint military exercises with it. Other Western countries and international financial organizations followed suit, providing Liberia with large amounts of loans as financial assistance. And the Liberian-Soviet relations cooled down. President Doe has indefinitely postponed his planned visit to the Soviet Union. The invitation came from Brezhnev himself. Liberia expelled Soviet diplomats on two occasions in March, last year, and made the Soviet Embassy in Monrovia reduce its staff from 15 to 6 last May.

The Liberian Government has strongly condemned aparteid practised by the South African racists and works for the complete liberation of the African Continent. In the past two years, President Doe has visited many neighbouring countries and other African states to improve relations with them. Liberia has played a positive role in a number of West African regional organizations.

President Doe announced late last year that the People's Redemption Council would eventually return power to the people. And preparations are being made for this purpose.

PLA CIRCULAR URGES STUDY OF DRAFT CONSTITUTION

OW301235 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1502 GMT 29 Apr 82

[Text] Beijing, 29 Apr (XINHUA) -- The PLA General Political Department issued a circular to the whole army on 28 April calling on the PLA commanders and fighters to earnestly study and actively discuss "the draft of the revised Constitution of the People's Republic of China."

The circular pointed out: It is a major event in the political life of our people that the 23d Session of the NPC Standing Committee has decided on publication of the draft of the revised Constitution of the PRC for discussion by the people throughout the country. This is one of the important aspects for the people in the administration of state affairs. PLA cadres and fighters are to be educated on the constitution through study and discussion of the draft constitution by all the PLA units. All PLA comrades must fully understand the importance of the constitution and the necessity of revising it. Through an understanding of the basic contents of the draft constitution, they should enhance their responsibility of being masters of the state, self-consciously adhere to the four basic principles and set an exemplary role in observing the constitution and the laws.

The circular stressed: While studying and discussing the draft of the revised constitution, leading PLA cadres at various levels should use Comrade Peng Zhen's "Explanations on the Draft of the revised Constitution of the People's Republic of China" as the basis for discussions with their respective units. It is essential that the draft of the revised constitution be discussed article by article and sentence by sentence. Based on an understanding of the guidelines of the draft of the revised constitution, democracy must be brought into full play. It is important that everyone should be allowed to freely express their views and actively encouraged to make proposals for revision.

The circular also stressed that party committees and political organizations of the various PLA units regard the study and discussion of the draft of the revised constitution as an important matter and effectively strengthen leadership over this matter.

HU QIAOMU ADDRESSES 'MAY 4TH' MOVEMENT FORUM

OW040215 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1720 GMT 3 May 82

[Excerpts] Beijing, 3 May (XINHUA) -- Today, on the eve of the 63d anniversary of the great "May 4th" movement, the CYL Central Committee invited CYL workers of the older generation to a discussion meeting. More than 100 veteran and new youth workers gathered under the same roof to review the glorious tradition of the youth movement in our country and freely discussed the important tasks of youth work in the new period.

Hu Qiaomu, member of the CCP Central Committee Secretariat, attended the discussion meeting. In his speech he encouraged the comrades doing youth work to earnestly practice what they advocate and work their way into the hearts of the young people.

He said: Whether or not youth work can be done successfully, the key is to bring into play the initiative of the advanced elements and correctly handle the relationship between the advanced elements and young people in general, that is, the relationship between the character of the advanced and the character of the masses.

He said: There may be contradictions between the character of the advanced and the character of the masses. Among young people in any field at any time, the outstanding ones characterized by their ideals and dedication are always a minority. We must have a correct understanding of the character of the advanced, not only recognize that the advanced elements are a minority but also that they represent the interests of and side with the vast majority of young people and have faith in their role. The advanced elements should also understand themselves, not be afraid of isolation and not lose confidence because the majority fails to understand them. They should forge close ties with the masses of young people, inspire self-esteem and the desire to do better among the young people who are lagging behind by their own example, and advance together with them.

Hu Qiaomu said young people have a sense of pride and always feel that the work they are doing is required by the revolution and that they are serving the motherland and socialism. Therefore, it is necessary to conduct education in professional ethics and persist in disseminating revolutionary ideals.

Not long ago, Beijing WANBAO reported on the deeds of Xu Yanmin, a nurse of the People's Hospital attached to the Beijing Medical College, who held fast to her post when a fire broke out in the hospital and worked together with others to remove the oxygen cylinders from the ward building one by one. After describing her deeds, Hu Qiaomu said: Professional ethics can push young people's thinking to a very lofty level. In schools we should teach students this kind of knowledge and educate them in professional ethics according to their characteristics. Medical students should understand medical ethics; science students should undertake the ethics of science; literature and art students should understand the ethics of literature and art; and students learning to be teachers should understand educational ethics.

The discussion meeting was filled with a cordial and lively atmosphere.

Lu Dingyi, 76, was director of the Propaganda Department of the CYL Central Committee in the 1920's. He said that decades of practice have proven that only communism can save China and that only the Communist Party can save China.

Yi Lirong, who took part in the first national congress of the Socialist Youth League of China in 1922, is now 84 years old. He sent word to the young people hoping that they would be vanguards in building a socialist material and spiritual civilization.

Feng Wenbin, who began his long career as a youth worker during the time of the central Soviet area and was secretary of the CYL Central Committee in 1949, reviewed his experience in doing youth work.

Li Chang and Hu Keshi, who served as secretaries of the CYL Central Committee after the founding of new China, also spoke at the meeting.

Han Ying, first secretary of the CYL Central Committee, also spoke at the meeting and expressed heartfelt thanks to the veteran comrades present. He said: We comrades now working at CYL posts, particularly comrades of the CYL Central Committee, feel the heavy burden on our shoulders. We are determined to live up to the CCP Central Committee's expectations, assiduously study, boldly practice, and diligently work to make the party's youth work a success.

Veteran youth workers present at the discussion meeting also included Chen Congying, Song Yiping, Liu Daosheng, Gao Yangwen, Wang Zonghuai, Wang Zhaohua, Li Qitao, Zeng Delin, Lu Jindong, Wang Daoyi, Zhang Dehua, Li Shuzheng, Xu Weicheng and Guo Mingqiu.

Present at the discussion meeting were Secretaries of the CYL Central Committee Zhou Pengcheng, Gao Zhanxiang, Li Haifeng, Keyum Bawudun, Wang Jiangong, Chen Haosu and He Guangwei; secretaries of CYL committees of various provinces, automonous regions and large cities attending the meeting to summarize the all-people decorum and courtesy month now being held in Beijing; and working personnel of the CYL Central Committee and the Beijing Municipal CYL Committee.

11TH CYL CONGRESS TO BE HELD IN LATE 1982

OW040042 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1742 GMT 3 May 82

[Text] Beijing, 3 May (XINHUA) -- Han Ying, first secretary of the CYL Central Committee, announced on 3 May at the forum sponsored by the CYL Central Committee to mark the 63d anniversary of the "4 May" movement that the 11th national congress of the Communist Youth League of China will be held during the last quarter of this year.

On behalf of the CYL Central Committee, Han Ying called on the CYL committees at all levels throughout the country to strenthen investigation and study, review and sum up their work since the convocation of the 10th national CYL congress, explore the basic experience in doing CYL and youth work during the new period, further define the guidelines and tasks for CYL work and be mentally prepared for the convocation of the 11th national CYL congress.

He pointed out that the local CYL committees at all levels must also convene CYL congresses on time according to the CYL constitution and further establish and improve the CYL leading groups at all levels. It is necessary to do a conscientious job in exchanging views and electing deputies to the 11th national CYL congress and in recommending and preparing the namelist for the pre-election of candidates for members and alternate members of the 11th national CYL committee.

COMMENTATOR CITES EXAMPLE OF COMMUNIST MORALITY

[Commentator's article: "Become People With Communist Morality"]

[Text] What kind of morality should the people of socialist China possess? The villagers in Qilijian have set a glorious example for us in this respect. Over the past 7 years, they have carefully attended to a PLA platoon leader, who was seriously paralyzed, just as they would take care of their own flesh and blood. In this way, they displayed lofty communist morality.

In our socialist country, since public ownership of the means of production was established, there is no fundamental conflict of interests among the people. With common revolutionary goals and common interests, a new type of relationship between people has been formed. People are united and friendly and care for each other. What the villagers in Qilijian did is a good example of this. The story took place at a time when the "four pests" ran wild and social atmosphere was serously damaged. The doctor, Su, who was responsible for the medical treatment of the platoon leader, was under adverse circumstances himself. He had been warned by the "higher authorities" that he would be deprived of his right to cure diseases and had been warned by the party branch that he would be held responsible for political consequences arising therefrom. So under very difficult circumstances, the Qilijian villagers unswervingly insisted on doing good deeds. This pure, lofty and commendable moral character sets for us a brilliant example, which radiates the colorful rays of advanced ideology.

Complete devotion to others without any thought of self and caring for others more than one's self is the main characteristic of the lofty virtues of the Qilijian people. Although they were not relatives of the PLA platoon leader and did not know him, as the PLA unit was hundreds of miles away from the village, they still took him to the village on their own accord and took good care of him as if he were a member of their family. All this brings to mind the moving sight during the years of revolutionary war when villagers, risking their lives, rescued and looked after wounded soldiers. Comrade Lei Feng said: "One must live for the happiness of others." Having practiced this proverb through what they did, the Qilijian villagers are actually worthy of being called a collective of Lei Feng.

The principle of "to each according to his work" is a socialist principle and must certainly be carried out earnestly. But in our socialist country, there is something more valuable than money, and that is the lofty feeling of class brotherhood. When the Qilijian villagers took the paralyzed platoon leader into their village, they never thought of being paid. What they have expended on attending to the patient cannot be counted in money. For example, for over 2 years Li Chunshan bicycled over 120 li every other day to cure the patient, regardless of the weather. This certainly brought him economic losses as well as losses in doing farm work, but he never thought of that. What a sharp contrast this is to the money-before-everything ideology!

Referring to communist education, Lenin pointed out: Morality helps human society develop to a higher level. In the years of revolutionary war, our party educated its members and people in the revolutionary red bases with communist morality. This gave rise to a lively situation of unity between army and people, between army and government and between officers and men. At that time our comrades were on very intimate terms and shared weal and woe with each other. After liberation, the "seeds" of this fine tradition were sowed all over the country by our party. Communist morality was rapidly spread by party members, revolutionary cadres and fighters, clearning up the filth and mire left over from the old society. Thusour country was celebrated for its fine social morality from the 1950's to the beginning of the 1960's. Unfortunately, this good mood of society, which had been formed by extremely hard work, was damaged during the turbulent 10 years. The tenet of "sweeping the snow from one's own front door while leaving the frost on the other man's roof to thaw" was picked up again by some people and the rotten profit-before-everything ideology as well as the ideology of "everyone for himself and let the devil take the hindmost" of the capitalist society become the guiding principle of some people in dealing with people and things. Moreover, as our contact with the outside world has increased, some capitalist moral concepts have also eroded the ideology of some people. However, in spite of all this, evil practices and unhealthy trends can never become the mainstream of our society. The well-established fine tradition has taken root in the hearts of the people. Neither the perverse acts of Lin Biao and the "gang of four" nor the sugar-coated bullets of the bourgeoisie can destroy the virtues of communists and revolutionary people! Does the lofty moral character of the Qilijian people not become more brilliant after the baptism by wind and storms?

A fine example has boundless power. The fact that the ordinary peasants and cadres in Qilijian can possess such lofty morality shows that everyone can do the same. This is a height that can be reached. In the building of socialist spiritual civilization, we must forcefully publicize the fine example of the Qilijian villagers and advocate the morality of serving the people heart and soul. Communist Party members and other advanced elements, especially leading cadres of the party, must take the lead in examining their words and actions with communist morality so that the broad masses of people will be influenced and will do the same. In so doing, the new communist atmosphere will surely be formed and the people's mental outlook be changed. We will surely score gratifying achievements in the building of socialist spiritual and material civilizations.

WAN LI, YU QIULI ADDRESS RAILWAY CONFERENCE

OW301231 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 2230 GMT 29 Apr 82

[Text] According to RENMIN TIEDAO BAO [PEOPLE'S RAILWAY NEWS], a national conference on railway work concluded in Beijing on 28 April. It was the first conference on railway work to be called by the newly organized leading group of the Ministry of Railways.

Chen Puru, a principal responsible person of the new leading group of the Ministry of Railways, made a work report.

Wan Li and Yu Qiuli, vice premiers of the State Council, spoke at the conference.

Comrade Wan Li Called on the leading groups at all levels throughout the nation's railway system to have a good working attitude and good work styles and methods, to lead the railway staff and workers in making railway operations a great success as soon as possible and to be vanguards of the national economy.

Comrade Wan Li pointed out that railway operation consists of three major fields of work. The first is transportation. It is necessary to ensure that trains run safely and on schedule, that the quality of service is good and that all parts of the nation are accessible by rail. The second is machinery and electric equipment. It is necessary to achieve greater, faster, better and more economical results in this field. The third is industrial production. It is necessary to grasp this task well.

In his talk, Comrade Yu Qiuli urged leaders at all levels in the railway system to persistently take the mass line and do a good job with concerted efforts in railway transportation, production and construction.

BEIJING RADIO DEFENDS OPEN-DOOR ECONOMIC POLICY

OW032226 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1200 GMT 3 May 82

[Radio talk: "The Open-Door Policy Is Not To Be Questioned"]

[Text] Some comrades now think that the numerous criminal activities in the economic field and certain phenomena of corruption among the cadre ranks are caused by the open-door economic policy so they have doubts about this policy. This is a muddled way of thinking.

We have adopted an open-door policy to import advanced foreign technology and management know-how, which are badly needed, as well as funds which we can use on the basis of independence and self-reliance to overcome our country's weak points by making use of other countries' strong points and speed up our socialist modernization program. This is a wise strategic policy decision, and certainly not an expedient measure. Doubts about the open-door policy will adversely affect the great cause of socialist construction.

To be sure, opening up to the outside world inevitably will expose us to some bad points and influences of capitalism. However, these things are, after all, external causes. And external causes become operative only through internal causes. So long as we always keep a clear head, adopt timely and appropriate measures, and persist in our struggle against corruption and degeneration, the lawless elements will have no opportunity to engage in activities that undermine the socialist economy, and the problems of corruption and degeneration of weaker elements among the cadre ranks can be prevented or solved in good time.

The problems that have cropped up in the past few years in the course of pursuing an open-door policy have occurred because our ideological and political work as well as necessary administrative measures have failed to keep up with developments, and because we have failed to effectively and promptly deal blows at criminal offenders in the economic field. They certainly have nothing to do with the open-door policy itself.

Facts have shown that in places where people do good work and dare to persist in struggle, the bad things and influences of capitalism can hardly find buyers. When the No 1 fishery production brigade in Shenzhen special zone, Guangdong, discovered that there were people taking opportunities to engage in smuggling and selling contraband goods, it promptly stepped up ideological and educational work on this problem and sternly dealt with individuals engaged in smuggling activities. For years the production brigade has been able to check the evil practice of smuggling and selling contraband goods. It is praised as a socialist bastion standing tall on the edge of the special zone. Despite being isolated and cursed, the cadres and masses of the (Meilin) production brigade on the Fujian coast have persisted in the struggle against smuggling and made a great contribution to safeguarding the motherland's socialist economy.

Our present task is, on the one hand, to properly sum up the work since the inception of the open-door policy and find a way to develop economic relations with foreign countries that are suited to our national conditions and the international situation, and, on the other hand, to wage an unremitting struggle against corruption and degeneration and strengthen ideological and political work. In this way our open-door policy will develop more soundly.

BEIJING RAPS MISAPPROPRIATION OF STATE PROPERTY

OW010925 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1200 GMT 29 Apr 82

[Station commentary: "Resolutely Stop the Evil Practices of Infringing Upon the Interest of the State and Sabotaging State Construction Projects"]

[Text] The following serious evil practices have appeared in some localities in recent years:

1. Some persons plunder, steal or obtain through extortion state properties in areas around state-owned industrial or mining enterprises or forests.

2. When the state wants to buy land for a construction project, some communes, production brigades and teams or individuals blackmail the state by demanding an exhorbitant price; as a result, the construction project cannot be started for years.

3. When an urban housing construction project requires some families to vacate their old houses, they make every effort to demand more new housing as a condition; they think that the more trouble they make and the longer they persist in their demand the more they will gain. Some vicious ones have become real troublemakers.

Such evil practices have caused great losses to the state. Therefore, it is necessary for us to solve this problem while struggling to stop economic crimes and create a spiritual civilization. What are the causes of this problem? They are:

1. The influence of anarchism and of the acts of smashing and grabbing rampant during the 10 years of disorder still exist.

2. Unhealthy tendencies and lopsided views exist in some leading organs and among some leading cadres. In some localities, the plunder and acquisition through extortion of state properties have behind-the-scenes support from county, commune or production brigade leading cadres. Some cadres distort the party's policies and erroneously emphasize the interest on the pretext of letting some people become well-off.

3. Some bad people are stirring up trouble.

We should point out that ours is a socialist state. The interest of the state represents the long-term and overall interest of the people of all nationalities. Any infringement upon the state interest is detrimental to the interest of the people. Our constitution provides that socialist public property shall be inviolable. The criminal law of the PRC stipulates that it is a crime to sabotage socialist construction and violate the property owned by the whole people. All citizens, as the masters of the country, have the duty to love the country, take good care of state property and protect the state interest. We should resolutely stop, and should never ignore, acts of infringing upon the state interest and obstructing and sabotaging state construction projects. Those who violate the law must be sternly punished according to law. We must resolutely stop the evil practices of infringing upon the interest of the state and obstructing and sabotaging state construction projects.

BEIJING RIBAO ARTICLE ON DEMOCRACY, CENTRALISM

[Article by Zhu Tong [2612 6639]: "Commenting on a Viewpoint of Democracy"]

[Text] Summary of contents -- As a socialist state system, the basic principle of democracy is domination by the exploited over the exploiters. We cannot subscribe to the viewpoint which holds that democracy is merely the subordination of the minority to the majority. We also cannot sum up the democratic centralism of the party as the subordination of the minority to the majority. The reason we cannot is because the opposition of democracy to dictatorship and centralism to decentralism negates the unity of opposites of democracy and centralism. If we only pay attention to the authority of the majority and weaken or belittle the authority of democratic centralism and the authority of the party, it will result in a kind of "following the main flow" and letting things drift, and the outcome will inevitably damage the socialist cause and deviate from the interests and aspirations of the overwhelming majority of party members and people. [end of summary]

A high degree of democracy is an important objective in our building of socialism. Only by constantly perfecting the political system of democracy can we fully arouse the enthusiasm of the broad masses of people, adhere to the socialist road and make a success of modernization. Therefore, it is very necessary to explore the further development and perfection of democracy in theory and in practice. However, this kind of study must be guided by Marxism and carried out in close connection with the concrete historical condition of our country at present.

There is now a kind of viewpoint which holds that democracy is merely the minority being subordinated to the majority. Democracy as the state system and democratic centralism as the criterion for inner-party life, can only be summed up as the subordination of the minority to the majority. Proceeding from this abstract principle, democracy and other principles can be deduced and evolved. We can see from this a kind of reasoning from analogy based on a geometric axiom. Just as everything can be summed up into points and lines, they have summed up all relations in the political life and inner-party life of our country into relationships of the minority and the majority and summed up the principles of handling all relations into the subordination of the minority to the majority.

With this principle as the supreme authority and point of departure, they deduced the whole state system, inner-party democracy and the viewpoint of negating the dialectical unity of democracy and centralism. Regardless of whether this is judged from the method adopted or the result, this kind of deduction is incapable of obtaining the approval of people.

Engels said that principle is not the point of departure of our study but its final result. At no time is democracy a kind of self-evolving abstract principle. It invariably emerges and develops to meet the needs of a certain class, strata or social group. As a kind of principle of the state system, democracy must stipulate the basic political relationship of who dominates whom among the various classes in society. As the principle for handling the internal relations of the ruling class, democracy must regulate the interests of people of various sections of the ruling class so as to more concentratedly reflect the will of the ruling class. The democratic centralism in the political life of the people of the socialist state, particularly the democratic centralism of the party, is the product of a high degree of internal development. In whatever sense, democracy is invariably something concrete and historical. If we simply proceed from the abstract principle of the subordination of the minority to the majority in discussing democracy, we will be unable to fully understand the basic distinction between capitalist democracy and socialist democracy and will also be unable to fully understand the basic distinction between that kind of minority subordination to the majority in the bourgeois parliamentary system and the democratic centralism of our party.

Here, it is very necessary for us to again study Lenin's teachings. In "The State and Revolution," Lenin pointed out: "Democracy is not identical with the subordination of the minority to the majority. Democracy is a state which recognizes the subordination of the minority to the majority." ("Selected Works of Lenin," vol 3 p 241) No doubt, the subordination of the minority to the majority is one of the principles any democratic system must recognize and observe, but after all it is only a general principle of democratic form. It is precisely because of this that Lenin, in affirming this principle of the subordination of the minority to the majority, at the same time emphatically stressed that democracy was a concept of state. What does this mean? It means that as a system of the socialist state, the basic principle of democracy is the domination by the exploited of the exploiters and not the subordination of the minority to the majority. Later, Lenin further expounded this idea in "The Proletarian Revolution and the Renegade Kautsy." Kautsy had pointed out: "The exploiters have always formed only a small minority of the population." Lenin said: that is indisputably true. However, "taking this as the starting point, what should be the argument? One may argue in a Marxist, a socialist way; in which case one would take as the basis the relationship between the exploited and the exploiters. Or one may argue in a liberal, a bourgeois-democratic way; and in that case one would take as the basis the relation between the minority and the majority." If we argue in a liberal way, "then we must say: the majority decides, the minority submits. Those who do not submit are penalized. That is all." ("Selected Works of Lenin," vol 3 pp 636-637) This form of so-called "democracy" neither guarantees the suppression of the so-called "democracy" of the exploiters nor the rights of the workers. Is it possible that we are still repeating this set of concepts already criticized by Lenin long ago and summing up the basic principle of the state system of the people's democratic dictatorship into the subordination of the minority to the majority? Also, the workers and peasants are the mainstay of the state of the people's democratic dictatorship. Numerically speaking, the workers are in the minority and the peasants are in the majority. However, we cannot use the principle of the subordination of the minority to the majority in handling this kind of class relationship but must adhere to the principle of workers' leadership on the basis of the worker-peasant alliance. This was the basis for the founding of our country. Therefore, if the democracy of our state system were to raise "the subordination of the minority to the majority" as the supreme "authority" and improperly apply it in this extent, then the authority of the workers and their political party over state leadership would come to naught.

Can we then sum up the democratic centralism of the party as the principle of the subordination of the minority to the majority? No, we also cannot. Some of the comrades say: Why is the individual subordinate to the organization? This is because the organization represents the majority. Why is the lower level subordinate to the upper level? This is because the upper level represents an even greater majority. Why is the whole party subordinate to the Central Committee? This is because the Central Committee is more representative than any local or departmental party organization. This is a very simple argument. The democratic centralism of the party must handle not just one kind, but four kinds, of relations. They are the relations between the individual and the organization, the minority and the majority, the lower level and the upper level and the whole party and the Central Committee. These relations do not subjectively grow of their own accord in the minds of people but are developed in the struggle of the proletariat for self-emancipating and in the actual process of struggle. These relations objectively exist and are interrelated, but they cannot replace each other. In dealing with these relations, people must proceed from the baisc interests of the proletariat emancipation movement to determine their own principle regarding each relation, and they must not subjectively conceive a unitary principle to carry out abstract argument. In inner-party life, the most basic relation we are faced with is that between the individual and the organization. Compared with the individual, the organization is not a simple and mechanical majority, but an organized majority. The development from the single individual to the organization is not simply a numerical growth, but a leap in quality. According to Lenin's explanation, this concept of organization in the narrow sense refers to the cells in the human collective. In the broad sense, it refers to the sum of these cells constituting the organic whole. He said: "The party should be a sum (and not a mere arithmetical sum but a complex) or organizations." ("Selected Works of Lenin," vol 1, p 455) The party is a closely organized organic body. Each of its organizations is a battle fortress and the sum of these organizations constitutes the vanguard of the proletariat. It is absolutely not merely because the organization represents the majority that the individual is subordinate to the organization. The most important reason is that the organized forces are on unique significance to the cause of proletariat liberation. Regarding the significance of the organization, Lenin said: "In the struggle for power, the proletariat has no weapon but organization...the proletariat can become, and inevitably will become, an invincible force only when its ideological unification by the principles of Marxism is consolidated by the material unity of an organization which will weld millions of toilers into an army of the working class." ("Selected Works of Lenin," vol 1, p 510) As for the cause of proletariat liberation, any individual struggle separated from the organization is of no avail. The only way out is in mastering this weapon of closely integrating unification by the principles of Marxism with organizational unity and conscientiously carrying out collective struggle. This is the basic reason why the individual is subordinate to the organization.

As to why the lower level is subordinate to the upper level and why the whole party is subordinate to the Central Committee, the logic of using the number of party members as explanation is also untenable. Compared with the lower level organizations, the upper level organizations do not merely represent more party members, but generally speaking, the upper level organizations as a whole are responsible for commanding the overall situation on a higher plane and grasping policies and tactics from a higher angle. Guidance of an overall nature is extremely important to the proletarian vanguard. Only by properly grasping the overall situation and subordinating the lower level to the upper level and the parts to the whole can we help the party organization evolve into a militant whole and can we safeguard the overall and long-term interests of the proletariat and people and guarantee the realization of the basic aim of the vanguard. This is the basic reason we require the subordination of the lower level to the upper level and the subordination of the whole party to the Central Committee.

As for the reason why the party organization must apply the subordination of the minority to the majority, it is also not because the views of most people in the party are always certain to represent the interests of the majority, but because it is necessary in order to uphold the unified organization and unified action of the party. Basically speaking, proletarian democracy and socialist democracy are both inseparable from Marxist-Leninist guidance regardless of whether in practice or in application. Therefore, the organizational principle of our party can only be democratic centralism and not the simple and abstract subordination of the minority to the majority. Such a proletarian political party must gather the finest elements within the party and people with best political foresight, rich experience, high Marxist-Leninist theoretical level and organizational ability into its own Central Committee so it has the ability and authority to lead the whole party. Subordinating the whole party to the Central Committee and maintaining unity politically and within the CCP Central Committee are of extremely great significance in bringing about democratic centralism in the party.

In the correct handling of inner-party relations according to the principle of democratic centralism, we not only must stress the high level of centralized unity of the party, but must also fully stress inner-party democracy. For example, the party constitution stipulates that the congress is the supreme organ of power and that the leadership structure must be produced by means of democratic election and important decisions must be determined by means of democratic discussion. It also stipulates the many democratic rights of the party members. Without full democracy, there also cannot be correct centralism. This means that we must regard democratic centralism as a unity of opposites and correctly grasp the relation between the aspects of strict centralism and full democracy. The antagonism between democracy and dictatorship and between centralism and decentralism is discussed in another sphere. We cannot because of this negate the relationship of unity of opposites between democracy and centralism.

We know that the practice of democratic centralism is a process in actual life. Moreover, it cannot be separated from leadership and is absolutely not an action which can be spontaneously decided by the subordination of the minority to the majority . Take an election for example; the election plan must first be put forward from the bottom to the top and from the top to the bottom. Full consideration and discussion must be carried out before the nomination of candidates can be decided. This process is not only democratic, but is also the process of centralism. Let us also take the example of the making of important policy decisions. Every party member has the duty to subordinate himself to the decisions of the organization to the best of his ability. However, before making a decision, the organization should allow every party member the right of fully expressing his own view and actively taking part in the discussion. After the decision has been made by the party organization, every party member can still give play to his own initiative by creatively implementing the decision. Even if the decision made by the organization is contrary to one's wish, apart from firmly implementing it and not violating it in action, every party member is also allowed to reserve his own view and to lodge his appeal through regular organizational procedure. Under this kind of condition, subordination to the organization will naturally possess a certain coercive character. However, as all our party members have joined the party voluntarily, they are also willing to accept the organizational and disciplinary restrictions of the party. If, in carrying out collective struggle, we become separated from the Communist Party members' high level of consciousness and from full inner-party democracy, we will be unable to guarantee the carrying out of this kind of conscious subordination of the individual to the organization. Moreover, there cannot be one-sided subordination among the majority and the minority inside the party. There must not only be subordination to the majority, but there must also be respect and protection for the minority. At the same time, there can also be changes in the relations between the majority and the minority. A temporarily blind majority can change into a subsequent minority, and a temporary minority can also finally change into a conscious majority as the result of mastering the truth.

For the sake of making correct decisions, the party must always pay attention to this work of changing the minority into the majority before it can make decisions based on the principle of the subordination of the minority to the majority. If we become separated from full democracy and correct guidance, it will be impossible to bring about this change. If, without making a distinction between what is right and wrong, we hastily make decisions based on the principle of the subordination of the minority to the majority before the majority has become conscious, things which outwardly appear to conform to democratic procedure may in fact turn out to be competely contrary to the interests of the overwhelming majority. Making decisions on things in accordance with the principle of the subordination of the minority to the majority can only be carried out on the basis of full democracy. Otherwise, it is possible to go astray. The relations between the upper level and the lower level and between the local organizations of the whole party at various levels and the Central Committee are also not simply the subordination of one side to the other. They likewise require the full democracy of the lower-level organizations and the local organizations of the whole party at various levels as the basis. Upper level party organizations and the Central Committee must constantly listen to the views of the lower level organizations and the party members, promptly solve their problems and consciously accept democratic supervision from below. The lower level organizations of the party not only must ask instructions and make reports to the upper level organizations, but they must also actively, independently and responsibly solve the problems under their sphere of responsibility and fully bring their initiative and creativity into play. Since the setting up of the Central Secretariat by the 5th Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, the Central Committee has put forward four points for the localities. They are: What the Central Committee has not thought of, you can think of. What the Central Committee has not called on you to do, you can do it if you think it is correct. If what the Central Committee has said is unsuitable to conditions in your district, you can make appropriate adaptations. What the Central Committee has decided wrongly, you can argue with. Naturally, according to organizational principle, all these require promptly asking instructions from and making reports to the upper level and to the Central Committee. These are the important contents of our inner-party democracy. Only by doing so can we create a lively political situation in our party and guarantee that the party will exercise a high level of centralism on the basis of a high level of democracy.

From the things roughly mentioned above, we can see that the democratic centralism of the party not only cannot be simply summed up into this principle of the subordination of the minority to the majority, but it also cannot be simplified into the four subordinations included in this principle. This system is the unity of opposites of a high level of democracy and a high level of centralism. The kind of view, which holds that recognizing the unity of opposites of democracy and centralism is "a kind of misunderstanding" which "sets democracy against centralism" and uses centralism to negate democracy, is in fact using the viewpoint of "either this or that" in terms of absolutes to deal with the dialectical realtionships between democracy and centralism. For negating the unity of opposites of democracy and centralism, some comrades have used the reason that the basic principle of the subordination of the minority to the majority is democratic and that this principle has summed up all the contents of centralism, in order to propagate that democracy itself is centralism. This kind of viewpoint of course will not help the people to improve their understanidng of the authority of party organizations, particularly the great significance of the centralized and unified leadership of the CCP Central Committee. At the same time, it will also greatly restrict their understanding of the extremely rich contents included in giving play to inner-party democracy. As a matter of fact, in recognizing the unity of opposites of democracy and centralism, we are absolutely not using centralism to suppress or to weaken democracy, but to enable ourselves to more consciously and instructively develop democratic life in the party. Actual life has informed us that the more we want to strengthen the centralized and unified leadership of the party, the more we must amplify the various democratic systems of the party and fully guarantee the democratic rights of every party member.

Thus, the reasonable ideas of all party members and lower level organizations can be centralized and the enthusiasm of the whole party can be fully aroused before bringing about a high level of centralized and unified leadership on this basis. Conversely, the more we give play to democracy, the more we must strengthen the centralized guidance of party organizations at various levels over democratic life. If we only discuss the authority of the majority and either consciously or unconsciously weaken or belittle the authority of democratic centralism and thus weaken or belittle the authority of party organizations and the leadership of the CCP Central Committee in particular, then so-called democracy or subordination to the majority would become a kind of "following the main flow: and letting things drift. The result of this is bound to damage the socialst cause, deviate from the interests and aspirations of the overwhelming majority of party members and people and run counter to the demand of socialism.

Comrade Mao Zedong said: "Within the ranks of the people, democracy is correlative with centralism and freedom with discipline. They are the two opposites of a single entity, contradictory as well as united." ("Selected Works of Mao Zedong," vol 5, p 368) The use of the dialectics of the viewpoint of unity of opposites developed in the process of the movement of contradictions to examine the two opposites of democratic centralism is an invention of Comrade Mao Zedong and his legacy to us. Comrade Mao Zedong's brilliant dialectical idea of creating the kind of vigorous and lively political life in which there are both centralism and democracy, both discipline and freedom, and both unity of will and personal ease of mind for the party and state is something we must never throw away.

The contents of socialist democracy are very rich, Apart from the democratic election of leadership structures and the democratic decision of important policies, the constant use of Marxism to educate the people so that they will understand the important affairs of the state, the strengthening of mass supervision over party and state organs, the consultation on important issues, the mutual support and interaction of various structures, the correct handling of letters and visits from the people, the development of criticism and self-criticism in party media, the development of constructive activites and the mediation of civil disputes are also contents of socialist democratic life. Under the leadership of the CCP Central Committee, we must sum up and develop these rich democratic experiences, including waging an inevitable struggle against the influence of hypocritical bourgeois democracy, and keep on advancing socialist democracy.

NANFANG RIBAO ON ECONOMIC CRIME CRACKDOWN

HK031427 Guangzhou Guangdong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2350 GMT 2 May 82

[Text] Today's [3 May] NANFANG RIBAO carries a commentator's article which is entitled "What Counts Is a Good State of Mind." The article says that the state of mind of some of our comrades is far from meeting the needs of the situation. According to these comrades, the struggle against serious criminal activities in the economic field will pin down policies, choke channels, block ways and terminate production. This is a misunderstanding in the full sense. The decision issued by the CCP Central Committee and the State Council on striking hard at serious criminal activities in the economic field has pointed out that this is aimed at removing obstacles, promoting our industrial and agricultural production, guaranteeing the successful promotion of all types of work and quickening the pace of realizing our modernization programs. What will be pinned down during the current struggle is not the party's policy of opening to the world and enlivening the domestic economy but rather the serious criminal activities of smuggling, trading in smuggled goods, corruption, accepting bribes, speculation, swindling and theft of state and collective property. What will be choked during the current struggle are not the normal channels but those dishonest practices such as importing large numbers of consumer goods and dumping these imported consumer goods and thus lashing the domestic industry; forcing up the prices of and rushing to purchase export agricultural and sideline products, and disrupting the market; and relying on illegal methods such as giving dinners, sending gifts and offering sales commissions in order to rush purchase and resell at a profit those goods and materials in short supply or to promote the sale of slow-selling goods.

The article said that some other comrades think that in view of the changeable policies, one had better take the clever wait-and-see attitude. This is also a lopsided and erroneous view. The decision noted that opening to the world and enlivening the domestic economy is an unswerving policy of the party which proceeds from the concrete conditions required for socialist modernization. This policy will not be changed or affected by our striking at criminals who severely undermine the economy. The Guangdong Provincial CCP Committee has also time and again stressed the necessity of maintaining the stability and continuity of policies. However, we certainly should revise some specific methods of work which have been proved through practice to be detrimental to the overall situation or to the development of production.

The article added that after witnessing our striking at serious criminal activities in the economic sphere, some comrades worry about making mistakes themselves, thus putting forward this argument: the fewer tasks you carry out, the fewer mistakes you will make; the more tasks you carry out, the more mistakes you will make; and if you do not carry out any tasks, you will not make any mistakes. The argument shows muddled thinking. According to the decision, the current struggle is only aimed at striking hard at a very few criminals who commit serious crimes. The party and the people will fully affirm the achievements of the vast numbers of cadres who devote themselves wholeheartedly to the public.

Even if some cadres have made some errors in work, everything will be fine after the errors are corrected. The party and the people will never confuse errors in work with economic crimes and will never indiscriminately lash out at them. Therefore, we should dispel misgivings, free our hands and feet and go all out.

SHENZHEN OFFSHORE OIL FACILITY CONSTRUCTION

[Text] Shenzhen, April 26 (XINHUA) -- Construction of the Chiwan offshore oil exploration facility is well underway, according to an official of the Shenzhen special economic zone in Guangdong Province.

Chiwan is located on the eastern bank of the Pearl River, adjacent to the Shekou industrial area under Shenzhen city, where one of China's four special economic zones is being developed. The other three are Huli in Xiamen of Fujian Province and the special zones in Shantou and Zhuhai of Guangdong Province.

Projects under construction include road building, navigation, ground levelling, telecommunication systems and power and water supplies, the official said. Erection of a 10,000-volt high-tension transmission line has been completed between Shekou and Chiwan, and a highway linking the two areas is now open to traffic. Installation of water pipelines will begin soon. A land survey was finished earlier this month for construction of a deep-water dock at Chiwan, and a marine survey will be completed next month. Workers are now carrying out geological drilling on land and off the coast, the official said.

Construction of the first phase of Chiwan base, scheduled to complete in 1984, includes a 500-meter-long special deep-water dock, storage yards covering 25 hectares, facilities for offshore operations and drilling platform repairs, as well as technical services and other service establishments.

CHINA DAILY: HUBEI'S EXPORTS, FOREIGN FUNDS USE

HK300127 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 30 Apr 82 p 4

[Text] A sustained development programme has succeeded in raising Hubei Province's exports of both traditional and industrial products, INTERNATIONAL TRADE NEWS reports.

In 1981, Hubei exported nearly 1,300 different items, including 150 traditional products, to more than 100 countries worldwide. Overall export trade has increased by 28 percent since 1978, the paper says.

Between 1972 and 1981, the province allocated 6.6 million yuan for production loans to 549 export-oriented projects. Among these projects were five bed linen mills, which have increased their output from 2.3 million pieces to some 6.5 million.

Foreign funds have also been used to increase the productivity of existing enterprises. By last year, U.S. $22 million worth of imported equipment and technology had been applied to some 60 projects. For example, $2.8 million worth of new equipment enabled the Yichang plastic woven bag plant to raise its capacity from five million bags a year to about 23 million. The plant's exports are expected to amount to as much as $6 million.

Exports of agricultural and sideline products have also been encouraged. In 1981, Hubei exported 370,000 pigs, 348 tons of black fungus, 647 tons of honey, and 1.4 tons of pig bristle.

Exports of mushrooms from Hubei's Yichang District have been greatly expanded since 1980, when the district party secretary and several of his colleagues took an interest in the crop. They organized a conference to encourage mushroom culture and increase exports. That year, the district purchased 28,500 kilos of mushrooms, of which 21,000 were earmarked for export. By 1985, it hopes to produce 150,000 kilos, of which 70 per cent will be exported.

[Summary] "Unauthorized seizure and use of cultivated land is serious in our province. The department concerned has called on the government departments of various localities to take effective measures to protect land resources. According to the provincial statistics department, from 1961 to 1980, capital construction and the construction of water conservancy projects, railways, highways and houses in the urban and rural areas took up 8.43 million mu, which is equal to the present size of the Xiangyang Prefecture. Throughout the province, there is an average reduction of 420,000 mu of cultivated land every year, which is equal to the cultivated land area of a county. In 1952 there was an average of 2.1 mu of cultivated land for each person throughout the province, but the figure dropped to 1.1 mu in 1981, an average reduction of 1 mu of land for each person in 28 years."

The department concerned has called on the government departments in various localities to take practical measures to check the unauthorized seizure and use of cultivated land.

JIN MING AT HEBEI UNITED FRONT CONFERENCE

HK290937 Shijiazhuang Hubei Provincial Service in Mandarin 0400 GMT 20 Apr 82

[Excerpts] The Hebei Provincial CCP Committee held a conference on united front work in Shijiazhuang 12-17 April. The conference relayed and studied the guidelines of the national conference on united front work and the important speeches by Hu Yaobang and other leading comrades of the CCP Central Committee in order to reach unity of thinking and raise the understanding of the importance of the united front work during the new period. It also studied and made arrangements for united front work in our province this year. Responsible comrades of the provincial CCP committee, people's congress standing committee, people's government and CPPCC including Jin Ming, Jiang Yizhen, Wang Zheng, Yin Zhe, Zhao Yimin, Liu Ying, (Wang Yu), Zhang Kerang, (Xie Chunxin), Niu Shucai, Wu Qingcheng, Ding Tingxin, Li Feng, Xu Ruilin, Ma Zhuozhou, Zhang Xiaodong, and Yin Yigang, as well as responsible comrades of the united front work department of the provincial CCP committee attended the conference. Comrade Yin Zhe presided over the conference.

Through studies and discussions, all the participants deepened their understanding, were clear about their tasks and strengthened their confidence. They were determined to establish a relationship of utter devotion and of sharing weal and woe with vast numbers of nonparty personages and to make concerted efforts for the accomplishment of the three historical tasks during the new period.

At the conclusion of the conference, provincial CCP committee First Secretary Jin Ming delivered an important speech. When talking about how to do a good job of the present united frontwork, he pointed out: The CCP Central Committee has explicitly instructed that the tasks confronting the party committees at various levels are to implement the instructions of the CCP Central Committee in the light of the reality of our province and achieve the desired results.

For this purpose it is imperative for us to pay close attention to the following tasks:

First, conscientiously do a good job of publicity and education in the theory and policies of united front work during the new period.

Second, pay close attention to the implementation of various united front policies and strive to reach, within this year and the next, a rational and satisfactory solution to the various problems relating to the united front policies of the party.

Third, it is necessary to make appropariate arrangements for nonparty personages and work hard to build up a cooperative relationship among colleagues. To do this well, it is necessary to provide nonparty personages with the authority commensurate with their posts and responsibilities. We must look upon them as our own cadres by having full confidence in them politically, boldly employing them in work and caring about them in their livelihood. We must sincerely and farnkly consult with them about matters, show utter devotion to and good faith with them and do all work well together.

Fourth, it is necessary to give full play to the role of the CPPCC organizations, the democratic parties and the mass organizations concerned. In the future, we must invite the responsible members of the democratic parties and the mass organizations concerned to take part in some of the major political activities of the party and government. We should not interfere in their internal affairs and wholeheartedly help them solve the problems they are confronted with in their work. The people's CPPCC organization is the broadest united front organization under the leadership of the CCP. The CCP committees at various levels should attach importance to the work of political consultation and do it on a regular basis. The CPPCC organizations should be restored in those counties and districts where there had been such organizations before the Cultural Revolution. They should also be gradually set up in other counties according to the circumstances and united front tasks should be increased during the new period and these organizations should be provided with the necessary cadres.

It is necessary to put united front work on the agenda of the CCP committees and discuss it several times a year. The provincial CCP committee has decided to set up united front bodies in the CCP committees of all counties, universities and colleges and large factories, mines and scientific research units throughout the province. The leading party groups of the units directly under the province and the CCP committees of the secondary vocational schools should also assign a responsible comrade to be in charge of the united front work. Where cadres in the united front work departments of various prefectural, municipal and county CCP committees are weak, it is necessary to send more cadres to strengthen them.

During the conference, (Wang Yu), provincial CCP committee standing committee member and organization department head; (Xu Chunxin), provincial CCP committee standing committee member and propaganda department head; and Vice Governor Xu Ruilin spoke respectively at various sessions.

The conference also conscientiously discussed the main points of the tasks for 1982 of the United Front Work Department of the Hebei Provincial CCP Committee.

HEILONGJIANG URGES RESISTING BOURGEOIS INFLUENCE

SK040533 Harbin Heilongjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 3 May 82

[Excerpt] According to our reporters, the provincial and Harbin municipal CYL committees held a joint report meeting this morning at the Heilongjiang provincial exhibition hall to mark the 63d anniversary of the 4 May youth day. Li Lian, second secretary of the provincial CCP committee, made a report at the meeting. He urged the youths to inherit the glorious traditions of the May 4th movement, work vigorously and form an ambitious generation. Attending the meeting were leading comrades of the province and Harbin municipality; responsible persons of the provincial military district, PLA units stationed in the province and departments concerned; and CYL members and youths -- a total of more than 2,500 persons.

In his report, Comrade Li Lian said: By reviewing history prior to and following the May 4th movement, we discover the truth that without the Communist Party, there would be no new China, and only socialism can save China. The May 4th movement marked a glorious page in the history of the Chinese youth movement. It has clearly pointed out a correct orientation for the Chinese youth movement.

In his report, Comrade Li Lian dealt at length on ways for the broad masses of youths to inherit and carry forward the glorious traditions of the May 4th movement in the new historical period and to add a new page to history. He made four demands on youths. First, is to study the patriotic spirit of youths during the period of the May 4th movement and to have more ardent love for our great socialist motherland. He said patriotism is the greatest cohesive and centripetal force of the Chinese nation and the ideological tie holding the Chinese people together. The emphasis on patriotism today means nothing but to love our socialist motherland. There are some people, including a few young people, who blindly worship foreign countries, pursue a bourgeois lifestyle, and even do away with self respect, self confidence and pride of the nation. They have doubts about socialism and lack confidence in the four modernizations. This obviously is very wrong. Since the smashing of the gang of four, our party has summed up historical experiences, corrected leftist effors and set forth a whole set of correct lines and policies and is confidently leading the people throughout the country in building the two civilizations. Since the beginning of this year, the CCP Central Committee has concentrated efforts to carry out organizational reforms and deal blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field. All these facts show that our socialist motherland has bright prospects.

The second demand is to study the spirit of seeking the truths of the youth during the May 4th movement, conscientiously study and adhere to Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought and strive to study modern science and cultural knowledge.

The third demand is to inherit the glorious traditions of the May 4th movement and form a young generation of ideals, morality, culture and discipline.

The fourth demand is to inherit the glorious traditions of the May 4th movement and vie to be shock forces in the four modernizations.

HEILONGJIANG MODEL WORKERS ISOLATED, ATTACKED

SK030520 Harbin Heilongjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 2 May 82

[Station commentary: "Foster Social Practice To Emulate the Advanced"]

[Excerpt] Since our country is facing an arduous task of building socialist material and spiritual civilizations, we badly need a large number of model and advanced workers to bring along the masses on the road of advancing. After commending 4,600 model workers, the provincial CCP committee recently named and commended another 120 new model workers. These model workers represent the advanced productive forces which enable our society and history to develop. They are the quintessence of the Chinese nation. Therefore, they should be respected by society and be examples for the masses to emulate.

A social practice to emulate the advanced is taking shape in various localities of our province. Model and advanced workers are being given greater respect and advanced ideals and experiences are being given wider publicity. This is very heartening. However, we must see that an unhealthy tendency of isolating and attacking the advanced still exists in quite a few localities and units. Some persons who do not seek to improve themselves prevent others from making progress. They mock and make fun of the advanced, demand perfection of them and even frame and attack them. This is very wrong.

How to treat the advanced is not only an issue concerning individual model workers but also an issue concerning what kind of social practice we want to establish. The thoughts and deeds of the advanced represent the orientation of history in advance and are identical with the basic interests of the people. LI DESHENG URGES DISCUSSION OF DRAFT CONSTITUTION

[Excerpts] Leading organs of the Shenyang PLA units have actively discussed the draft of the revised constitution. The political department has instructed subordinate units to regard the discussion of the draft of the revised constitution as their central study subject and submit amendments to the draft of the revised constitution by fully exercising civil rights, On the evening of 27 April, Li Desheng, commander of the Shenyang PLA units; First Political Commissar Liao Hansheng and other leading comrades, who were inspecting work at the units, listened to the report by the central broadcasting station on the draft of the revised constitution together with the fighters.

Comrade Li Desheng said: The PRC Constitution is the fundamental law of the land. We must earnestly exercise our civil rights and concentrate our energy in a period of time to discuss the draft of the revised constitution and submit amendments to it with a sense of responsibility as being masters of the state. The discussions can serve as sustained education on patriotism and abiding by the law for the troops to enhance their consciousness in loving the motherland, cherishing the people and being law-abiding. This will be conducive to the modernization, revolutionization and regularization of training of our army.

Following the promulgation of the draft of the revised constitution, party committees of the Political and Logistics Departments of the Shenyang PLA units held discussion meetings. During the discussions, they contended the preamble of the draft of the revised constitution reaffirms the upholding of the four basic principles and stressed that the most important of the four principles is upholding party leadership. This is a truth verified by decades of practice and the summing-up of our contemporary historical experience. The Political Department of the Shenyang PLA units decided to adopt discussions on the draft of the revised constitution as the central sutdy subject and issued instructions to this effect to subordinate units.

LIAONING RIBAO ARTICLE OPPOSES DEPARTMENTALISM

HK201407 Shenyang LIAONING RIBAO in Chinese 9 Apr 82 p 3

[Article by Fu Rongwu [1381 2837 2976]: "Oppose Departmentalism"]

[Text] In recent years, departmentalism has appeared to some extent in certain localities, departments and enterprises. Under the excuse of giving play to their "superiority," some people have ignored the state plan and blindly started projects or production. Duplicate construction has become an "endless and disturbing" source of longstanding, great and difficult problems and caused an enormous waste of energy, raw materials and funds.

Under the excuse of opposing high targets, some of the people have refused to accept the targets, which have been proven to be completely achievable by means of hard work, and bargained with the state in order to reduce them by a larger percentage. Some have retained the profits which should be turned over to the state and evaded the paying of taxes. Some have refused to carry out requisition and purchasing contracts. They have taken the products which should be handed over to the state for unified distribution and sold them on their own at a higher price on the market. Such tendencies of departmentalism are seriously infringing on the interests of the state, disrupting the smooth progress of the economic readjustment and corroding the minds of the people. At the same time, they are also providing opportunities that can be exploited by various illegal and criminal activities in the economic sphere.

Some of the people who go in for departmentalism have loudly asserted: "We are working for the well-being of the masses." This kind of argument may outwardly seem reasonable, but in fact it is not. The interests of the people are divided into overall interests and partial interests, long-term interests and immediate interests. Basically speaking, these two kinds of interests are identical, but at times, there are also contradictions. Our principle for handling such contradictions can only be to insist on subordinating partial interests to overall interests and subordinating immediate interests to long-term interests. We definitely cannot do otherwise. The people who go in for departmentalism have displayed the banner of representing the interests of the people in order to infringe on the interests of the state and are actually infringing on the basic interests of the masses. What they represent are the backward ideas and demands of a handful of backward people among the masses. As for those whose ideas and behavior are backward, the cadres should actively guide and educate them and help them raise their awareness. They should not pander to, accomodate, support or connive with them. Feathering the nest of the enterprise at the expense of the state, turning "selflessness" into "selfishness" and using the method of infringing on the long-term interests of the state to satisfy one's immediate interests are definitely not the genuine viewpoints of the masses. At present, the state is still having certain difficulties. Everybody should take the interests of the whole and the general situation into account and share the worries and burdens of the state together with the masses.

"We have not put any money into our own pockets!" Some of the people have often used this to vindicate themselves. Honesty in the performance of one's duty and not lining one's pockets with public funds are the duty of party cadres; otherwise, there will be no distinction between us and the corrupt officials of the exploiting class! We absolutely cannot use not taking money as the capital for practicing departmentalism. What is more, we cannot use it as a reason for engaging in activities which violate law and discipline.

Actually, for some of the people, going in for departmentalism may outwardly appear to be not for themselves, but in essence, it is the embodiment of individualism. For example, they casually give promises and indiscriminately issue bonuses for the sake of ingratiating themselves with people, or for winning "appreciation" from those above and "support" from those below at the expense of the state. Can this be wholly described as not for oneself? Speaking in this sense, departmentalism is magnified individualism.

In short, departmentalism is not a kind of upright ideological style. Regardless of the form it may adopt, it is the sort of thing we must overcome. As for those who have violated the law and discipline as a result of the pernicious expansion of departmentalism, we must take legal and disciplinary action against them and we definitely cannot be indulgent toward them.

NINGXIA RURAL INCOME BEATS RECORD IN 1981

[Report: "Peasants' Income in Region Set New Record in 1981"]

[Text] In 1981, rural income in Ningxia Hui Autonomous Region went up noticeably with the increase in agricultural production. Commune members received an average of 81.8 yuan from the distribution of collective annual income. There were 122 production teams whose individual commune members received an average income of over 300 yuan.

Last year, in the irrigated areas of our region where water is channeled in from the Huang He, there appeared a number of production brigades and teams whose income had gone up considerably. In 1981, the number of brigades whose members each received an annual income of over 300 yuan increased from two to three as compared with 1980. These brigades were Longyi, Huayi and Huaer of the Xinhuaqiao people's commune in Lingwu County. At the same time, in 1981 there were 122 production teams whose per capita income was over 300 yuan; thus the number rose by 62 over the previous year. Especially gratifying is the fact that some poor teams began to enter the rank of well-to-do teams. These production teams vigorously delivered grain to the state after reaping bumper harvests. For instance, the Xinhuaqiao people's commune in Lingwu County delivered a total of 10.31 million jin of commodity grain to the state last year.

The reasons why these brigades and production teams could become affluent in such a short time can be found from the following common points. First of all, there must be a good leading body, which adheres to the socialist road of collectivization. This leading body must make efforts in applying the production responsibility system by giving remuneration according to output for contracts signed and improving the system in line with local conditions. Last year, 69 out of 73 production teams of Xinhuoqiao commune in Lingwu County started the system of giving remuneration according to fixed quotas for small construction projects and the system of giving remuneration according to output for contracts signed with specialized groups. As a result, out of these 69 production teams, there were 30 whose per capita income had exceeded 300 yuan. In Helan County, the Tongyi people's commune, which had been poor for years, found that its members increased their income after implementation of the production responsibility system by dividing up the work and assigning a part to each household and fixing farm output quotas for each household. Last year, there were 6 production teams of this commune whose members for the first time received an average income of over 300 yuan. Second, broadening ways of production by developing diversified undertakings. These production teams made good use of spare time to develop diversification. As a result, their members' income from small industrial enterprises and sideline production accounted for 30 percent of their total income. This was double the average level of the whole region. In the outskirts of Yinchuan municipality, the Shuangqu No 5 production team of Yinxing commune developed vegetable planting together with fruit growing. Last year, each of its members earned 117 yuan from fruit growing alone. The Huaer brigade started to run five industrial enterprises including a general repair factory and a brickyard a few years ago. Last year, these enterprises handed to the production teams a total of over 37,000 yuan in cash for distribution, which brought about an extra income of more than 10 yuan to each member of the brigade. Third, carrying out farmland capital construction and developing scientific cultivation. This could be seen in the successive increases in grain output in the Huayi brigade in Xianhuaqiao commune in Lingwu County. Moreover, the Xiyi No 5 production team of Wanghong commune in Yangning County paid constant attention to using stalks to improve soil fertility, and also to using fine strains. This made their grain output increase greatly. Fourth, increasing income and decreasing expenditure. In Linwu County, the Taizhi No 9 production team of Chongxing commune was a good example in this respect. It increased both production and income for 3 successive years and also cut down its expenses again and again.

CHINA POST URGES U.S. REJECTION OF PRC PROTEST

OW260703 Taipei CHINA POST in English 21 Apr 82 p 4

[Editorial: "U.S. Should Reject Peiping's Protest"]

[Text] Peiping's latest protest lodged with Washington over the U.S.$60-million spare parts sales to the Republic of China should be resolutely rejected by the United States.

The Peiping regime's statement said it was lodging "a strong protest with the U.S. Government against this act of infringing upon (Red) China's sovereignty." The statement is preposterous and constitutes a devious attempt at claiming "sovereignty" over the Republic of China. It infringes upon the sovereignty of the Republic of China, an independent country of long-standing recognized by many nations and maintaining substantive relations with more than 140 nations. The United States, therefore, should lose no time in refuting such assertions and rejecting the protest as inadmissible and unlawful.

In the same document, the Peiping regime stated that it accepted assurances from the United States that the U.S. $60 million worth of spare parts submitted to Congress for approval involved no weapons. It also stated that the United States in turn promised not to transfer arms to the ROC while talks between Peiping and Washington are going on.

Those statements revealed the extent to which the United States has succumbed to the blackmail of the Peiping regime, which would dangerously jeopardize the vital interests of the Republic of China. First of all, there was and still is no need for the United States to discuss with the Peiping regime anything concerning its arms sales program for the Republic of China. The ROC is a separate international entity not subject to any outside control, certainly not to any control of the Peiping regime. Secondly, the arms sales program for the ROC is required by the Taiwan Relations Act. Why should the U.S. President consult the Peiping regime in implementing the Taiwan Relations Act? In so doing, President Ronald Reagan has compromised by those very actions the Taiwan Relations Act.

It is important for the United States to realize that the Chinese communist united front maneuvers are for the purpose of conquering Taiwan without a fight. It is even attempting to achieve its sinister objectives with or through the help of the United States. The Shanghai communique was the trap set for the United States to fall into. Even though the United States considered the Shanghai communique as a mere declaration of principles and intentions, the Peiping regime regarded that as an international agreement accepted by the United States to be enforced.

This is what the Peiping regime is doing by raising the issue of the arms sales as a test case of enforcing the Shanghai communique to Peiping's advantage and at the expense of the Republic of China. If the United States should accept Chinese communist protest, or even take noteof it, then the Peiping regime can assert that its claims over Taiwan are acceptable to the United States.

The United States has no choice but to reject Peiping's protest as inadmissible and illegal because Peiping has no stand in this issue at all, which concerns only the United States and the Republic of China. It is also clear that it is dangerous to negotiate with the Chinese communists, who are trying to twist and confust the issues involved to gain undue advantages in the process.

The Republic of China has learned from bitter experience the pitfalls in talking with the Chinese communists. The latter are prone to twist the meaning of the discussions and put words in their opponent's mouth. The United States should halt all talks with the Peiping regime over the arms sales issue, which should not be subject to its veto. It should warn Peiping not to interfere with the U.S. President's prerogative of implementing the Taiwan Relations Act, which is the law of the land. No President should tolerate such interference without violating his constitutional duty.

The American people should urge the Congress to insist on the U.S. administration consulting it and it only the arms sales issue as stipulated by the Taiwan Relations Act. [sentence as published] It is perhaps high time for the U.S. Congress to hold extensive hearings on the manner the Reagan administration is implementing the Taiwan Relations Act to ascertain to what extent it is being implemented and to what extent it is not being implemented and why.

COMMENTARY ON RIGHT, MEANS TO BUY U.S. ARMS

OW260613 Taipei International Service in English 0100 GMT 26 Apr 82

[Commentary: "Defense Contributions of the Republic of China"]

[Text] Many Americans are unhappy about Japan's small contribution to its own defense. The Japanese defense budget is being increased by nearly 8 percent in the coming fiscal year. But U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger recently warned the Japanese that there is still American dissatisfaction with a defense contribution equating to less than 1 percent of the GNP there. Americans are not being unreasonable. The Japanese have had a virtually free defense ride since 1945. That is a long time. The United States has been paying the bills that made those Sonys and Toyotas possible. The United States has also been paying with big trade imablances.

Not that we are blaming the Japanese. If the Americans are willing to pay, why not let them? That would be the view of most countries. Probably the only exception to this rule is the Republic of China.

American economic aid to Taiwan ran out in 1965. The Republic of China was able to stand on its own feet, and did so. Military assistance continued after that, but ended in the 1970's. As of today, the Republic of China pays all of its defense bills with cash on the barrel head. It does not ask for credit. Grants were terminated long ago.

That is all right. The Republic of China is an endangered country. At the same time, it can afford to pay, even if its per capita income is less than 1/4 of that enjoyed by Americans. For the fiscal year beginning 1 July, the military and foreign affairs expenses of the Republic of China will amount to nearly 43 percent of the budget. Possibly that is the highest figure in the world. At least, it is one of the highest. The people have no complaint. They know that, in the absence of strong military forces, the communists would quickly overrun Taiwan.

The United States is of the opinion that the Self-Defense Forces of Japan help to assure Asian peace and tranquility. Presumably the same could be said of the South Korean defense forces and those of the Philippines. Both are assisted by the United States.

Under the "Taiwan Relations Act," the United States is committed to the sale of defensive weapons to the Republic of China. However, little, if anything, has been said about the free Chinese contribution to defense of the United States.

For the moment, many Americans believe Communist China is friendly, and not to be considered a potential enemy. They shouldn't be so sure. The Chinese communists fought the Americans in Korea. There were even some limited engagements in Vietnam. Richard Nixon, who made the turn toward Communist China's recognition, once proposed a strong system of missile defenses against the Chinese communists. Against whom do the Japanese need to be defended? These days, Japan wants to be friendly with the Chinese communists, and so (?would) mention only the Soviet Union as a potential aggressor. In fact, the Chinese communists constitute a bigger threat to Japan over the long run, and a far more immediate threat to the countries in Southeast Asia. South Korea once defeated North Korea.

It was robbed of victory by the Chinese communists. Ask the free Koreans whether they regard Communist China or Communist Russia as the greatest threat. They will nominate the Chinese communists overwhelmingly.

So the defense contributions of the Republic of China are important, not only to the defense of Taiwan, but also to the defense of Japan, South Korea and Southeast Asia. The United States is receiving this defense contribution absolutely free. Moreover, it is a supplier, and therefore makes a profit on the weapons sold to free China.

As the Americans look to Japan for a larger defense contribution, they also ought to look to Taiwan and give strong support to the modernization of the Republic of China's Armed Forces. No money is asked, just the right to buy weapons that will provide equivalence with those of the Chinese communists.

[Text] Beijing, May 5 (XINHUA) -- Deng Xiaoping, vice-chairman of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China, met with Lord Killanin, former president of the International Olympic Committee [IOC], and Lady Killanin here this morning. In a cordial and friendly conversation, Deng Xiaoping paid high tribute to the efforts Lord Killanin had made in restoring China's representation in the I.O.C. during his term of office as I.O.C. president. Lord Killanin spoke of his visit to China in 1937 as a journalist.

Deng Xiaoping said: "Lord Killanin has been a good friend of the Chinese people and understands both old and new China. Although our country is still poor and backward, there are many differences between old and new China. We are determined to realize the four modernizations, develop our national economy and improve the people's living standards. We are marching forward to these goals."

Present at the meeting were Li Menghua, minister in charge of the State Physical Culture and Sports Commission; Zhong Shitong and Lu Jindong, president and vice-president of the Chinese Olympic Committee; He Zhenliang, member of the I.O.C.; and John Campbell, Irish ambassador to China.

PRC, UNIDO SPONSOR INVESTMENT-PROMOTION MEETING

[Text] Beijing, April 24 (XINHUA) -- Registration for participation in the China investment promotion meeting will be extended from April 25 to May 5, according to the preparatory committee of the meeting. The meeting will be held in Guangzhou between June 7 and 11 as scheduled. The procedures for participating in the meeting remain the same, the committee said.

The meeting will be jointly sponsored by the Chinese Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade, and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO). A total of 130 projects, including joint ventures, enterprises undertaking coproduction and processing of materials supplied by the investors, will be proposed by the Chinese side at the meeting.

The latest change to the deadline for the registration for the meeting was made because a number of foreign firms complained of the short notice they had received, according to a statement released today by the preparatory committee. Response to the announcement for the convocation of the meeting has been warm, according to the committee, but in order to enable more potential investors to come, the ministry has changed the deadline through consultation with the UNIDO, said the committee.

New Zealand Visit

[Text] Wellington, May 4 (XINHUA) -- U.S. Vice-President George Bush today concluded a two-day visit to New Zealand with assurances to further U.S.-N.Z. relations in the framework of the ANZUS treaty alliance. Bush arrived here yesterday after a similar visit to Australia where he also stressed the importance of the three nation defence treaty.

Bush said here the ANZUS alliance is "the cornerstone" of the security of the three partners. He expressed the determination of the U.S. Government to maintain a strong and credible deterrent in the face of Soviet expansionism and militarism. Bush also reaffirmed that the United States has no desire to dominate the Pacific or any other part of the world. It only wants to keep the lines of communication with New Zealand and Australia wide open, he said.

Welcoming the vice-president, New Zealand Prime Minister Robert Muldoon said that the Pacific is very different in many respects but its fundamental strategic fact has not changed and that New Zealand looks to the U.S. as the basis for security. Muldoon said Vietnam's link with Moscow "brings the Soviet Union's navy and air force many thousands of miles closer to this part of the world."

During his 4-day visit in Australia, Bush condemned the Soviet Union for its occupation of Afghanistan. "The Soviet troops are waging the third year of brutal war against the Afghan people, killing innocent men, women and children with chemicals," he said.

Bush is leaving here tomorrow on a visit to China.

RENMIN RIBAO VIEWS U.S. POSITION ON LAW OF SEA

HK041300 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 4 May 82 p 7

[Article by Wang Shifang [3769 1102 2455]: "Retreat Is No Way Out -- the Reagan Administration Suffers a Setback for its Obstinate Stand at the Law of the Sea Conference"]

[Text] After repeatedly following a tortuous course and overcoming various obstacles, the "draft convention of the law of the sea" was eventually adopted at the 11th Session of the 3d UN Conference on the Law of the Sea. The fact that this longest marathon session in the history of the United Nations could score the present achievements was the result of the unity and cooperation of the broad masses of participating nations, the Third World nations in particular, in carrying out their protracted struggle against the superpowers which have attempted to dominate the sea.

The draft convention, which was adopted after 9 years of repeated consultations, reflects the demands and principled stand upheld by the Third World nations for a long time: Every coastal state can establish 12 nautical miles of territorial sea and have sovereign rights to the waters for up to 200 nautical miles outside its territorial sea with regard to economic activities. It has been particularly affirmed that "the international seabed area and its resources are the common heritage of mankind." This convention pays attention to the interests of the developing nations, the developed nations as well as coastal and land-locked states. Therefore, it is a comparatively rational international convention which is acceptable to most countries.

Originally, this draft convention should have been adopted at the 10th session held in March or August of last year. However, due to obstacles raised by the Reagan administration, which had just taken power, on the pretext that further discussion and consideration were needed prior to its approval of the draft convention, the session was put off till this year. At that time, in accordance with the conciliatory spirit for settling disputes through negotiation, the broad masses of the Third World nations accepted the demands of the United States and agreed to listen to the opinions put forth by the United States on the revision of the draft convention at the future session. At the same time, they also stressed that any proposal which attempted to revise the principles of the draft convention was unacceptable. However, after a year of examination and consideration, at the 11th Session of the Conference on the Law of Sea held on 8 March, the Reagan administration issued a "green paper" which attempted to make 230 amendments to the draft convention. To deal with this matter, Alvaro de Soto, chairman of the "Group of 77" and Peruvian delegate, pointed out that the U.S. "green paper" violated the spirit of the declaration of the law of the sea adopted by the UN General Assembly held in 1970 because it attempts to downgrade the International Seabed Authority into an organ which can only formulate regulations or issue licenses for exploitation without any power to exercise control over exploitation activities, because it rejects the ideas that the International Seabed Authority is a decisionmaking body which can exercise real power, and that it is the duty of industrial countries to transfer exploitative technology to the authority and developing countries. In a word, as revealed by the U.S. NEWS & WORLD REPORT, the purpose of the United States "is to bid for the power to freely exploit seabed resources of the oceans of the world so that the benefits will go to those corporations and countries which carry out the exploitation work." Therefore, De Soto solemnly declared that the "Group of 77" would not accept the amendments proposed by the United States.

This stand by the United States was criticized by other participating countries. Some developed countries also expressed their discontent. The TIMES of England said: "Even sympathetic Western countries were embarrassed at the undisguised and uncomprising tactics of the Reagan adminstration for the sake of their own interests."

To extricate itself from isolation at the conference, the Reagan administration slightly modified its attitude. It lowered some of its original requirements and abandoned part of the revised draft. At the same time, the Third World nations and some developed nations put forth some proposals for revision and made some compromises. This paved the way for the final adoption of the draft convention.

It must be pointed out that although the Reagan administration modified its stand, it did not make any further advancement. It still insisted that six amendments be made to the draft convention's seabed provisions regarding the exploitation of deep sea and seabed resources. It also declared that if these amendments are not made, the draft convention would not be approved. What are the contents of these six amendments? According to the TIMES, they can be summarized into the following two points: 1) In reality, the United States wants to completely control the exploitation of deep-sea resources. 2) The United States will have the power to veto any activities proposed by the International Seabed Authority. In short, the United States has attempted to deny the principle that the international seabed area and its resources are the common heritage of mankind.

It must be pointed out that the previous three U.S. administrations of Nixon, Ford and Carter did not maintain a basically antagonistic attitude toward the content of the present "draft convention on the law of the sea" on the question of the mining of seabed resources. Therefore, the present stand adopted by the Reagan administration amounts to a negation of the stand of the three previous U.S. administrations. This cannot be considered other than a kind of retrogressive action. At the same time, the Reagan administration has also announced that it is prepared, after the rejection of its amendments, to immediately conclude a "minor treaty" with seven industrially advanced countries including England, France, West Germany and Italy and oppose the draft convention outside the conference.

According to the disclosure of U.S. NEWS & WORLD REPORT, certain officials of the State Department and industrial circles believe that even if there is no treaty (or 'draft convention on the law of the sea'), the mining of seabed resources will not be obstructed because the United States can sign a unilateral agreement with other industrialized countries of the West to protect its investment in the mining industry." A former important U.S. representative who took part in the talks of the Law of the Sea Conference also said that certain officials of the Reagan administration are not very keen on the signing of a treaty, and they would rather have no treaty. This unwittingly revealed the secret of why the Reagan administration has so obstinately stuck to its own views and why it has clashed with the countries of the Third World! At present, the United States has cast a dissenting vote in the balloting of this convention at the Law of the Sea Conference. This shows that we must still continue to wage a struggle for safeguarding the rights of various countries to develop mineral resources in international seabed areas, safeguarding the aim and principles of the convention, and thereby establishing a new order in sea law.

However, the passing of the "draft convention on the law of the sea" shows that the Reagan administration has underestimated the strength of Third World nations. Tommy Koh, the representative from Singapore and chairman of the Law of the Sea Conference, predicted a year ago that no matter how the United States may oppose it, the "draft convention on the law of the sea" will be passed next spring. Now this prediction has finally become a reality. It has dialectically proved that any country which attempts to resort to the old tactics of the gunboat policy of a century ago and ignores the legitimate interests of the Third World will definitely get nowhere. Only by adopting a spirit of reconciliation and cooperation and by means of holding consultations and negotiations will we be able to settle all international disputes.

BEIJING REFUTES SRV ARGUMENT ON TROOP WITHDRAWAL

OW050605 Beijing in Vietnamese to Vietnam 1130 GMT 4 May 82

[Ya Ming commentary: "As Regards the Kampuchean Issue, Vietnam's Argument on Troop Pullout Is Entirely Deceitful"]

[Text] During his recent trip to various countries, SRV Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach put forth the argument that Vietnam was ready to withdraw its troops from Kampuchea but with the precondition that the so-called Chinese threat be removed. Speaking to newsmen in India, he elaborate on this. He said: Only when the Kampucheans no longer feel China's threat can the Vietnamese troops withdraw from Kampuchea. One only has to briefly analyze this argument by Nguyen Co Thach to see that the Vietnamese authorities have no intention whatsoever of withdrawing their troops from Kampuchea.

Who are the Kampucheans who feel China's threat mentioned by Nguyen Co Thach? Are these Kampucheans the large number of patriotic troops and people who are opposing Vietnamese aggression? Naturally, no. They are the Phnom Penh Heng Samrin puppet clique, a group of lackeys put in power with bayonets by the Vietnamese authorities. The threat mentioned by Nguyen Co Thach is actually the large number of Kampuchean troops and people who are fighting heroically in defense of their national independence and state sovereignty. This is because Nguyen Co Thach knows very well that it is their valiant struggle that has dealt telling blows on the Vietnamese aggressors and the puppet administration and that prevents the Vietnamese authorities from establishing their colonialist rule in Kampuchea. If one says that this is a threat to the Vietnamese aggressors' and traitorous lackeys' domination, it results from the Vietnamese authorities' aggressive policy and is entirely appropriate.

China does not have a single soldier in Kampuchea, nor does it want to put Kampuchea under its sphere of influence. Only with an international spirit has China joined the ASEAN countries and most of other countries in the world in giving a necessary support to the Kampuchean people's struggle against aggression. This is an act shining with justice. By groundlessly saying that this just act by China constitutes a threat to Kampuchea, Nguyen Co Thach was deliberately trying to deceive world public opinion, attempting to make it believe in the strange logic that the presence and development of anti-Vietnamese Kampuchean forces are not caused by Vietnam's aggressive policy but by external incitement by China, and was using this pretext to justify the continued presence of Vietnamese troops in Kampuchea. Consequently, one can see that the core of Nguyen Co Thach's statement to newsmen this time is that the Vietnamese authorities have absolutely no intention of withdrawing their troops from Kampuchea and are trying to shift the blame of nonwithdrawal onto China.

Where there is aggression there are resistance and struggle. This is an objective law that does not depend on anyone's will. Since Vietnam has invaded Kampuchea, the Kampuchean people naturally struggle against this invasion and their struggle also naturally enjoys the world community's approval and support. Nguyen Co Thach is scheming to use the myth of China's threat to prevent China's support and weaken the international community's support for the Kampuchean people's anti-Vietnamese struggle so that the international community will let the Vietnamese aggressor troops massacre the Kampuchean people at will and allow them to extinguish the Kampuchean people's fire of hatred for Vietnam and turn Kampuchea into Vietnam's vassal. Although this subjective calculation by the Vietnamese authorities appears to be brilliant, it certainly will not be accepted by the international community.

Disregarding the UN Charter and the norms of international relations, the Vietnamese authorities sent more than 200,000 troops to invade Kampuchea. This is a brazen act of aggression. They must abide by the UN General Assembly resolution, unconditionally and totally withdraw their troops from Kampuchea and let the Kampuchean people settle their own affairs themselves under the pressure of no foreign intervention whatsoever.

Should the Vietnamese authorities persist in acting as they please and stubbornly stick to their aggressive stand, they will certainly bring upon themselves the tragic consequences that have befallen all aggressors in the past.

EEC REFUSES AID TO SRV UNLESS TROOPS PULLED OUT

OW040951 Beijing XINHUA in English 0931 GMT 4 May 82

[Text] Bangkok, May 4 (XINHUA) -- The European Economic Community (EEC) would refuse all development aid to Vietnam unless Hanoi pulled its military forces out of Kampuchea, today's Bangkok POST quoted a press release issued by the EEC's Bangkok office yesterday. The press release said that the outright refusal hal already been made known to Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach, who asked EEC to consider resuming aid to Vietnam during his West European trip last month. "The EEC will not envisage to take up again its programme of development aid to Vietnam as long as this country does not comply with the resolutions of the United Nations on the Kampuchean conflict," it said. It added that this was the message Nguyen Co Thach "received in Brussels where he met Edgar Pisani, member of the EEC commission responsible for development aid."

The European community, and most of its ten members, cut off aid to Vietnam in 1979 following its occupation of Phnom Penh and the first U.N. resolution calling for the withdrawal of Vietnamese forces from Kampuchea.

Yao Yilin Economic Report

OW050136 Beijing XINHUA in English 0104 GMT 5 May 82

[Text] Beijing, April 5 (XINHUA) -- China aims for a bigger national economic growth rate in 1982 with total industrial and agricultural output value to increase by four percent.

This is disclosed in the 1982 plan for economic and social development approved by the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress yesterday. The plan was submitted by Yao Yilin, vice-premier and minister in charge of the State Planning Commission.

Specific tasks and major targets proposed for 1982 national economy follow:

1. Advances in agriculture to ensure all-round development of farming, forestry, animal husbandry, sideline production and fishery.

The agricultural output value target is four percent over 1981. Grain output target is 333.5 million tons, 8.5 million tons more than 1981 and an increase of 2.6 percent. Output of cotton and sugar bearing crops should be higher 1981 and new progress is planned for forestry, animal husbandry, sideline production and fishery. This is to be done by stabilizing and improving various forms of responsibility systems for production to fire the enthusiasm of the peasants.

2. Continued expansion of light industry at a relatively faster speed to continue readjustment of the service orientation of heavy industry.

Total industrial output values is to increase by four percent, and efforts will be made to surpass this figure. The output target for yarn is 3.24 million tons, a 3.4 percent increase over 1981; sugar 3.2 million tons, a 6.7 percent increase; and a big increase is expected in the output of durable consumer goods including bicycles, sewing machines and wristwatches. The coal target is 625 million tons, among which 345 million tons are controlled by the state and a 3.9 percent increase over 1981. The oil output will be 100 million tons, the same as in 1981; electricity 313 billion kilowatts, and increase of 2.6 percent. To reduce the pressure of energy resource, efforts will be made to improve the quality of the steel and add more steel products which are in short supply. The steel output target will be 34 million tons, 4 percent less than 1981.

Improvement of economic performance will be given prime importance as the basis for a feasible growth rate. Economic results require that the products manufactured meet the needs of society, and close attention will also be given to reducing the amount of labor and material required.

3. Efforts will be made to maintain a basic balance of revenue and expenditure by increasing income and reducing expenditures.

Total revenue for 1982 under the state plan is 110.45 billion yuan, and total expenditure 113.45 billion yuan (including domestic and external loans), giving a deficit of three billion yuan. Economic results must be improved to increase state revenue. In order to reduce the deficit and maintain a basic balance of state revenue and expenditure, appropriations for capital construction are to be controlled and expenditure reduced as much as possible. The banks will be used for raising funds and using them well.

4. The scope of capital construction will be controlled and investment arranged rationally.

Total investment for capital construction in 1982 is set at 38 billion yuan, and funds for renewing and transforming industrial enterprises are to be around 25 billion yuan. Total investment for fixed assets for these two items is 63 billion yuan. Investment for new capital construction projects should be strictly controlled and the investment within the state budget should be used mainly for transportation and communications, energy and other basic construction.

5. Efforts will be made to strike a balance between market supply and demand, maintain the basic stabilization of prices and expand foreign trade.

The 1982 purchasing power by the society as a whole is planned to set at 244 billion yuan, eight percent more than 1981.

It is necessary to continue to strengthen the control of the market and prices. To raise prices arbitrarily or in disguised forms is prohibited. Speculative and smuggling activities and tax evasions must be firmly opposed.

6. Scientific and technological research will be strengthened and cultural, educational and health work will expand.

The more than 400 projects listed in the 1982 plan for scientific and technological growth include development of new products, pilot experiments, major scientific research projects and industrial experimentation. Scientific and technical personnel should cooperate in tackling urgent key problems in technical transformation and production. Scientific results should be popularized to promote economic development. The present institutions of higher learning should be improved and the structure of secondary schools reformed. Correspondence, sparetime and television universities should be expanded to train more personnel.

7. People's living standards should rise gradually on the basis of increased production.

Efforts should continue to control population growth. The plan is to assign work in 1982 for 5,600,000 people in cities and towns, and raise the wages of some government functionaries, scientific personnel, teachers and medical workers.

Yao Yilin said that China's economic development showed an upward trend in the first quarter of this year. Total industrial output value was 129,300 million yuan in the first three months of this year, an increase of 11.6 per cent over the same 1981 period. This accounted for 24.2 per cent of the 1982 target.

Effective measures should be adopted to achieve better economic results.

Close attention would be paid to the following:

First. All-round consolidation and streamlining of enterprises step by step should continue.

Second. Equipment should be renewed and technical transformation carried out in key enterprises.

Third. The results of investment should be raised, the time for construction shortened, the costs of projects lowered and building efficiency improved.

Fourth. A faster rate of circulating capital should be achieved.

Fifth. The initial results of the reform of the economic system should be consolidated and raised. Heavy blows must be dealt at smugglers, speculators, swindlers, embezzlers, bribe-takers and other economic criminals. Departmentalism, decentralization, liberalization and other erroneous tendencies should be overcome.

Sixth. Practise strict economy and combat waste.

Seventh. Ideological and political work in economic activities should be strengthened.

Wang Bingqian Budget Report

OW050156 Beijing XINHUA in English 0136 GMT 5 May 82

[Text] Beijing, May 5 (XINHUA) -- The state budget for 1982, approved by the N.P.C. Standing Committee yesterday, shows that total revenue will reach 110.45 billion yuan, 4.02 billion yuan higher than in 1981, and total expenditure will be 113.45 billion yuan, 4.48 billion yuan more than in the previous year.

This means there will be a deficit of three billion yuan, which will be possibly reduced by increasing production and practising economy.

Wang Bingqian, minister of finance, said on April 28 in his report to the 23rd Session of the Standing Committee of the Fifth National People's Congress that the fundamental principle for the budget, he said, is to achieve economic expansion by relying mainly on planned economy and supplementing it with regulation through market, and make positive efforts to increase state revenue by improving production and its economic results; to continue to restrict the scope of capital construction and budgetary expenditures, and increase allocations for energy production and communications and expenditures for culture, education and national defence; continue to follow the current policy regarding the distribution of income so that the living standards of the urban and rural population will continue to improve on the basis of increased production; and continue to maintain a basic balance between revenues and expenditures and a fundamental credit balance and ensure the stability of prices in general, so that the national economy will develop in a stable manner.

Of the total budgetary revenues for 1982, Wang Bingqian said, receipts from enterprises are expected to reach 34.41 billion yuan, taxes 64.6 billion yuan, receipts from other sources 240 million yuan, depreciation funds turned in by enterprises to the central financial departments 2.2 billion yuan, receipts from issuance of treasury bonds four billion yuan, and receipts in the form of foreign loans five billion yuan.

The breakdown of the total budgetary expenditures is essentially as follows:

1. Appropriations for capital construction total 29.73 billion yuan.

2. Funds allocated for tapping the potential of enterprises through technical transformation, plus those for subsidizing the development of new products, come to 5.42 billion yuan, about the same as last year.

3. Additional allocations for circulating funds to enterprises total 2.4 billion yuan. These are intended mainly to meet the needs of newly commissioned enterprises and certain special reserves.

4. Expenditures for aiding people's communes and other operating expenses for agriculture amount to 7.61 billion yuan, more than last year.

5. Allocations for culture, education, health and science total 18 billion yuan, representing an increase of 780 million yuan over 1981 following a growth for several consecutive years.

6. Expenditures on national defence and preparations against war are 17,870 million yuan, an increase of 1,070 million yuan over 1981.

7. Administrative expenses are 7,800 million yuan, a rise of 560 million yuan.

8. General reserves come to 2,700 million yuan.

9. 3,550 million yuan to repay foreign loans with interest.

Wang Bingqian said the state budget continued to maintain a basic balance between revenue and expenditures. This will help control market prices, remove step by step the potential dangers in the national economy and maintain economic stability. At the same time, proper arrangements are made in the budget for future development of the national economy, thus making preparations for construction in the next stage. The budget also takes into account improvement in the people's living standards on the basis of the growth of production. Proper arrangements are also made to increase employment and raise salaries for those working in government offices and scientific, cultural, educational and public health departments where there is no bonus system.

The minister said the following work must be done well: improving economic results, mobilizing the people to increase production and practise economy; streamlining financial work in enterprises, strengthening tax work and aiming to increase state revenues; placing expenditures within the financial capability of the state; continuing to implement the present policy on the distribution of revenues and maintaining the stability and continuity of the policy; and strictly enforcing state laws and discipline and waging resolute struggle against economic offences.

Wang Bingqian said preliminary statistics show total revenues for 1981 to be 106.43 billion yuan and total expenditure 108.97 billion yuan. There was a deficit of 2.54 billion yuan, a little less than estimated.

China's present political and economic situation is excellent, Wang Bingqian said in conclusion. Though China faces many difficulties, they are difficulties in advancing and can be overcome through efforts. Last year, the big financial deficit was greatly reduced, and it is quite possible to achieve a basic balance between revenue and expenditure this year.

INDUSTRIES USING OIL TO BE TAXED STARTING 1 JUL

OW050342 Beijing XINHUA in English 0824 GMT 4 May 82

[Text] Beijing, May 3 (XINHUA) -- A special tax designed to encourage China's enterprises to use coal in place of oil will be levied on enterprises which have oil-burning boilers or industrial kilns. The measure will be trial implemented as from July 1, 1982, according to a State Council circular issued recently.

In many areas, enterprises find it cheaper to burn oil than coal, so that a considerable portion of China's 100 million tons annual production of crude oil is burned as fuel. A part of this goes to heat boilers and fire kilns which is considered a waste.

In 1980, the state set the target of saving 4.19 million tons of oil a year by switching boilers and kilns over to coal. However, only 2.57 million tons of oil was saved.

The new tax is between 40 and 70 yuan for each ton of crude oil burned and 70 yuan for each ton of heavy oil. Enterprises which delay or evade paying the tax will be fined or otherwise punished by law.

MINISTRY, PROVINCES TO FINANCE POWER PROJECTS

OW030853 Beijing XINHUA in English 0741 GMT 3 May 82

[Text] Beijing, May 3 (XINHUA) -- Shanghai municipal government and four provincial governments have decided to invest 875 million yuan in installing or expanding 14 generating units together with the Ministry of Water Conservancy and Power, according to the recent issue of ECONOMIC INFORMATION.

The 14 units will have a total capacity of 3.2 million kilowatts,16 percent of the total capacity of the power stations now under construction in China, it said.

In addition to Shanghai, the partners involved are the Jiangsu, Hebei, Shandong and Heilongjiang provincial governments.

Agreements have been signed on installing eight of the generating units which will have a combined capacity of 1.8 million kilowatts, the paper said. Local governments will contribute 430 million yuan in investment funds.

Agreements will be reached soon on installing the six other generating units, which will have a total capacity of 1.4 million kilowatts. Local governments and industrial enterprises will invest 445 million yuan, the paper said.

On December 11, last year, Li Peng, the then minister of power industry and now vice-minister of water conservancy and power, announced that local governments, industrial enterprises and rural people's communes across the country were welcome to pool money to help the then Ministry of Power Industry finance construction of power plants.

The purpose of the joint undertakings is to utilize fully the financial resources of both the central people's government and the localities and to speed up the construction of power generation projects so as to increase the supply of energy urgently needed for the expansion of the national economy.

The agreements already signed cover the following projects:

-- Four generating units, each with a capacity of 300,000 kilowatts, will be installed during the fourth and fifth stages of the expansion of the Jianbi power plant, Jiangsu Province. Of the total investment of 670 million yuan, Jiangsu Province will contribute nearly one third and the Ministry of Water Conservancy and Power, more than two thirds.

-- Two generating units with a combined capacity of 400,000 kilowatts will be expanded in the third stage of expansion of the Xingtai power plant, Hebei Province. The project requires an investment of 250 million yuan, which will come from Hebei Province and the ministry.

-- Two generating units with a combined capacity of 200,000 kilowatts are to be expanded at the Huangtai power plant, Shandong Province.

The agreements to be reached soon will cover projects at the Shidongkou power station in Shanghai, the Xinhai power plant in Lianyungang port city, and at the No 3 power plant in Harbin city, Heilongjiang Province.

PLAN TO SPEED UP CAPITAL CONSTRUCTION PROJECTS

OW050336 Beijing XINHUA in English 1214 GMT 4 May 82

[Text] Beijing, May 4 (XINHUA) -- Key capital construction projects like new coal mines with an annual capacity of less than one million tons each should be completed and ready for operation within five years, and textile mills, machinery factories and cement plants in two or three years.

This suggestion was put forth at a recent national meeting on speeding up capital construction sponsored by the State Capital Construction Commission.

Delegates proposed that all large and medium-sized capital construction projects except for a few very large ones should be completed within five years instead of the eight years usually required at present.

If the time required for the construction of such projects in China is shortened by one year, the government annually will save 5,000 million yuan in wages plus 4,000-5,000 million yuan for management, according to estimates made at the meeting.

Profits gained by putting these enterprises into operation ahead of schedule, would also benefit the national economy.

For many years, capital construction in China has been overextended with limited funds and materials spread among too many projects. This prolonged the period of construction and caused waste.

Delegates commended the more economical methods of construction used in recent years. Two thermal power plants in Shandong Province, each with a capacity of 250,000 kilowatts, took only 26 and 30 months to build. The usual time required for a project like this is 18 months longer. A big coal mine with an annual capacity of 3 million tons in Yanzhou, Shandong Province, went into operation after 82 months of construction.

The State Planning Commission and the state capital construction commission, in consultation with construction departments, have chosen 50 projects from the 615 large- and medium-sized projects now under construction to introduce new and faster methods.

PLA URGED TO PROMOTE FARM, SIDELINE PRODUCTION

[Text] Beijing, 1 May (XINHUA) -- The Military Commission of the CCP Central Committee recently called on the entire army to continue to do a good job in agricultural and sideline production on the basis of the present scope of production. It urged the PLA to improve management of production, fully tap potentials and strive for better economic results. It also urged PLA personnel to achieve higher production and more earnings with less labor, to create still more wealth for the state and to make still greater contributions to army building.

This demand was proposed by Hong Xuezhi, director of the General Logistics Department, in his report on "the basic situation and future tasks of PLA agricultural and sideline production" delivered at the all-army agricultural and sideline production conference. The report has been transmitted to all PLA units by the Military Commission of the CCP Central Committee.

Undertaking agricultural and sideline production is a glorious tradition of the PLA. Since the founding of the PRC, the PLA has made fairly great progress and remarkable achievements in agricultural and sideline production. According to statistics, in the past 21 years the PLA produced 23,500 million jin of grain, 1,700 million jin of soybean, some 600 million jin of rapeseed and peanuts, 1,800 million jin of meat, 29,700 million jin of vegetables, 270 million jin of aquatic products and a large quantity of sugar and nonstaple foodstuffs. It delivered or sold 5,600 million jin of grain to the state. PLA farms afforested 52,000 mu of land and planted about 18 million trees. In addition, the PLA set aside a portion of its surplus grain to support areas affected by natural disasters. In 1981 alone, such support amounted to 4,540,000 jin.

The State Council and the Military Commission of the CCP Central Committee have fully confirmed the PLA's achievements in agricultural and sideline production.

They have clearly pointed out: For many years, the PLA has undertaken agricultural and sideline production and scored achievements. Agricultural and sideline production has played a positive role in overcoming the army's actual difficulties, easing the burden of the state, supporting socialist construction and developing, building and defending the frontier regions. It has also been of great significance in keeping and carrying forward the PLA's glorious tradition of hard struggle.

To do a still better job in agricultural and sideline production the general logistics department recently held an all-army agricultural and sideline production conference. In accordance with the guidelines of the directives issued by the State Council and the Military Commission of the CCP Central Committee and in light of the army's actual conditions, the conference seriously summed up and exchanged experience and formulated the tasks and measures for developing the army's agricultural and sideline production in the future.

The report transmitted by the Military Commission also points out: As the land of army farms borders that of rural communes, production brigades and teams and of state farms, the army farms and nearby civilian units are closely linked with each other in terms of economic interests. Proper handling of the relations between the army farms on one hand and the civilian units and the local people on the other is of great significance in strengthening the unity between the army and the government and between the army and the people. It is also significant in developing the production undertaken by the army and the local people. All army farms and production bases should make great efforts to carry out support-government and cherish-people activities, do what they can to serve the people and establish still better army-government and army-people relations.

DEMOCRACY ASSOCIATION DISCUSSES CONSTITUTION

OW040945 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0114 GMT 4 May 82

[Text] Beijing, 4 May (XINHUA) -- The Central Committee of the China Association for Promoting Democracy held an enlarged meeting of its standing committee on 3 May to discuss the draft revised constitution.

Zhou Jianren, Central Committee chairman of the association, noted in his speech that our country has carried out many major reforms of the political and economic systems since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee and we have decided on many new policies. All these are incorporated in the draft revised constitution now before us. In so doing, we have provided the legal basis and guarantee for the socialist modernization drive.

Zhou Jianren said: The united front is a magic weapon for attaining socialist modernization. In the draft revised constitution, it is stipulated that it is necessary to continue to consolidate and expand the united front, which covers all democratic parties, and to let the people's CPPCC go a step further in bringing its important role into play. These stipulations fully attest to the importance the state is attaching to the united front and the democratic parties.

He noted that the draft revised constitution also stipulates the need to give full scope to the role of intellectuals in building socialist modernization. The vast majority of the association's members are intellectuals, who feel very encouraged by these stipulations. We must make efforts to give play to our wisdom and professional knowledge and make new contributions in building socialist material and spiritual civilization.

Ye Shengtao, Central Committee vice chairman of the association, pointed out that before the draft revised constitution was published for discussion by people throughout the country, it had been discussed first by the concerned departments throughout the country for 4 months and then by the NPC Standing Committee.

It is more perfect than the three previous constitutions. He said: The draft revised constitution provides the guarantee for building socialist spiritual and material civilization and making China into a modern socialist power.

Lei Jieqiong, Central Committee vice chairman of the association, said that the draft revised constitution represents the defining, in explicit terms and in the form of law, of the deep changes that have taken place and major achievements that have been made in the past few years in the political, economic and cultural fields in our country. This reflects China's resolve to strengthen rule by law. She felt that the stipulations in the draft revised constitution that call for an expansion of the functions and powers of the NPC Standing Committee are in keeping with the actual situation in our country.

Other speakers at the meeting included Central Committee Vice Chairman Xu Boxin and other leading members Ge Zhicheng, Xu Chubo, Wu Wenzao, Wang Baochu, Wang Hongzhen and Ma Keqiang of the association, while Xie Bingxin, Central Committee vice chairman of the association, delivered a written statement. They called on members of the association to actively take part in the discussion of the draft revised constitution, seriously offer their suggestions for revision and do their share in bringing about a perfect constitution.

REPORT ON AGRICULTURAL RESPONSIBILITY SYSTEM

[Article by the investigation team of the General Office of the CCP Central Committee and the Central Party School: "Several Questions of Cognition on Perfecting the Agricultural Production Responsibility System"]

[Text] We have recently carried out an investigation in some rural areas and we feel that several problems have to be solved in further perfecting the rural production responsibility system.

1. We Must Take a Scientific Attitude Toward Perfecting the Production Responsibility System

Viewed from the different places where we visited, we discovered a new situation in the development of the production responsibility system. People have been perfecting the various forms of the production responsibility system, overcoming their shortcomings by learning from other's strong points. For instance, in places where the system of "unified management and assigning output quotas to individual able-bodied laborers" has been implemented, people quickly realized the advantages of the easily implemented system of "large-scale assignment of responsibilities," and adopted the method of "turning over fixed quotas." Some developed the system of signing contracts for specialized jobs. In some places where the system of "assigning production quotas to each household" had been implemented, some people realized the advantages of the system of "unified management" and restored and increased production items which are to be under "unified management." In places where the system of "signing contracts for specialized jobs" had been implemented, some people also practiced the system of "assigning output quotas to individual able-bodied laborers" and "large-scale assignment of responsibility" of certain production tasks. Some places combined various forms of the responsibility system which suited the local conditions, adopting a system which combined the characteristics of the system of "unified management, signing contracts for specialized jobs, assigning output quotas to each laborer and assigning responsibility for distribution." All these show that the various forms of the responsibility system have made breakthroughs in certain areas in their initial forms in the course of their perfection. They are being developed toward a better orientation according the local productivity, the cadres' management level and the peasants' degree of awareness. This new change is being brought about by the broad masses of cadres and commune members by continuing to uphold the party's ideological line of seeking truth from facts. It is more conducive to giving play to the superiority of collective economy and arousing the enthusiasm of individual laborers and accelerating agricultural production.

However, in this new situation, some cadres are guiding perfection of the responsibility system with a preconceived notion. Some other cadres fail to understand and solve problems from an overall point of view and manage to push forward a certain form of the responsibility system with great difficulty for the sake of "pleasing the higher levels and making better reports," thus bringing pressure to those communes and brigades which are adopting appropriate forms in accordance with their local conditions. In view of the actual situation, the perfection of the responsibility system has not been completed. The situation and productivity vary in different places. Under the premise of upholding the principle of "not changing the public ownership system and the production responsibility system," we must allow the cadres and commune members to proceed from their local conditions in deciding which form of the production responsibility system to implement. We must allow the production responsibility system which has already been implemented to undergo a stage of inspection and observation in actual practice; we must not absolutize one form of the responsibility system. Even when a small number of communes and brigades implement a responsibility system which is different from the principal form of production responsibility system implemented in the local area, we must pay attention to protecting their enthusiasm and supporting them in doing a good job of perfecting the responsibility system in light of local conditions. Leading organs must carry out research and investigations, seriously sum up new experiences, adopt a scientific attitude to guide the masses in the course of stabilizing and perfecting the production responsibility system and pay attention to prevent the modern practice of "doing things in a rigid way regardless of the situation."

2. "Unity" and "Decentralization" Are Dialectically United

Currently, many places are grasping the correct handling of "unity" and "decentralization" as an important link in perfecting the production responsibility system. However, there are two one-sided understandings of this question: First, people resent the word "unity," thinking that it means "rigid control;" second, those who believed in the past in the idea that "decentralization practice brings chaos" begin to "unify" everything and use old methods to "tailor" new things when they hear the proposal of "unified management." They are all setting "unity" against "decentralization," thus affecting the perfection of the responsibility system.

"Unity" and "decentralization" are two inseparable aspects in the management of the collective agricultural economy at the present stage. In fact, they are manifestations of the movement of contradictions between the productivity and the production relations on the production responsibility system. Only by correctly handling the relationship between these two, can we achieve a situation in which there is "flexible control and orderly management of decentralized practice."

First, there must be rational "unity" and "decentralization." "Unity" has a different meaning in unified control and unified management. The former means unified organization of production by the collective and the distribution mechanism, and the latter means management of the individual peasant households who handle their own affairs and are responsible for their own profits and losses, such as overall arrangement for cultivation plans and supervision on making good on contracts. "Decentralization" also has a different meaning in individual undertakings and decentralized management under the system of unified management. Although there aresome items which are under decentralized management included in the unified management plans, and certain individual undertakings are under the control of unified management, they are only of secondary importance. Production, despite its scale, has its own adaptability and limitations under certain circumstances and in different places. In order to correctly handle the relationship between "unity" and "decentralization," we must first decide whether we want unified management or decentralized management in accordance with the local conditions.

Second, "unity" and "decentralization" must be integrated together. When unified management is practiced, it is necessary, according to the characteristics of agricultural production, to assign jobs to groups, households and laborers. Decentralized management of certain tasks is conducive to solving difficulties in compiling statistics and exercising supervision over quality and quantity of farm work, and giving play to individual's initiative and creativeness. For instance, some areas in Gaoyou County in Jiangsu Province have included key production measures such as fixing of overall plans, allocation of large- and medium-size farming machines, arrangement for minor plans and farming, large-scale farmwork in water conservation projects construction and selection of fine seed strains in the "unified management" plan, and assigned cadres at all levels to take charge of it. However, contracts were signed with individual laborers regarding harvesting, tending of young plants, cultivation, field management, sale of agricultural and sideline products, repair of farm machines and purchase of small farming tools. Tending of young plants, drawing water, plowing fields and other farmwork were carried out under the management of both the collective and the individuals. In this way, they could maintain "flexible control," giving play to the superior feature of the collective economy and arousing the individual laborers' enthusiasm for labor by giving them greater decisionmaking power in arranging for production and in promoting domestic sideline occupation. There must be necessary unified management in areas where the system of decentralized management is practiced in order to solve problems which are too difficult for single households to solve and to ensure construction of public facilities. For instance, in Lankao County, Zuozhai brigade and Huangkou brigade have the same water conditions. While implementing the production responsibility system, Huangkou brigade divided up the motor-pumped wells and the water channels. During the great drought last year, wheat production decreased by 20,000 jin because the fields had not been sufficiently irrigated. Whereas in Zuozhai brigade where unified management was upheld regarding the motor-pumped wells and the watvor channels, wheat production increased by 120,000 jin last year despite the drought. From this, we can see that the production results are absolutely different without an appropriate system of unified management.

Third, it is necessary to choose the appropriate contract system, rationally coordinating "control" and "decentralization." The implementation of the contract system enables us to better integrate reward for labor results, appropriately coordinate interest of the collective and the individual and simultaneously give play to the enthusiasm of the collective and the individual. The various forms of the responsibility system of signing contracts which are being implemented at present include both "control" and "decentralization." Naturally, they are different as far as the content and the extent are concerned. In choosing the right kind of responsibility system, we must proceed from the local conditions and from whether or not it is conducive to giving play to the superiority of collective economy and the individual laborers' enthusiasm for production and whether or not it is conducive to speeding up the development of production.

3. We Must Integrate the Major Factors Such As Arousing the Individual Commune Members' Enthusiasm for Production and Rationally Utilizing the Productive Forces

The establishment of the production responsibility system has vigorously aroused the peasants' enthusiasm. This is also one of the important factors accounting for a rapid development of agricultural production over the past few years. However, comrades in charge in some areas have neglected certain production conditions and have one-sidely stressed the role of the enthusiasm of the agricultural households. In these areas, land was divided up in a per capita ratio manner and "all able-bodied laborers are to work in the fields." Thus, the procedure of work in large fields was changed and work was carried out by individual households instead of by certain responsible people as in the past. This not only affected the productivity and the development of diversification, but would most certainly bring about disastrous results.

Yinchun Prefecture in Jiangxi Province has obtained relatively good results in handling this question. Under the system of unified management and in accordance with the principle of overall development and comprehensive management of agriculture, forestry, animal husbandry, sideline occupation and fishery, they drew up an overall plan regarding the labor force and the natural resources. The number of laborers working in large fields is to be fixed in accordance with the size of the fields; and the surplus labor is to be organized to promote diversification. Division of work is carried out according to technical skills and physical strength and the system of remuneration according to output has been implemented. Thus, a situation of "signing contracts for each kind of production and creating new job opportunities, first encouraging specialized production and later signing contracts" has been achieved. Such practice has proved effective. First, the situation of "all laborers are to work in fields" is changing toward the orientation of signing contracts for specialized production. Second, it gives play to the skills of the laborers. All experienced farmers will work in the fields, artisans will engage in developing diversification, and more capable persons will be trained in the course of developing specialized production. Third, the weaker laborers will also have their own roles to play. Yichun Prefecture had paid attention to integrating major factors such as arousing the laborers' enthusiasm for production and rationally utilizing the productive forces before deciding on the appropriate form of the responsibility system to implement. In this way, they have aroused the commune members' enthusiasm by implementing the system of remuneration according to output and have developed diversification by launching division of work. Thus, the labor force is appropriately integrated with the means of production, ensuring that agricultural production develops toward the orientation of comprehensive production, specialization and socialization. The form of the responsibility system has been relatively stabilized over the past few years. This has brought about a situation in which production development is rapid, the collective economy is consolidated, the income of commune members is doubled and social order is good.

The experience is Yichuan Prefecture has shown us that in places where the responsibility system has been set up, we should take the rational utilization of the productive forces and other major factors as important means of perfecting the production responsibility system on the basis of stabilizing it instead of continuously changing the form of the responsibility system. The development of agricultural production depends on giving play to the enthusiasm of the peasants and on the rational organization and utilization of the enthusiasm for labor, enabling it to be rationally integrated with the means of production. The rational utilization of the labor force, such as the new productive forces created by means of coordination and division of labor, is termed by Marx as "the natural social labor force." We should attach great importance to the utilization of this "natural force."

4. We Should Not Interpret Distribution According to Labor As "Undiminished Proceeds of Labor"

We have discovered that a tendency of neglecting the collective exists at present in some places. Reflecting of such a tendency on distribution are that there is no guarantee for retention of collective funds, there are insufficient funds for taking care of dependents of martyrs and armymen and "households which enjoy the five guarantees," and that there is no money for running collective welfare programs.

Apart from insufficient leadership, another factor accounting for the emergency of such a situation is that some people have a wrong interpretation of the principle of distribution according to labor. Some people think that "distribution according to labor," in its fullest sense, means obtaining undiminished proceeds of labor, and that there should be no retention of collective funds when the principle of remuneration according to labor is thoroughly implemented. In fact, this question has already been made clear.

Marx pointed out in "Critique of the Gotha Program" that distribution according to labor is made after expenses for production and expanded reproduction, collective expenses (such as schools, health programs and so on) and social relief funds have been deducted from the total social product. "Accordingly, the individual producer receives back from society -- after the deductions have been made -- exactly what he contributes to it." It is obvious that the implementation of distribution according to labor and the necessary retention of collective funds are not contradictory. We cannot indiscriminately say that the principle of distribution according to labor is not thoroughly implemented or that egalitarianism is promoted when the laborers bear public expenses. The gradual increase in the peasants' contribution to the accumulation fund and the public welfare fund under the premise of increasing production and increasing income is a demand of the socialist principles and a specific manifestation of the superior feature of the collective economy which accords with the fundamental interest of the peasants. Egalitarian practice of "making no difference whether you work hard or not" which was common in the past collective economy, and some cadres' malpractice of appropriating public property and not doing a good job of distribution are problems that we must solve now. The establishment of the production responsibility system plays a very important role in solving these problems, and we must do a better job in the future. However, we must ensure the necessary retention of collective funds. This is a major question in correctly handling the relationships between the state, the collective and the individual at present. In order to solve this question, we must carry out necessary political and ideological work and clarify misinterpretations of the principle of distribution according to labor.

5. The Implementation of the Production Responsibility System Is a Good Classroom for the Peasants and Cadres To Study Socialist Agriculture

The current implementation of the agricultural responsibility production system not only has made labor tasks explicit to the producers, but also involves improvement in the labor organization, form of labor, method of wage calculation and other links in the collective economy. It is in fact a readjustment of certain inappropriate parts in the production relations in the rural areas. This is a profound reform which involves millions and tens of millions of people. This reform is a turning point in the collective economy. It has speeded up prosperity and development of the rural economy and has brought about a series of profound changes including the people's ideology.

By carrying out this investigation, we discovered that the course of setting up and perfecting the production responsibility system is a course in which people have been emancipated from the past "leftist" ideological shackles, and is a course in which people have been educated with scientific socialism. By means of actual practice over the past few years, people deeply realized that only the present form of the collective economy -- with organizations of different scales, different forms of production, and where there is both "unified" and "decentralized" management -- is the socialist collective economy which accords with the economic situation in our country's rural areas. Individual undertakings which are carried out on the basis of adhering to the public ownership system are also included under the framework of collective economy and are linked with the collective and the state through the signing of contracts. The collective economy itself is not responsible for a long-term slow-paced development of agriculture in our country which was a consequence of disturbances due to "leftist" things. If people understand the questions in this way, they will be able to improve their ideological level and more spontaneously persist in the orientation of collectivization. Reality has proved that the practice of implementing the production responsibility system really serves as a good classroom for the broad masses of cadres and peasants to learn how to follow the socialist path in the rural areas.

"Socialism which is both vivid and creative is set up by the masses themselves." Currently, the various forms of the responsibility system practiced in different places have also been set up by the broad masses of peasants and people themsleves under the leadership of the party. In the course of setting up the production responsibility system. the peasants also created conditions for overcoming their own old ideas and habits. In the course of perfecting the production responsibility system, Huarong County in Hunan Province has mobilized the masses to seriously sum up experiences since the implementation of the responsibility system and set up a responsibility system which has the characteristics of "unified management, division of work according to different trades and assigning output quotas to individual able-bodied laborers." Such a responsibility system is not only conducive to developing production, increasing income and developing specialization, but also negates some peasants' original idea of small-scale peasant economy such as the demands for "equal share of land" and independent undertakings. In the light of this, we see that only the production responsibility system of the collective economy which proceeds from reality and is a demonstration of respect for the peasants' creativeness is attractive to the peasants. Perfecting the responsibility system is in fact an efficient approach to carrying out socialist education for the peasants.

The production responsibility system has linked up responsibility with the economic benefits, providing the commune members with an internal economic motive force in learning culture and technology. Currently, a promising phenomenon has appeared in the rural areas, the broad masses of peasants are enthusiastic in learning culture and technology. The agricultural technicians have been "visited very frequently and are popular among the masses," and the supply of books on agrotechnology has fallen short of demand. We must cherish the peasants' enthusiasm in this and grasp organizing commune members and cadres to learn culture, technology and management as an important task in the course of perfecting the responsibility system. We must work in the same way as we ran winter schools and evening schools during the period of land reform and collectivization. In the wake of the improvement of the cultural and educational levels, there will be more and more people who know science, who have technical and management skills.

Currently, the production responsibility system has been generally established in the rural areas and is being further perfected and consolidated by means of summing of experiences. We must strengthen our understanding of the CCP Central Committee's proposal that the road of collectivization and the production responsibility system will remain unchanged for a long time. We must carry out serious analysis and properly deal with new situations and new problems. We believe, in the wake of the gradual perfection of the production responsibility system, there will be great prospects for economic construction and social development in the rural areas.

RENMIN RIBAO ARTICLE ON REINVIGORATION OF CHINA

[Article by Li Wenhai [2621 2429 3189]: "The Origin of the Slogan 'Reinvigorating China'"]

[Text] When and under what circumstances was the slogan "reinvigorating China" first raised in China's history?

It was first raised at the end of the last century during the period of the Sino-Japanese war and the Yihetuan movement (1894-1900), and was raised by several different political organizations successively.

After the opium war, China was invaded by the capitalist powers and was reduced step by step to the status of the semicoloncial and semifeudal country. After the Sino-Japanese war, the aggression by the imperialists was aggravated. They vied with each other in carving up spheres of influence on China's territory. Thus, China was faced with the unprecedented crisis of national subjection and genocide. This aroused great indignation on the part of the Chinese people, who were showing serious concern for the fate of their country.

"In what part of the world does China lie? Ask the 400 million compatriots with tears in their eyes." (Tan Sitong: "Impressions") Filled with grief and indignation, people were pondering and exploring ways to save China from sinking into the great ocean.

The slogan of "reinvigorating China" was raised under such an historical background.

In November 1894 and February 1895, Dr Sun Yat-sen founded the first bourgeois revolutionary organization, the Xing Zhong Hui [Society for Revival of China] in Honolulu and Hong Kong. The "constitution" of this organization pointed out: "At present, the big powers, who have long cast greedy eyes on China's mineral and other natural resources, are glaring covetously at China's territory like a tiger or eagle eyeing their prey. They have successively nibbled away or carved up China's territory. Thus, people are apprehensive about the present situation." In order to save the motherland from perishing, they loudly appealed to the public that "it is imperative to save the nation and save the people." They solemnly announced that "the purpose for the founding this society is to get in touch with all noble-minded Chinese both at home and abroad to save China from perishing, to reinvigorate China and explore to find the way for making China prosperous." ("Collective Works of Sun Yat-sen," vol 1, pp 19, 22) It was Dr Sun Yat-sen who first raised the clarion call for "reinvigorating China."

Not long after that, Kang Youwei, Liang Qichao and others launched the constitutional reform and modernization movement. Although the direct objective of this movement was to reform the feudal political system, the fundamental motive force was to save China from perishing. During the movement, the reformists repeatedly pointed out the danger facing our motherland: "Being surrounded and coveted by big powers such as Russia coming from the north, England coming from the west, France coming from the south and Japan coming from the east, China is in great danger!" (Kang Youwei: "Introductory Remarks on Qiang Xue Hui") This was why they also raised the question of "reinvigorating China." Kang Youwei said: "How can I tolerate what the whole world bemoans? After pondering deeply over the matter, I find there is only one way out to save China, and that is to unite with other people to avenge the insult and rejuvenate China." ("Introductory Remarks on Bao Guo Hui") Liang Qichao also said: "If China cannot work out its own salvation and defend itself, it cannot escape from the fate of being irretrievably on the decline." Therefore, all noble-minded people must "seize the opportunity for China to save and defend itself." ("Introductory Remarks on Nan Xue Hui") What was mentioned here, such as "avenge the insult and rejuvenate China," China's "own salvation" and so forth had the same meaning as "reinvigorating China."

Soon after the failure of the 1898 reform movement, the anti-imperialist and patriotic Yihetuan movement was waged like a hurricane all over the country. In this great struggle, the slogan "reinvigorate China" was raised again. According to some historical materials, "(Yihetuan) started the movement under the name of arresting foreign missionaries and reinvigorating China." ("Modern Historical Materials of Shandong Province," book 3, p 329) In some of their leaflets, bulletins and announcements, they condemned the crimes of the imperialists who "brought disaster to China" and showed their determination to "safeguard China and drive out foreigners." Although these documents bore some superstitious colors and the inclination of indiscriminate antiforeignism, the essential spirit of patriotism in this thin garb could still easily be seen.

It was certainly not a coincidence that in the same historical period, different political organizations happened to raise the slogans which were more or less alike. This shows that at that time, the struggle for "reinvigorating China" was a pressing demand of the time and a common desire of the people. The raising of this slogan was a natural result of the development of history. All patriotic people who wished to see the independence of their motherland and the freedom of the nation strongly felt the necessity and forwardness of "reinvigorating China."

In fact, it was encouraged and urged by the lofty aspiration of "reinvigorating China" that many noble-minded people successively plunged into the 1898 reform movement, the Yihetuan movement and later, to the 1911 revolution. The slogan "reinvigorate China" was a powerful motive force in that historical period, which impelled people to join the revolution.

Today, the situation has fundamentally changed. As a result of the unyielding struggle of the Chinese people, especially of the great victory of the people's revolution led by the CCP, the dark rule of the imperialists and the domestic reactionaries was overthrown. The Chinese people have stood up and built an independent socialist country. But the spirit of devoting oneself to the "reinvigoration of China" in modern Chinese history must be inherited and carried forward.

RENMIN RIBAO ON INCOME, PRICES, LIVING STANDARDS

[Article by Yang Shengming [2799 5110 2494]: "Income, Prices, Living Standards"]

[Text] Cash income and commodity retail prices are very closely linked to people's living standards. If retail commodity prices are unchanged, then the greater the people's income the higher their standard of living. This is a relationship of direct proportion. And when people's cash income is settled, the relationship between price levels and standard of living becomes an inverse one. When that happens, a rise in prices means a fall in living standards; and a fall in prices reflects a rise in living standards. People always lack all-round observation and correct understanding of these complex relationships and are prone to take a one-sided view of them. They either ignore the improvement in living standards brought about by increased incomes, and categorically assert that living standards are falling just because prices are rising; or else they ignore the effect of rising prices on people's living standards and assert that people's living standards are rising just because incomes are increasing. These two types of onesidedness exist in practical life. However, the latter type is rather more common at present, and it is therefore necessary to analyze it.

People's standard of living is determined by many factors, and first by the development of social production, especially of consumer materials. When the development of production is settled, living standards are mainly determined by the two factors of cash income and retail commodity prices. The level of prices is the major factor affecting people's living standards, but it is not the only one. Apart from the price factor, there is also the factor of the rise or fall of cash income. Hence, in judging whether living standards are rising or falling over a given period, we cannot just base ourselves on changes in price levels but have to carry out all-round observation and comprehensive analysis in connection with the rise or fall in people's incomes.

The two factors of cash income and retail commodity prices may have different compositions and thus produce different effects on people's living standards. In the main, there are the following situations: 1) income rises, prices fall, and living standards improve; 2) income falls, prices rise, and living standards decline; 3) the rate of income growth exceeds that of price increases, and people's living standards rise; 4) the rate of price increases exceeds that of increase of income, and people's living standards fall. Generally speaking, the third situation has existed for several decades in many socialist countries following the establishment of the socialist system. This has been the case in China in recent years; prices have risen somewhat, but people's incomes have risen more and exceeded the rate of price rises.

The increase in people's incomes in China has greatly accelerated since 1979. From 1979 to 1981 the peasants' incomes rose by 52 billion yuan as a result of the increased state procurement prices for agricultural and sideline products and the reduction in the rural tax burden in some areas. Average peasant income for 1981 is estimated at 215 yuan, an increase of 80 yuan -- nearly 60 percent -- over 1978. This was double the total increase in the peasants' income during the 10 years of the "Great Cultural Revolution." In the past 3 years the income of the workers has increased by 40.5 billion yuan as a result of finding employment for 26 million urban residents, increasing wages and paying bonuses.

The national wage bill for 1981 is estimated at 82 billion yuan, an increase of 25.1 billion -- about 44 percent -- over the 1978 figure of 56.9 billion yuan. Average cash income of workers in enterprises owned by the whole people in 1981 is estimated at 820 yuan, an increase of 176 yuan -- 27 percent -- over the 1978 figure of 644 yuan. Such a high growth rate has been rarely seen in Chinese history.

As far as retail commodity prices are concerned, the state always pursued basic stability so as to ensure that people's standard of living will rise as their incomes increase. In order to increase the peasants' income, the state has since 1979 encouraged their production enthusiasm, narrowed the "scissors gap" between the prices of industrial and agricultural products and greatly increased the procurement prices for agricultural and sideline products. However, to maintain retail price stability in the markets, the state has spent a lot of money on two types of subsidies. On the one hand it has provided the workers 5 yuan a month in nonstaple food price subsidies due to the increased prices of meat, poultry, eggs and so on, and this has amounted to 160 yuan per worker in 3 years; on the other it has provided price subsidies to units dealing in grain and oil due to the emergence of the problem of "hanging upside down" caused by the fact that the unchanged sales prices of grain and oil are lower than the producement prices. This subsidy has amounted to over 30 billion yuan in 3 years. In the past 3 years, the state has provided a subsidy of about 0.1 yuan for every 1 jin of grain supplies to urban residents and a subsidy of about 0.8 yuan for every 1 jin of edible oil. Since the state has adopted various measures such as price subsidies, the rise in retail prices has not been very great in the past 3 years. The prices rose by 5.8 percent in 1979, 6 percent in 1980, and 2 percent in 1981. Of course, conditions in price rises in various commodities vary in the urban and rural areas, some rising by a greater amount and some by a lesser. For instance, in 1980 the average retail price level, including state-managed list prices, negotiated prices, and prices in rural trade fairs rose by 6 percent over the whole year compared with the previous year; this included a rise of 8.1 percent in the towns and 4.4 percent in the rural areas. The changes in consumer goods prices included a rise of 10.5 percent in foodstuffs, while the list prices of nonstaple foodstuffs in state-managed commercial units rose by 13.8 percent. Since expenditure on food accounts for a considerable proportion of living costs, while the rise in food prices was relatively great, people's feelings about the matter were all the more heartfelt.

The data cited above show that retail commodity prices have risen quite a bit since 1979, but people's cash income has increased still more. We can reach the following conclusion by making a comprehensive analysis of these two aspects: the rise in prices has increased the people's daily life economic burdens, and has had a certain effect on households with relatively low incomes; however, generally speaking, due to the greater increase in cash income, which has greatly outstripped the rise in prices, there has certainly been no decline in living standards on account of the rise in prices, and these standards have shown a notable improvement. According to a survey conducted by the State Statistics Bureau in 46 cities including Beijing, Shanghai and Tianjian, in 1981 each member of a worker household had 38.64 yuan cash income a month for expenditure on living costs, an increase of 12.31 yuan -- 46.8 percent -- over the 1978 figure of 26.33 yuan, and after allowing for the price-rise factor in the cost of living, the actual income increase was 31.3 percent. It is obviously onesided to assert that people's living standards have declined just because prices have gone up, without taking into account the increase in people's cash income.

It should be noted that the wage grades of a very small number of workers have not been readjusted since 1956, and the rise in prices naturally has a rather great effect on their living standards. There is no question about that. We should take appropriate care of them when readjusting wages in the future. At the same time we must also realize that when investigating people's living standards we should estimate the social and collective expenditures as well as individual consumer expenditures. State investment in construction for the people's life, including culture, education and public health, urban public utilities, workers' housing and so on amounted to 47 billion yuan during the period 1979-81, showing a big increase over previous such figures.

Some 220 million square meters of workers' housing were built during those 3 years, equal to the total for the 12 years 1966-77. Many workers, including some whose wage grades have not been readjusted for a long time, have benefited in this respect, and it has played an important role in improving their living standards.

The future price trend in China is one of some rise amid stability. In these circumstances, a very important question is that of how to ensure that people' living standards will gradually improve amid stability. To avoid price rises affecting living standards, it is essential to ensure that the growth of people's cash income exceeds that of price rises. We can succeed in this. During the first 5-year plan, workers' average wages rose by 42.8 percent and peasant incomes by 27.9 percent, while retail commodity prices rose by only 8.6 percent. We have also succeeded in this respect in the past 3 years. However, during the nearly 20 years from 1958 to 1976, the rate of price increases indeed exceeded the rise in average wages. So long as we absorb these positive and negative experiences and correctly handle the relationship between the growth of cash income and the rise of prices, then, even if prices do rise somewhat, they will not affect the gradual improvement in people's living standards.

Generally speaking, it is good that the growth of people's cash income exceeds the rise in prices; this helps improve living standards. However, we should certainly not conclude from this that the faster people's cash income rises, the better. People's cash income cannot rise too much for a certain time, since it is constrained by many factors, especially by the growth rate of labor productivity. The growth rate of people's cash income can in principle only be lower than the growth rate of labor productivity and not higher than it. Only thus can we ensure that, under conditions of basic price stability, the state will have still more money to spend on expanded reproduction, scientific research, culture, education, public health, national defense and so on in addition to improving the people's standard of living. We must also realize that if the growth rate of people's average cash income exceeds the rate of increase in labor productivity for a long time, this is bound to result in too much money chasing too few goods or to lead to price rises. Such a situation will not help improve living standards. During the first 5-year plan, labor productivity in industrial enterprises rose by 52 percent, which was higher than the average wage increase rate. This was relatively normal. However, in recent years, the average wage growth rate has exceeded the growth of labor productivity. If this situation develops for a long time, it will not be good for improving living standards or for developing production; it must therefore be changed as quickly as possible. One way to do this is to appropriately control average cash income growth rate, such as by strictly controlling the prices of agricultural and sideline products and bonus payments; another way is to strive to raise labor productivity and ensure that its growth rate exceeds the average cash income growth rate. Developing production is the basis of improving living standards. In the final analysis, we can only gradually improve our standard of living by promoting production, raising labor productivity and improving economic returns.

ANHUI'S ZHOU ZIJIAN ADDRESSES CCP REPRESENTATIVES

OW300135 Hefei Anhui Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 27 Apr 82

[Excerpts] Zhou Zijian, acting first secretary of the Anhui Provincial CCP Committee, stressed in his report to a provincial CCP representatives' conference that we must strengthen our training in party spirit, conscientiously rectify the party's work style and develop in depth the struggle against corruption and degeneration.

On 22 April Comrade Zhou Zijian delivered a report at the provincial CCP representatives conference entitled "Strengthen Party Spirit, Rectify the Party's Work Style and Bring Into Full Play the Party's Role as the Vanguard of the Working Class in the New Period." He said at the beginning of his report: Our country is in an important historical period of drastic changes and rapid development during which it is bringing order out of chaos and emerging from the plight of being poverty stricken and becoming prosperous. The tasks placed on the party are manifold and arduous. The whole party has been asked by its Central Committee to step up efforts aimed at promoting socialist material civilization, on the one hand, and to speed up the process of building a socialist spiritual civilization on the other, so that new achievements in these two fields of work can be scored to the satisfaction of all. The key to fulfilling this fighting task lies in strengthening party work, rectifying the party's work style, building the party still better and bringing into full play the party's role as the vanguard of the working class so that it can unite the broad masses of the people and lead them in the common struggle.

Reviewing party work in the past several years, Comrade Zhou Zijian pointed out: During the past few years, especially since the third plenary session of the current party Central Committee, the provincial and other CCP committees at various levels have earnestly implemented the central authorities' line, principles and policies; exerted efforts to bring order out of chaos in an all-round way; corrected leftist-deviation mistakes; completed without a hitch the shifting of emphasis in work; and adhered to the principle of further readjusting the economy and promoting political stability, thus bringing about a fundamental change in the situation in Anhui.

Touching on the question of the party's work style, Comrade Zhou Zijian repeatedly stressed the necessity of stepping up training in party spirit and conscientiously rectifying the party's work style. He said: It is necessary to clearly understand that great damage was done to the party's fine tradition and work style by the serious sabotage of Lin Biao and the gang of four during the 10 years of internal chaos. Although the party style has improved somewhat through several years of efforts, it still remains a cardinal question. To strengthen party work it is imperative to place top priority on rectification of the party's work style, strengthen education for party members and intensify their training in party spirit and self-cultivation.

After expounding on the question of rectifying the party's work style, Comrade Zhou Zijian sternly pointed out: The current serious criminal activities in the economic field have corrupted and are still corrupting our party members and our cadres. Using money to pave a way for their advances is the basic means used by the lawbreakers to commit criminal offenses. It has thrown into the mire of committing economic crimes a number of persons in our ranks who are despondent and blinded by lust for gain because of their pleasure seeking and their pursuit of money. If this state of affairs is allowed to continue, it will certainly create extremely serious damage to the mechanism of our party and to our country's socialist cause. It is therefore imperative to develop in depth the struggle against corruption and degeneration. We should strengthen education in communist ideology, party discipline and the socialist legal system in the party and among party cadres, especially among medium-level and high-ranking cadres, as well as among their children and relatives.

It must be understood that our party is the vanguard of the working class, that Communist Party members must always uphold the purity of communism and that they must not be allowed to downgrade the ideological level and the political awareness of Communist Party members and it goes without saying that the party will not tolerate their degeneration.

[Excerpts] Immediately after the draft of the revised Constitution of the PRC and Comrade Peng Zhen's related explanation were published, they were studied and discussed by leading comrades of the Nanjing PLA units and responsible persons of the headquarters, the political department and the logistics department of the units. Commander Nie Fengzhi and First Political Commissar Guo Linxiang personally joined the discussion. They also set demands and made arrangements for various army units to study the aforementioned documents.

During the study and discussion, all comrades cheerfully said: Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, both the political and economic situations of our country have undergone a drastic change and shown considerable development. Under these circumstances, the people throughout the country are in urgent need of a better constitution. The publication at present of the draft of the revised constitution for discussion by the people throughout the country indicates that the party and government are deeply concerned about the people. It signifies the excellent political situation of our country and the high degree of our socialist democracy.

Comrade Guo Linxiang said: The draft of the revised constitution takes the resolution adopted by the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee as a basis and sums up the basic experience over the past 32 years since the founding of our country. It is well written. The draft of the revised constitution restores the post of chairman of the state. This is necessary in order to make our state system perfect and is more in line with the actual traditions and wishes of our people. In addition, the draft of the revised constitution contains a provision on upholding the four basic principles. This is a matter of great immediate importance and far-reaching historical significance.

To further the study, Commander Nei Fengzhi said that from now on the study and discussion of the draft of the revised constitution should be grasped as a matter of prime importance at present. He urged that time and effort be devoted to reading and discussing the draft of the revised constitution, article by article and sentence by sentence, so as to understand it clearly and profoundly.

[Summary] The 12th Xizang regional posts and telecommunications work conference was recently held in Lhasa. Yin Fatang, first secretary of regional CCP committee, and Jiang Cuo, vice chairman of regional people's government, attended the conference and gave speeches. Having summed up experiences, the conference pointed out the following demands and tasks for the construction and management of regional posts and telecommunications work between now and 1985.

The total amount of taxable posts and telecommunications work should increase by 3 percent over that of 1981 and the income of posts and telecommunications work should amount to approximately 3.8 million yuan. To ensure communications between Lhasa and Beijing, a ground satellite station is to be built in Lhasa. To ensure communications within Xizang, networks of long-distance phone lines are to be constructed in five districts in Lhasa municipality between May and June. Telex between Lhasa and Shannan and Rikaze and long-distance phone lines between Lhasa and Changdu, Lhasa and Rikaze, and Shannan and Naqu are to be constructed.

The conference held: We must rely on the leadership of the CCP committees and people's governments at all levels to carry out the construction of posts and telecommunications projects. We must straighten out enterprises and carry out technical renovation in a systematic manner. We must have comprehensive planning, make good use of our capital, strengthen management and adopt scientific measures to improve postal and telecommunications services. The following tasks should be carried out within this year and the next.

1. Construct a Lhasa ground satellite communications station and strive to complete the task before the end of next year.

2. Strive to put 400 direct dial telephones in Changdu into operation within the year.

Postal services from Lhasa to all prefectures should amount to five or six times while those from prefectures to counties should be two to three times. County post offices should strengthen renovation and management work for postal service in the rural areas.

6. Do a good job of training work so as to enhance political consciousness and technical knowledge of the staff and workers.

7. Carry out overall rectification among the existing enterprises, promote democratic management and do a good job of all construction work.

YUNNAN RIBAO STRESSES PUBLIC OWNERSHIP OF LAND

HK300227 Kunming YUNNAN RIBAO in Chinese 21 Apr 82 p 1

[Short commentary: "Resolutely Uphold Public Ownership of Land"]

[Excerpts] At present a few peasants in rural Yunnan are continuing to occupy collective farmland. Certain communes and brigades have no overall plans and arrangements concerning private house-building by the peasants and have lost control of the situation, with the result that "houses are springing up all over the place." Some people seize and occupy large areas of good collective farmland to build private houses; certain people have enclosed and occupied collective farmland as their house-building bases even though they temporarily lack the strength to build houses or even have no need to do so; and certain others occupy collective farmland as their private camping ground. In a few places that practice the system of assigning delivery and retention quotas to each household, instances have occurred of openly buying and selling, renting and transferring the responsibility of land or building houses on such land. This bad trend of indiscriminate occupation of collective farmland now threatens the public ownership of land in the rural areas. However, certain cadres are unable to realize the serious consequences of indiscriminate private occupation of collective land; although some of them can see how serious the problem is, they are afraid of getting their fingers burned in dealing with it and take an evasive attitude of turning a blind eye.

It is wrong to fail to see the gravity of the problem, and it is also wrong to take an attitude of evading difficulties when seeing how serious the problem is. The "minutes of the national rural work conference" circulated by the CCP Central Committee point out: "China has a vast population and little land, and our major national strategy is to control the population and protect the farmland." Since it is a major national strategy, it is necessary to deal seriously and properly with the problem of indiscriminate occupation of collective farmland. The fundamental interests of the people of our country and of our posterity lie in taking good care of and protecting our limited farmland. Farmland is the collective's main means of production; if the area of farmland is reduced, it will be extremely difficult to develop grain production and diversification, and building an affluent new socialist countryside may turn into empty talk. Hence preserving public ownership of land is the duty and responsibility of every citizen and a fundamental policy principle to be observed by party and government organizations at all levels, cadres and the masses in the rural areas. In indiscriminately occupying collective farmland heedless of the state land policy and the interests of the state and the collective, a few people are actually sabotaging public ownership of land, and this has already caused great discontent among the masses. The rural cadres and peasants must spontaneously act to preserve the socialist collective economy and boldly struggle against all instances of occupying collective farmland.

Of course, it is necessary to carry out a lot of painstaking work in order to arrest the bad trend of indiscriminately occupying collective farmland. The leaders must personally go to communes and brigades where indiscriminate occupation of farmland is relatively serious to solve the problems and publicize to the masses the state policy decrees and the land policy. They must reiterate the strict prohibition on building houses or graves on responsibility land and on banning buying and selling, renting, or transferring responsibility land to leaving it uncultivated. They must clearly explain the harm done by indiscriminately occupying collective farmland, and rely on and launch the masses to investigate the instances of this that have occurred in recent years and deal with them seriously according to the circumstances. It is also necessary to set up corresponding rules and regulations.

HEILONGJIANG RIBAO ON PARTY LINE, POLICY

[Commentator's article: "Study In Depth the Party's Line, Principles and Policies Since the Third Plenary Session"]

[Text] Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, various socialist undertakings have healthily and steadily developed in our province as in the whole country. This is the result of the firm and unswerving implementation by our provincial party committee of the correct line, principles and policies determined by the CCP Central Committee. In order to obtain a new important development in material civilization and spiritual civilization this year, we must in accordance with the instruction of the provincial party committee conscientiously organize the broad masses of party members, cadres and people, continue to systematically study in depth the party's line, principles and policies since the third plenary session and pay special attention to the study of the 10 important points regarding the course for modernization in the "resolution" of the sixth plenary session and the 10 principles for economic construction in the report delivered by Comrade Zhao Ziyang at the Fourth Session of the Fifth National People's Congress. This is a basic task on the ideological front.

The 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee is a great turning point of far-reaching significance in the history of our party since the founding of the People's Republic. From this meeting to the sixth plenary session, the party has reestablished and laid down the Marxist theoretical line, political line and organizational line as well as a series of important principles and policies, and the 10 important points regarding the correct course for socialist modernization and the 10 principles for economic construction are particularly suited to conditions in China. This is not only a scientific summing up of historical experience but is also in keeping with the basic interests and aspirations of the people and points out the orientation for building China into a strong socialist country with a high degree of democracy and civilization. It will guide our thinking and action for a long time in the historical period ahead. The quality of our study and the manner in which we carry out implementation have a direct bearing on the success and failure of our cause. We must have sufficient understanding regarding this point.

To be sure, we have all studied the line, principles and policies of the Central Committee in recent years. However, we still cannot say that people have achieved unity of understanding. Actual life has proved that among the ranks of our party members and cadres, some people still have all kinds of anxieties, suspicions and uncertainties regarding the party's line, principles and policies since the third plenary session. For example, when discussing emancipating the mind, some people have neglected adhering to the four basic principles and strengthening ideological and political work. When reaffirming adherence to the four basic principles and strengthening ideological and political work, some people have also called to mind the former ossified way of thinking. In carrying out the open-door policy and the policy of invigorating the domestic economy, some people have lost their vigilance in opposing the corrosive influence of capitalist ideas and slackened off in the struggle to attack illegal and criminal activities. In developing this kind of struggle, some people have also vacillated regarding the open-door policy and the policy of invigorating the domestic economy. In carrying out the policy of relying mainly on the planned economy while making regulation by market mechanism or only wanting regulation by market mechanism and neglecting unified planning. There are many reasons for the occurrence of such phenomena, but the basic reason is that because there has not been enough study of the party's line, principles and policies since the third plenary session, comprehension is not profound and understanding is not complete.

In light of such conditions, organizing the party members, cadres and masses to concentrate on the thoroughgoing and systematic study of the important documents of the Central Committee and the important speeches of the leading comrades of the Central Committee since the third plenary session and paying special attention to the study of the "10 important points and 10 principles" are of extremely important significance.

We are now in the new historical period of carrying out the open-door policy and the policy of invigorating the domestic economy and will unavoidably come across all kinds of new contradictions. The corrosive influence of capitalism and our struggle against corrosive influence will exist for a long time, and the class struggle may also intensify under certain conditions. At present, such illegal and criminal activities as smuggling and illegal trading, corruption and graft, speculation and swindling and large-scale expropriation of state and collective property are rampant in the economic sphere. In the ideological and cultural sphere and in every aspect of social convention, the corrosion of moribund capitalist ideas is serious. These are the manifestation of this kind of struggle. In this kind of situation, can our party members and cadres, particularly the responsible comrades at various levels, withstand the severe test and really become staunch, sober-minded worthy Marxists? Can they conform with the law governing the development of things, adroitly guide action according to circumstances, use new methods to solve the new contradictions and problems and not become panic-stricken and turn back? The key to the problem lies in whether or not they can completely and correctly understand as well as firmly and unswervingly implement the party's correct line, principles and policies. Therefore, penetratingly and systematically carrying out restudy and reeducation of the party's line, principles and policies since the third plenary session is a task presented by practice as well as a demand put forward by the vigorously changing and developing historical period. Some of the cadres do not sufficiently understand the necessity and urgency of continuing the penetrating study of the party's line, principles and policies since the third plenary session, and they are satisfied by making a "casual study." They fail to see that if we remain at the stage of having only a smattering of theoretical knowledge, we are bound to make mistakes and this will adversely affect our cause.

Some of the comrades have also set the study of the party's line, principles and policies against the study of basic theory. This is also incorrect.

How can we understand theory? Comrade Mao Zedong said: "There is only one kind of true theory in this world: theory that is drawn from objective reality and then verified by objective reality; nothing else is worthy of the name of theory in our sense." The scientific works of Marx, Engels, Lenin, Stalin and Comrade Mao Zedong and the scientific works of other leading members of our party are the concentrated outline of this kind of theory. The party's line and basic principles and policies formulated under the guidance of theory of Marxism and which have been proven by practice to be correct, are also important components of this kind of theory. Systematically studying the basic theory of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought and mastering the stand, viewpoint and method of Marxism are no doubt of extremely important significance, for this will enable us to completely and correctly understand the party's line and policies and consciously lead the masses to implement them. However, because of this we definitely cannot belittle the theoretical value of the party line and policies. The party's line and important principles and theories since the third plenary session are not only the concrete application of the basic theory of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, but they are also a new development under the new historical conditions. For example, on the basis of expounding the change in the principal contradiction of our society and the key task of the party and people, the 10 important points regarding the correct course for modernization in the "resolution" have comprehensively, systematically and profoundly expounded everything from productive force and relations of production to the superstructure, from class struggle and political system to spiritual civilization and from nationality relations, national defense and foreign policy to party building.

Furthermore, the 10 principles for economic construction centered on the relations between speed and results, between production of means of production and production of means of consumption, between expanded reproduction by extension and expanded reproduction by intension, between the proportion of accumulation and consumption, between domestic and foreign affairs and between developing productive force and restructuring and perfecting the relations of production, as well as the scientific attitude and dialectical method of seeking truth from facts embodied by them involved in this key problem of increasing economic returns, are all important theoretical questions regarding socialist economic construction. Belittling the study of these important principles of immediate and far-reaching guiding significance is obviously very wrong. Naturally, we must also pay attention to preventing and correcting the tendency of replacing the study of line, principles and policies with the study of basic theory. At present, we should mainly study the important documents of the party since the third plenary session and more closely integrate them with the study of the basic theory of Marxism.

The party's line, principles and policies since the third plenary session are extremely rich in content. In the study, we must direct the party members and cadres, in close connection with their thinking and work practice, to put the stress on mastering and getting a good grasp of the basic content and spiritual essence of every line, principle and policy; make clear the objective basis and theoretical foundation they put forward; obtain a clear understanding of what is socialism and what is capitalism and draw a principled line of demarcation between them. We must sum up past experiences and lessons and learn to be good at conducting operations on both fronts. We not only must have a clear understanding of the "leftist" influence which still exists in our districts, departments and units, but we must also fully understanding the seriousness, harmfulness and perniciousness of the tendency of bourgeois liberalization in the political, economic and cultural spheres and make a success of the struggle to oppose the corrosive influence of bourgeois ideas and to crack down on illegal and criminal activities.

The party's correct line and policies are a powerful spiritual force for mobilizing and uniting the people to struggle for their own interests. Conscientiously grasping the thorough study of the party's line, principles and policies since the third plenary session and successfully tackling problems in a comprehensive way will enable the broad masses of party members, cadres and people of the whole province to become more unified and steadfast in their strategic thinking. If we firmly believe in Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, in the correct leadership of the CCP Central Committee and in the sure triumph of the socialist cause and exert ourselves with one heart and mind in the struggle, we will keep on making new breakthroughs and achieving new successes in our modernization.

HEILONGJIANG BOOSTS 1ST QUARTER COAL OUTPUT

[Text] Harbin, May 5 (XINHUA) -- Major coal mines in Heilongjiang Province produced 11.77 million tons of coal in the first four months of this year, ten percent more than the same 1981 period, according to the provincial coal department. The increase has been achieved by transforming the province's existing coal mines and improving management, the department said. The state has allocated 240 million yuan for technical revamping of coal mines since 1979.

Heilongjiang's 1981 coal output came to 41 million tons, 9.3 million tons more than in 1978, the year before the renovations began. The province now ranks third in coal output of all provinces in China, while occupying the fifth place in 1979.

With state investment, 42 scattered small inclined mines with outdated equipment have been transformed into 19 big mines with modern equipment, adding 6.11 million tons to annual production capacity.

Since 1981, the state has earmarked nearly 20 million yuan for construction of 53 projects in Heilongjiang to ensure safety in mining, according to the department. Of these, 31 have been completed. The remaining 22 projects, including installation of equipment for ventilation, gas discharge, dust and fire prevention, are under construction. The province's verified coal reserves total 10,900 million tons, mostly coking coal and rich gas coal.

JILIN COMMENTARY VIEWS SPRING FARMING TASK

SK040629 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 3 May 82

[Commentary by unidentified station reporter: "Race Against Time, Ensure Quality and Do Well From Start to Finish for All-Round Success in Spring Farming"]

[Excerpts] Our province's spring farming is approaching a high tide from south to north. As of 30 April, 3.45 million of persons had plunged into spring farming across the province, an increase of 40,000 persons over the corresponding 1981 period. Some (?plowshares) had been employed, up 44,000 over the same 1981 period. Over 40 million mu, 75 percent of the total planned acreage, had been cultivated, up 3 million over the corresponding 1981 period. Some 260,000 mu of paddy seedlings were cultivated 4 to 5 days earlier than in 1981, and they are doing very well. Seedlings of sunflowers in key oil-bearing crop producing areas are a lush green.

To combat spring cold spells and prevent losses caused by early frost, Changling and Suangliao Counties started to sow field crops as early as 2 April. By the end of April, the two counties had virtually completed the sowing of field crops -- starting and finishing spring sowing earlier than any year since liberation. All localities have taken steps to increase production and raise the level of scientific farming. Over 80 percent of the province's dry farmland is sown with improved varieties of seeds. Most counties in Baicheng Prefecture had rainfall during the past few days and the vast number of commune members are losing no time in sowing while there is sufficient soil moisture.

Efforts have made been to implement the readjusted crop layout and cultivation plans to ensure grain production. Some municipalities and counties in Baicheng and Changchun Prefectures have, in line with their actual conditions and the principle of tilling and perserving the land, appropriately reduced the acreage for minor oil-bearing crops and expanded the acreage for grain crops such as Chinese sorghum and soybeans. Acreage for paddy rice in Jiutai and Dehui Counties increased to 510,000 mu from last year's 260,000 mu.

Generally, the province's spring farming situation is excellent and inspiring. However, some problems crying out for solution still exist, particularly the drought in the middle and western parts and waterlogging in the eastern parts, which affect spring sowing in some communes and brigades. Meanwhile, a trend of ignoring and crowding out the diversified economy exists in some localities. Some localities are still entirely absorbed in increasing the application of farm chemicals, ignoring economic results. These problems will not only affect overall progress of spring farming but also the results of this year's agricultural production.

BRIEFS

JILIN SPRING FARMING -- As of 28 April, Lishu County had sown over 2 million mu of spring fields, 79 percent of the total farming acreage. The quality of scientific farming is better than in previous years. [Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 29 Apr 82 SK] As of 27 April, in 20 days alone, Yushu County, Jilin Province, had sown 3,524,000 mu of spring fields, 93 percent of the sowing acreage -- which is scheduled to be 3.79 million mu. GANSU'S FENG JIXIN DISCUSSES CRACKDOWN ON CRIME

SK010329 Lanzhou Gansu Provincial Service in Mandarin 1125 GMT 30 Apr 82

[Text] According to our sources, the Gansu Provincial CCP Committee held a report meeting on 26 April. Feng Jixin, first secretary of the provincial CCP committee, spoke on behalf of the provincial CCP committee. He urged leading cadres at all levels to earnestly study and implement the CCPCC and State Council decision on cracking down on serious unlawful activities in the economic sphere, strive to enhance their understanding and plunge into this struggle with a clear-cut stand.

In his report, Feng Jixin reviewed the progress so far in cracking down on serious unlawful activities in the economic sphere. He said: All in all, in the course of struggle party leadership at all levels has begun to enhance its understanding, its attitude has become positive, and its actions prompt. The struggle has developed in a sound fashion, initial achievements have been scored and some experience has been gained. He emphatically pointed out: That we have begun to enhance our understanding and scored initial achievements does not mean that every comrade, some leading comrades in particular, is fully aware of the great significance of this struggle. Therefore, the question of enhancing the understanding of the vast number of party members and cadres, leading party and government cadres at all levels in particular, is crucial to smooth execution of this struggle. He pointed out: Inadequate understanding can be summarized in the following five aspects: 1) a vague understanding of the seriousness, harm and danger of unlawful activities in the economic sphere; 2) failure to fully understand that the struggle against economic crime is a major manifestation of class struggle under new historical conditions; 3) inadequate understanding of the special features of the serious unlawful activities in the economic sphere; 4) a hazy understanding of the complex and protracted nature of this struggle; 5) failure to understand this struggle is a rigorous trial which party members and leading party and government cadres at all levels must endure.

Feng Jixin put forward two demands on the vast number of party members and cadres, especially leading party and government cadres at all levels: First, to enhance their understanding and be sober-minded and staunch leaders. Second, to further enhance leadership and act according to the CCPCC and State Council decision to ensure healthy development of the struggle. The general demand is to earnestly study, strengthen their forces, grasp key points, have a good grasp of the policy, closely cooperate with one another, implement the struggle in line with an overall arrangement and make new contributions to defending the communist purity of the party, the socialist system and the interests of the people.

[Excerpts] Qinghai Province scored noticeable achievements in financial and economic discipline inspection. So far, it has discovered illegal earnings totaling 47.7 million yuan and handed over to the state nearly 10 million yuan. This discipline inspection, which began in October 1981, has aroused the universal attention of the people from the upper to the lower levels. The provincial government has time and again issued documents and held meetings to make arrangements for and mobilize the cadres to do this work well. Departments at all levels and [words indistinct] have established specialized leading organs and dispatched personnel to spot check, recheck and investigate key sectors to enable the inspection work to be carried out quickly and in an all-round way. During this inspection, the provincial public health department, the provincial publishing house; the provincial light, textile and material bureaus; and the provincial commercial department were very meticulous in their work. They corrected and handled in timely fashion a number of financial discipline violations.

During this inspection, the provincial financial and economic discipline inspection office received over 30 letters from the masses and received more than 50 visitors. This inspection has promoted the spadework of safeguarding financial and economic discipline, strengthening supervision, plugging loopholes and rigorously enforcing discipline. In addition to affirming anew previous effective systems and regulations, the provincial light and textile bureaus have also devised measures to train financial and accounting personnel.

Some responsible departments listed examples of financial and economic discipline violations and urged all units to manage things in accordance with systems and regulations and not to violate financial and economic discipline.

[Excerpts] On 28 April, provincial Vice Governor Bai Jinian made a report to the 14th meeting of the provincial people's congress standing committee on arrangements made for spring production and for people's livelihood in disaster areas. The report said: Generally speaking, the current spring production situation in the province's rural areas is good. According to incomplete statistics, by 15 April, the whole province has created an afforestation area of 3.23 million mu which account for 95 percent of this year's afforestation plan, or an increase of 450,000 mu as compared with the same period last year.

Referring to arrangements for people's livelihood in disaster areas, Bai Jinian said in his report: After being hit by the natural calamity last autumn, thanks to the concern and support of the party Central Committee and the State Council, the provincial CCP committee and the provincial people's government promptly adopted measures, made arrangements for people's livelihood in disaster areas, and assisted disaster areas in providing for and helping themselves by engaging in production and in restoring and developing production. Meeting CLoses

HK030805 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 2 May 82

[Summary] The 14th meeting of the 5th Shaanxi Provincial People's Congress Standing Committee concluded on 1 May. It adopted a resolution on mobilizing the province to discuss the draft of the revised constitution, a resolution on hitting at serious criminal activities in the economic field and a resolution on extending the time limit for handling criminal cases, and approved the dismissal of (Zhong Shuhua) as president of Shanyang County People's Court. It also approved several other appointments and dismissals.

Ma Wenrui, chairman of the provincial people's congress standing committee, presided over and spoke at the meeting. After explaining the significance of the draft of the revised constitution he demanded that the cadres and masses of people fully recognize the importance of this draft constitution and take an active part in the discussion of it.

The resolution on mobilizing the province to discuss the draft of the revised constitution says the draft constitution reflects the interests and demands of the people of all nationalities and the unity of the party's decisions and the people's will. It tallies with the actual situation in our country and is comparatively more perfect than previous constitutions. The discussion of this draft constitution by the people throughout the country, which was proposed by the NRC Standing Committee, is a great event in our political life. It is of great significance to the development of socialist democracy and the strengthening of the socialist legal system, as well as to the construction of the four modernizations. The discussion will be carried out until August this year.

The resolution on hitting at serious criminal activities in the economic field says that the 14th meeting of the 5th provincial people's congress standing committee listened to and approved the reports on hitting at economic crimes made, respectively, by Vice Governor Deng Guozhong, Chief Procurator of the provincial people's procuratorate (Bo Xia) and President of the provincial higher people's court Yang Peichen. It points out that at present, the struggle against economic crimes in this province is developing in depth but the development is uneven in various districts. As some leading cadres in some localities, departments and units have not kept abreast of the situation, it is necessary to strengthen leadership at various levels so that this struggle can be further developed. Cadres, especially leading cadres, at various levels must earnestly study and firmly implement the resolution of the CCP Central Committee and the State Council on hitting at serious criminal activities in the economic field. People's governments, people's courts and procuratorates at various levels must firmly grasp the handling of major and serious cases and forcefully hit at such criminal activities. In accordance with the party's policy of giving lenient treatment to those who confess their crimes and severe punishment to those who refuse to do so those who have confessed their crimes before 1 May must be given lenient treatment after investigation and those who confess their crimes and return illicit money and goods on their own accord after 1 May must also be given relatively lenient treatment according to relevant policies and laws. As to those who refuse to confess their crimes, severe punishment must be given according to the law.

The resolution calls on cadres and the masses to unite as one, take concerted actions and carry the struggle against economic crimes through to the end.

XINJIANG'S WANG ENMAO ON NATIONALITY UNITY

HK040223 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1650 GMT 3 May 82

[Text] When conducting a recent inspection of work in southern Xinjiang, regional CCP committee First Secretary Comrade Wang Enmao stressed that the party organizations and government throughout the region must resolutely implement the party's nationality policies, do a good job in nationality unity work, strengthen the unity of nationalities, and create a social atmosphere in which people in every nationality stress the unity of nationalities, so as to further consolidate and develop the region's political situation of stability and unity and win victory in building the socialist four modernizations.

Comrade Wang Enmao stressed: The key to nationality unity lies in the leadership. So long as the leaders, especially the principal leaders, of party organizations and government at all levels truly attach importance to implementing the party's nationality policies and promoting good relations among the nationalities, we will certainly be able to strengthen the unity of nationalities; otherwise, the unity of nationalities will be affected and it will not possible to promote it. If the leadership is correct and attaches importance to implementing the party's nationality policies and promoting relations between nationalities, problems in relations between nationalities cannot occur, or can be prevented; and even if problems occur, they can be correctly handled. If the leadership is incorrect and does not pay attention to implementing the party's nationality policies and promoting good relations among nationalities, problems will occur, and when that happens they cannot be solved properly.

COMMISSAR TAN YOULIN SPEAKS TO URUMQI PLA UNITS

[Text] On the morning of 30 April, the Urumqi PLA units held a gathering at the armymen's club to mark the youth festival on the anniversary of May 4th. The rally called for the broad ranks of fighters and commanders of the PLA units stationed in Xinjiang to display the fine tradition of the May 4th movement, have a clear understanding of the historical mission, carry out activities to create more advanced companies and individuals in a thorough manner and strive to become vanguards in the building of socialist spiritual civilization. Attending the rally were some 1,000 youths and CYL members from leading Urumqi PLA unit organs and air forces, Xinjiang Military District and the infantry school stationed in Urumqi.

Tan Youlin, commissar of Urumqi PLA units, made a report at the rally on displaying the fine traditions of the May 4th movement and training ourselves into youths who have ideals, good moral characters and who observe discipline.

In his report, Tan Youlin gave a brief account of the glorious history of the May 4th movement and, in connection with his personal experiences, narrated some stirring deeds of advanced youths who heroically strove for the establishment of new China after the war.

He emphatically pointed out that the CYL organizations at all levels must tackle the building of spiritual civilization as a long-term mission and strive to do a good job of it. They must also seriously do a good job of education in revolutionary aspirations.

He hoped that the broad ranks of CYL members and youths of the PLA units stationed in Urumqi would inherit and display the fine traditions of the May 4th movement, learn from the veterans of the revolution, seriously remold their world outlook, incessantly strengthen their moral character, spontaneously resist the corrosive influence of bourgeois ideology, devote themselves to the lofty ideals and firm conviction of communism and foster the idea of loving the party, the people, the socialist motherland and the border areas. At the same time, we must learn from Comrade Lei Feng, work hard to study political science, science and liberal arts, and overcome difficulties in order to acquire professional knowledge. Thus, we can make contributions to the building of a professional modern army so as to safeguard our socialist motherland.

JAPANESE OFFICIAL CITED ON U.S. ARMS TO TAIWAN

[Text] Beijing, April 29 (XINHUA) -- Shinsaku Hogen, advisor to the Japanese Foreign Ministry, pointed out Monday that China's opposition to the U.S. arms sales to Taiwan is a "matter of course." These remarks were contained in an article carried in the Japanese newspaper SANKEI SHIMBUN.

Hogen said: "So far as the Sino-U.S. relations are concerned, the U.S. arms sales to Taiwan have violated the principle of one China confirmed by the Shanghai communique as well as the normalization of Sino-U.S. relations, and resulted in the strengthening of Taiwan's independence. The relationship between the United States and Taiwan should remain at the existing level, and should not go beyond it. China's opposition to the U.S. arms sales to Taiwan is a matter of course."

He noted: "We should understand that so long as the United States persists in regarding the U.S.-Taiwan Relations Act as a home act, the abnormal situation in the Sino-U.S. relations cannot be improved."

ITALY NOT TO ATTEND TAIWAN SOFTBALL GAMES

[Text] Rome, April 30 (XINHUA) -- President of the Italian Softball Association Bruno Beneck told XINHUA here today that his association will not participate in the fifth world women's softball championships if the International Softball Federation (ISF) refuses to change the venue. The Italian Softball Association, he said, had proposed to the ISF that Italy host the current women's softball meet but has received no response.

Mr. Beneck said: "We, an ISF member, will abide by the federation's regulations and cannot be a party to an intrigue or fraud." His association will not participate in the championships that violates the ISF's decision that the Taiwan association must change its name, and not use flag and anthem, he declared.

"As friends of the Chinese people," he said, "we will not accept any behavior harmful to China. We hold that such a position of ours is correct. I would like to reaffirm our support to China."

COMMENTARY ON U.S. SUPPORTING UK OVER FALKLANDS

OW040911 Taipei International Service in English 0100 GMT 4 May 82

[Station commentary: "A Painful Decision"]

[Text] The United States has given up its neutrality in the dispute over the Falkland Islands and takes sides with Britain. It must have been a painful decision for the Reagan administration to make. But the United States had little choice. Both Britain and Argentina are American allies. Any conflict between them hurts the United States as well as themselves. Hence, the intensive mediation efforts by Secretary of State Alexander Haig after the Argentines occupied the Falkland Islands. Washington decided to back Britain only after Buenos Aires rejected the last American peace plan.

Siding with either side has its adverse effects. But the United States had to choose the lesser of two evils. It is true that the Anglo-American bonds are far more stronger than the ties between Washington and Buenos Aires because of historical and racial factors, but that is not the sole reason why the United States came to Britain's side in the dispute. Obviously, Washington was hoping that the U.S. abandonment of neutrality in Britain's favor would be a pressure strong enough to dissuade the Argentines from a full-scale war against Britain. The initial Argentine reaction seems encouraging. Buenos Aires agreed for the first time that it would consider withdrawing its troops from the Falkland Islands, although it vows not to negotiate its claim over the islands.

From the purely military point of view, the Argentines have little hope to hold the Falkland Islands against the powerful British naval task force, particularly after the United States switched to support the latter. U.S. economic sanctions could be fatal to the already faltering Argentine economy. However, it does not necessarily mean that Argentina will swallow its national pride and get out of the Falklands. For the military rulers, such a move would almost certainly lead to their downfall.

Should the Argentines decide to stick it out, they will turn to the Soviet Union for help. U.S. reports said that the Soviets are already sending supplies and military information to Argentina. It is too good a chance for the Soviets to miss.

Even if Argentina bows to U.S. pressure and goes to the negotiating table to solve the Falklands dispute, Washington has already paid a big price. By siding up with Britain in the dispute, the United States has greatly undermined the effectiveness of its Latin American policy, now or in the future. Who will benefit besides the Soviet Union?

COMBAT JET, MISSILE PATROL CORVETTE DEVELOPED

OW261405 Taipei CNA in English 1332 GMT 26 Apr 82

[Text] Taipei, 26 Apr (CNA) -- The Republic of China has produced the prototype of a combat jet and is also developing a high-speed missile patrol corvette, the head of the nation's defense research institute disclosed Sunday. Lt Gen Tang Chun-po, director of the Chung Shan Instititute of Science and Technology, told members of the Society of Strategic Studies of the Republic of China that the jet has been developed from the Chinese Air Force's XAT-2 twin-engine trainer.

The plane, which is suitable for rendering close support to operations both on land and over water, is now undergoing test flights, General Tang said. He did not give details.

Regarding the manufacture of corvettes, foreign experts have been invited to help with the designing, General Tang said. Local agencies taking part in the project include the Union Naval Architecture Designing Center and the state-owned China Shipbuilding Corp, he added.

General Tang said the research scientists and engineers under his direction will concentrate their efforts on the development of the following items in the coming years.

-- High-yield explosives.
-- Guided missiles, including laser-guided and automatically-guided air-to-air, air-to-ground and ground-to-air short-range missiles.
-- High-performance fighter aircraft.
-- Electronic systems.

The institute, which has scored marked progress in laser technolgoy, besides the development of the combat jet, has also succeeded in developing anti-submarine electronic devices, missile guidance and control systems, anti-tank missiles, armored combat vehicles, 155-mm cannon and 20-mm rapid-firing guns, General Tang reported.

Speaking on the same occasion, Defense Minister Sung Chang-chih collaborated [as received] the general's report by saying that "major breakthroughs' have been achieved in the development of weapons. The minister also disclosed that the Republic of China has made some progress in securing military hardware from non-U.S. sources. He did not elaborate.

TA KUNG PAO DISCUSSES BUSH VISIT TO CHINA

HK050903 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in Chinese 5 May 82 p 2

[Special feature by Cheng Yuen [4453 6678]: "Viewing Sino-U.S. Relations From the Angle of the Bush Visit to China"]

[Text] After his visit to five Asian and Pacific countries, U.S. Vice President Bush will pay a visit to China on 5 May. This is the last stop of his trip, and it will attract the greatest attention.

Bush was chief of the U.S. Liaison Office in Beijing before China and the United States established diplomatic relations in 1979. He is familiar with Chinese affairs and has become acquainted with some Chinese leaders. He has played an active part in promoting Sino-U.S. relations. At present, when Sino-U.S. relations are faced with a crisis due to U.S. arms sales to Taiwan, Reagan has proposed that Bush pay this visit. Obviously this is a special mission entrusted to Bush after careful consideration.

On the eve of Bush's visit to China, RENMIN RIBAO carried a commentator's article on 2 May, reiterating that the crisis facing Sino-U.S. relations still exists and China will, under no circumstances, allow the United States to continue its long-term arms sales to Taiwan. If the United States does not stop its interference in China's internal affairs, Sino-U.S. relations will inevitably retrogress. Through the publication of this article China has reiterated its solemn and just stand. It tries to tell Bush that no delay is permitted in getting rid of the "time bomb" which imperils the relations between the two countries.

At the beginning of this year, when the United States was prepared to sell arms to Taiwan, this "time bomb" could possibly have exploded. But since the United States made the three-point restrictive [you yue shu xing de 2589 4766 2631 1840 4104] explanation [jie shi 6043 6847] and assurance, the Chinese side, taking overall interests into consideration, adopted the attitude of "just this once let us see how the other side behaves." Yet, the problem has not been fundamentally solved and the danger still exists. If the United States continues to play a doubledealing game, the "time bomb" is bound to explode.

Unfortunately, there are still some conceited Americans who do not want to move with the times but prefer to stay in a rut. They always believe that China needs the United States and cannot do without it. They regard China's principled stand and protest as merely a bluster and vainly hope that China will finally swallow this "bitter fruit" of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan. It would be very dangerous if the policymakers in the United States had the same idea.

There are only two reasons for saying China needs the United States.

First, China needs the United States in its resistance against the Soviet Union. As everyone knows, even in the 1960's when China was in great difficulty, it did not yield to the Soviet Union. Instead, it boldly withstood the pressure of the Soviet Union and succeeded in preventing the latter from taking reckless actions. How can China yield in the 1980's when it has become much stronger than ever before? Do not forget that at that time, both the United States and the Soviet Union were hostile to China. China's stand is clear. It opposes all kinds of hegemonism, either big or small. Wherever there is hegemonism, China will fight against it to the end.

Second, China needs the United States in its construction of the four modernizations. Undoubtedly, China needs to import advanced technology and equipment from other countries in its modernization drive, but it simultaneously stresses the policy of mainly relying on its own efforts. The development of Sino-U.S. trade relations and the cooperation and exchange in the scientific and technological fields are a common desire of the two peoples and are beneficial to both sides.

This does not mean that China needs the United States. The valiant and industrious Chinese people can certainly go on living very well and achieve success in the four modernizations without the help of the United States. China can import advanced equipment, technology and funds it needs from elsewhere.

We should realize that China has already made every endeavor to make Sino-U.S. relations change for the better. It has put forward a fair and reasonable plan for solution of the problem. There is no more room for China to make further concessions or to give in. If the United States takes one step further on this question, China will certainly make a response to it. Recently, when meeting some American people in the commercial circles, Vice Premier Bo Yibo pointed out clearly: "China will make a response to any arms sales to Taiwan." He also pointed out that "there will be no difference between arms and spare parts." The Chinese people mean what they say and will never give in on the principled question concerning the sovereignty of their country. If some people in the United States do want to test the determination of the Chinese people, we would like to wait and see what happens.

Although during this visit Bush will exchange views with the Chinese leaders on some international issues, the problem of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan is still the main subject. U.S. officials said that Bush's visit is aimed at "creating an atmosphere so that paths can be explored for the solution." This seems to be a casual attitude. The "time bomb" which imperils Sino-U.S. relations was placed by the United States. It must be removed by no other than the United States itself. What Beijing demands is real action and not beautiful utterances of the United States. Getting by under false pretenses is not a wise decision, and there is a limit to our patience on the delay of this solution. If the United States really treasures and wants to promote the development of Sino-U.S. relations, it should make up its mind as soon as possible to remove this "time bomb." This would be a wise decision.

Under the present world situation, which is getting more and more turbulent with each passing day, all countries are watching attentively the development of Sino-U.S. relations. China has clearly declared that it is prepared for both eventualities: A change for the better or development in an adverse direction. What does the United States actually plan to do? What message will Bush bring to China? People are waiting to see.

YE JIANYING REVEALS 'RETIRING FROM FIRST LINE'

HK010104 Hong Kong WEN WEI PO in Chinese 1 May 82 p 2

[Report from Beijing: "Ye Jianying Talks on Reform of Bureaucracy, Reveals He Is Retiring to Second Line"]

[Text] NPC Standing Committee Chairman Ye Jianying revealed yesterday that he has on his own initiative requested to retire from the first line.

Marshal Ye said this when receiving in Beijing well-known Overseas Chinese and Hong Kong, Macao and Taiwan compatriots. Marshal Ye said, we have a number of old cadres who made revolution for several decades, not for the sake of gaining official posts and becoming rich but for wholeheartedly serving the people and fighting for the revolution. However, for reasons of age and infirmity, it is now difficult for them to undertake leadership work in the first line. It is good to see that they are now all requesting on their own initiative to retire from the first line; and I am one of them.

BEIJING ANALYZES U.S. STRATEGY AGAINST USSR

OW050841 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 4 May 82

["International Current Events" program commentary: "A Dispute Concerning U.S. Strategy Against the Soviet Union"]

[Text] Since this spring, there has been a dispute in the United States regarding the freezing of nuclear arms, and to date the dispute has not ended. Since the dispute concerns the basic U.S. strategic policy toward the Soviet Union, it has drawn extensive attention both at home and abroad.

On 10 March, some 140 congressmen, meaded by Senators Kennedy and Hatfield, submitted a draft resolution to Congress on freezing American and Soviet nuclear arms at the present level before holding talks to reduce them. On 22 March, Congress began to discuss this draft resolution. Next day, however, 58 congressmen, headed by Senators Jackson and Warner, submitted another draft resolution to reduce, through talks, American and Soviet nuclear arms to an equal level before putting a freeze on them. Each of these opposing proposals has a number of supporters inside and outside the U.S. Congress. In the past 2 months, many congressmen and personages in political and press circles made statements and published articles, explaining the reasons for their support of one proposal or the other. The dispute over the freezing of nuclear arms has extended far beyond Congress and become a nationwide debate.

In late March and early April, U.S. President Reagan and Secretary of State Haig made separate statements on the American nuclear policy, indicating the government stance on the issue, that is, supporting Jackson's proposal and criticizing Kennedy's. In his 31 March statement, Reagan stressed that freezing nuclear arms at this time was not in the interests of the United States, for it would legalize the vast superiority enjoyed by the Soviets, rather than urge them to reduce their arsenal.

The nuclear arms dispute between the two groups -- freezing before reduction through talks or reduction through talks before freezing -- seems, on the surface to be an issue of method and process. In reality, however, it is a much more intensive question. Generally speaking, there are three different views between the two groups.

1. They have different estimates of the relative nuclear forces of the United States and the Soviet Union. In the opinion of those standing for freezing before talks, both sides have several thousand nuclear warheads, and each is capable of destroying the other. They hold that the nuclear arms at present will bring no loss to the United States. The other group, however, holds an opposite view, believing that the Soviet Union enjoys an obvious superiority as far as intercontinental guided missiles launched from its continental bases and medium-range guided missiles in Europe are concerned. Freezing nuclear arms at this time, they say, would keep the Soviet superiority and would be dangerous to the United States.

2. There are different opinions as to whether freezing nuclear arms will force the Soviet Union to hold arms reduction talks according to the U.S. requirements. One group believes that freezing nuclear arms at this time will assist in restraining the Soviet attempt to expand its nuclear arms and will force it to proceed with talks.

In contrast, the other group holds that freezing nuclear arms at this time is falling into the Soviet trap, and that it is tantamount to the U.S. giving up the tactic of forcing the Soviets to sit down to talk and of making a bargain with them.

3. More important, the two groups hold obviously different views on the core question of how to maintain American strength while controlling the U.S.-Soviet arms race. Those standing for freezing as the first step hold that only the halt of the arms race can bring about a gradual de-escalation of arms expansion, which is beneficial to the United States in reducing its military expense burden and improving its economic situation. Those opposed to this view say that the above is only a naive illusion. They stress that the key to arms control lies in keeping the U.S. position of real strength and restoring its strategic balance with the Soviet Union.

It is thus obvious that the dispute, centered on the freeze of nuclear weapons, is in fact a continuation of the dispute on the strategy against the Soviet Union which had been carried on between the two groups in the United States for a long time. The key question to this dispute is, what countermeasures should the United States adopt -- under a situation in which the Soviet Union has been continually speeding up its armament expansion and increasingly gaining superiority, not only in conventional, but also in nuclear weapons -- to curb Soviet armament expansion and improve the position of the United States? Should the United States place its hopes of influencing the Soviet Union on promoting detente, disarmament talks or even on adopting a restraint attitude in unilaterally slowing down the development of nuclear weapons? Or should the United States seek for a balance in its actual strength by focusing its efforts on strengthening military force, particularly nuclear strength?

The dispute between the groups with these two strategic ideas has been carried on for more than a decade. Later, as the Soviet Union openly launched armed aggression against Afghanistan and pressed forward steadily in Europe, in the Middle East and in Central America, international tension has increasingly intensified and the United States has been forced into a passive position. In this connection, the view that the United States should improve its actual strength and take a hardline attitude against the Soviet Union has become prevalent in the United States. It was exactly this hardline strategy that President Reagan adopted after he assumed his post.

In the past year or so, the Reagan administration had made considerable efforts to speed up armament expansion and development of both conventional and nuclear weapons. At the same time, the Reagan administration has adopted a rather strong diplomatic stand against the Soviet Union. Reagan and other high-ranking government officials time and again made remarks on the possibility of engaging in a limited nuclear war. This aroused uneasiness and terror among the public in West Europe and in the United States. They are worried because they think the hardline policy taken by the Reagan administration will cause trouble.

The antinuclear peace movement, which started in West Europe, has already spread to the United States. In mid-April, an antinuclear movement of "projecting ground zero" was launched in hundreds of cities in the United States. The so-called movement "projecting ground zero" is a campaign of exposing the terrible situation arising from the supposed explosion of a nuclear bomb. This antinuclear mass campaign will certainly influence political circles in the United States.

Furthermore, Reagan's plans for armament expansion have greatly increased financial burdens on the U.S. Government and made the financial deficit become uncontrollable. As a result, the United States suffered another economic retrogression and the number of unemployed greatly increased. The Reagan administration's continued increase in military spending and the slash in social welfare spending has caused widespread dissatisfaction and there is an increasingly strong demand for a cut in military expenditure.

Under such circumstances, the dispute on the strategy against the Soviet Union between the two groups, which had been calmed down for a while, once again started and intensified. The dispute on the freeze of nuclear weapons has not yet ended.

In late April, four former high-ranking government officials made a new proposal, calling on the U.S. Government to make a change in its dexterous strategy and maintaining that the United States should not be the first to use nuclear weapons. Their proposals have met with criticism and opposition from various circles. It is held that such a view would make the West unable to counter Soviet superiority in conventional weapons in Europe and would undermine the foundation of the West's policy of deterrence.

The dispute on U.S. nuclear policy is still going on at present. It remains to be seen what influence and result it will actually bring about.

OFFICIAL GREETS SOVIET LISTENERS ON MAY DAY

OW060254 Beijing in Russian to the USSR 1800 GMT 30 Apr 82

[May Day greetings to Soviet listeners from Deputy Chief of the Coal Extraction Department of the PRC Coal-Mining Research Institute (Zhang Xinbao) -- in Chinese fading into Russian translation]

[Text] Dear Soviet radio listeners: Allow me to convey warm festive greetings from afar to the workers and all working people of the Soviet Union on the occasion of May Day -- the day of international solidarity of working people.

More than 20 years ago I studied at the Kharkov Mining Institute. I spent 5 unforgettable years in your vast country. Not only did I acquire abundant scientific and technical knowledge in the mining profession but also brought back with me to the motherland the valuable friendship of the Soviet people toward the Chinese people. To this day I often remember that wonderful time and the beloved teachers and fellow students with whom I lived in close friendship, and also other sincere and good friends.

First of all, I would like to mention my Russian language teacher, Inna Fedorovna Vinogradova. She was a strict, demanding teacher during lectures, but a kind older sister afterward. She thought up all sorts of ways to help us improve our level of Russian as quickly as possible. Not only did she try to give us a lot during lectures but she also organized various discussions for us on current events, political subjects, literature and art, and invited us to her place. In order to enrich our lives she often took us to theaters and told us about the works of the great Russian musicians. I am very fond of the beautiful, stirring music and graceful dances from Tchaikovsky's "Swan Lake" and the warm, solemn music, full of patriotic spirit, from the well-known opera by Glinka "Ivan Susanin." I also like Pushkin's verses "The Captive" and "To Chaadayev," which are full of revolutionary spirit and yearning for freedom and liberation. All this helped acquaint us even further with the brilliant Russian cultural heritage.

I often remember my fellow students and friends: Ivanov, who lived with me in the same dormitory; Liman, with an open and straightforward character; the benevolent Zhaurov, who sat next to me at lectures and was ready to come to my aid at any moment. They all helped me greatly in my studies and life. We also discussed KOMSOMOL affairs together and shared our dreams about the future of communist society.

After 5 years of study we finished at the institute. The director of the institute delivered an ardent speech to us. He commended us for persistence in our studies, our modesty and diligence, congratulated us on excellent progress in our studies and expressed the hope that we would sow the seeds of Chinese-Soviet friendship all over China. The heads of the institute and faculties and teachers came to the railroad station to see us off. A number of old well-known doctors of science took off their coats, rolled up their sleeves and helped us carry our luggage. Unable to part, we kept shaking hands and many of us had tears in our eyes. I still recall that stirring picture.

Soviet people wanted to know about China and hoped that the new socialist China would rapidly rise and prosper in the East. On the eve of our national day certain factories, VUZes and pioneer organizations always invited us to friendship evenings and asked us to tell them about the achievements of the new China and to put on artistic performances. We, the Chinese students studying at the Kharkov Mining Institute, organized a small choir. The songs "The Long March," "Return from the Long Swim" and other Chinese songs that we sang were warmly received.

During my stay in the Soviet Union I deeply felt everywhere the friendly feelings of the Soviet people toward the Chinese people, be it in a secluded forest park in Kharkov or in the noisy and lively center of the city; in the Donbass Mines or by the blast furnaces of the Novokuznetsk metallurgical combine; in sunny Sochi by the Black Sea or Usinsk in snowy Siberia, warm, friendly hands were extended to us everywhere.

In 1958 I was doing practical work at a mine near Stalino, now called Donetsk. I was sent to live with a miner's family where I was treated as one of the family. I have always remembered this. The mistress of the house, Auntie Nyura, looked after me very thoughtfully. When I would come home from work she would always pour me a glass of cool tasty wine which she made herself; she would not let me wash my own clothes because she was afraid I'd get tired. When I would rest at home during the day after night shift she would not let the children talk in the house or listen to the radio, so I could sleep. The old granny treated me like a son and would tirelessly admonish me: Sonny, your parents are not here; when you go down into the mine you must always be careful. Even if you only scratch yourself your mother's heart would ache if she found out.

Their small daughter Vera was a happy, intelligent girl. She would always ask me to tell her Chinese children's fairy tales and to tell her about the training of life of Chinese pioneers. We often gathered around the table and ate hot, aromatic Ukrainian borscht, discussed domestic affairs and listened to Russian and Ukrainian songs. I always felt myself part of the family.

More than 20 years have passed, and although I have not had the chance to visit the Soviet Union again since then, through the magazine GORNOZHURANL, UGOL, UGOL UKRAINY and others, I have kept up with developments in mining in the Soviet Union. My colleagues have visited Leningrad a number of times and were very warmly received by colleagues from the coal industry. I was particularly pleased that last May, during an organizational committee session of the international mining congress held in Beijing, I was able to welcome to our scientific research institute a Soviet delegate, veteran of the mining business, Professor Dokukin, who delivered a substantial scientific report. He briefed us about the development of the mining industry in the Soviet Union in the next few years and answered our questions. The report by Professor Dokukin was met by warm applause from scientific and research workers of the mining industry in our country.

Dear Soviet friends, our country is now taking big steps along the path of realizing the four modernizations. In 1981 coal output in our country exceeded 600 million tons. Our coal industry is being provided with modern technical equipment, and we ourselves have designed and manufactured complex integral mechanized excavating equipment, hydraulic props and small-cut combines for extracting coal from thin and thick seams. Moreover, in our country we have developed new hydraulic coal excavation technology and equipment.

As a scientific worker involved in coal industry research I sincerely hope that relations and cooperation in science and technology between our two countries will strengthen and develop from day to day.

In concluding my speech I would like to take this opportunity to send festive regards to all Soviet miners and scientific workers in the coal industry, to the teachers of Kharkov mining institute and my former fellow students, and to wish you all great success in your work, happiness in life and health.

These provocations severely violated the armistice agreements, Han Chu-kyong noted.

RENMIN RIBAO HAILS STATE COUNCIL RESTRUCTURING

[Editorial: "A Good Beginning, a Profound Revolution"]

[Text] The 23d Session of the 5th NPC Standing Committee adopted three resolutions including that on the plan for restructuring the State Council. The work of organizing and establishing various ministries and commissions under the State Council has been completed. The people of the whole country have paid close attention to this work. At the same time, the restructuring of the leading organs under the CCP Central Committee and the Military Commission has also been completed smoothly. This is a good beginning. This portends that the profound revolution of restructuring the state organs will progress more smoothly than expected and bring still greater achievements.

The question of the state organs, as Lenin said, "is an old question and at the same time is always a new question." In 1922, upon learning that the Soviet organs at the central level and in Moscow were more than double their original sizes, Lenin pointed out incisively that this "often is not in our favor but is against us." In some of his letters written in the same year, he raised a cry of warning many times: "Filthy bureaucratism has landed us in a predicament of indiscriminately issuing documents, indulging in empty talk about laws and decrees and arbitrarily giving instructions, with the result that lively and vivid work is drowned by the flood of official documents." "Bureaucratism is the biggest defect in all work of all our economic organs. The Communist Party members have become bureaucrats. If there is anything which will ruin us, it will be this." These words of Lenin can still enlighten us today.

In the last 32 years, the party and government organs of our country have gradually expanded. Of course, a factor is that the volume of work has expanded which required that more organs be established. However, a still more important factor is that we do not understand deeply that the expansion of state organs "often is not in our favor but is against us," as Lenin said. We have built "temples" with seats for "800 Buddhas," thinking that when work is divided among many people it can surely be done well. The results show the contrary.

The overlapping and overstaffed administrations have their multitiered departments crammed full of superfluous personnel who adopt the bureaucratic style of work and documents pile up without actual problems being solved. All these have become obstacles to our efforts to build a powerful, modernized socialist country.

Currently, the CCP Central Committee is determined to restructure its organs. It will conduct an overall restructuring of systems in the future. This indeed will be a profound revolution. Of course, this revolution is not aimed at the personnel but at the organs, the administrative structure, the system and work style. We must take this revolution as a means to attain our goal of opposing bureaucratism and raising work efficiency so that the superstructure may serve its economic base better. When we say a good beginning, we mean that the current restructuring of organs has had a good beginning and that it is a gratifying first step to the overall restructuring of systems including the political and economic systems. This first step is a test of our determination in restructuring the systems and a probe into the ways of carrying out the restructuring. It is of vital significance to the whole course of restructuring in the future. Two months and more ago, some comrades doubted whether this restructuring of organs could be carried out smmothly. Facts have now proven that such doubts and pessimism are groundless. Provided we have the determination and what we do conforms to the development of the times and accords with the common aspirations of the people, we will surely succeed.

In the current work of organizing and establishing various ministries and commissions under the State Council, we are happy to see that large groups of old comrades who made magnificent contributions to the founding of the new China have again shown their broad-mindedness and their deep consciousness of our righteous cause and made new contributions. Recommending those who are capable, yielding their posts to those who are better qualified and assisting the up-and-coming youngsters, they have made important contributions toward the rejuvenation of the ranks of cadres. People will respect their contributions today as they do their contributions of yesterday. At the same time, we are happy to see that a group of young cadres who have both ability and political integrity have joined the leading groups of the various ministries and commissions at the central level. They are full of vigor and have high political consciousness and rich professional knowledge. People hope that these young cadres, with the help of the old comrades, will quickly shoulder the work at their new leading posts.

This is a good beginning, but still it is only a beginning. Take the restructuring of the central organs for example. Work in four aspects needs to be done at the next stage. This work is to define the scope of duties and raise work efficiency; to make adequate arrangements for the old cadres; to firmly grasp training of cadres by rotation; and to ensure accomplishment of the task of reducing the staff. Without doing the work in these four aspects well, we cannot say that we have done the work of restructuring the organs well, and still less can we say that our achievements in restructuring the organs have been consolidated. The work of developing the restructuring from the central organs to the local organs, from the leading administrative organs to the enterprises and institutions and from the organizational bodies to the political and economic systems, is a long-term task. We must display our revolutionary spirit in doing this work well. We must continue to study new conditions, solve new problems, find new methods and establish new systems, so that the various systems of the state will be continually improved and our cause of socialist modernization will develop continuously and triumphantly.

EDITORIAL URGES CONTINUING MAY 4TH SPIRIT

HK050830 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 4 May 82 pp 1, 4

[Editorial: "The Historical Mission of Contemporary Youth"]

[Text] More than a half century has passed since the great May 4th movement. Today the patriotic enthusiasm which surged up during the May 4th period still continues to burn in the hearts of our youth, from one generation to another.

Sixty-three years ago, our youth raised the slogan "Struggle against Western powers for sovereignty and punish traitors at home," and thus shook our motherland. Today, the slogan "Unite and build a prosperous China" is spurring hundreds of millions of youth. The youth of the new generation are strengthening themselves. They have taken up the torch which was ignited by their predecessors and are marching toward the lofty goal of turning our country into a powerful and modernized socialist country with high degree of democracy and civilization.

As the prelude of the Chinese people's democratic revolution, the May 4th movement was the new and great starting point of the Chinese youth movement. The May 4th movement made preparations, in terms of ideology and organization, for the birth of the CCP. After the founding of the CCP, Chinese youth have always stood in the very forefront of the people's struggle, as one of the most innovative and courageous shock forces under the party's leadership. The history of the last 60-odd years has shown that the youth movement is an indivisible part of the people's revolution in our country; only by unswervingly following the party can our youth make great contributions to the people's cause. On the other hand, the 10-year turbulence showed from the negative aspect that a correct political direction for youth is impossible to be reached without the correct leadership of the party. Today, proletarian revolutionaries of the older generation and the people of the whole country are more eagerly expecting to see the yount generation grow up more rapidly under the guidance of the party, give further play to the glorious traditions of the May 4th movement, and more self-consciously undertake the great historical mission of carrying forward the revolutionary cause and forging ahead into the future.

The historical mission passed on the contemporary youth is glorious and arduous. In the long history of mankind, the socialist cause has only forged ahead in the past several decades. And how to build up socialism in such a large Asian country with a population of 1 billion is an even more unprecedented cause. Our predecessors have laid down an excellent foundation in the struggle over the last 30-odd years. Looking ahead, we can see that our socialist cause is prospering like the sun rising in the eastern sky. The youth of this generation should have a profound understanding on the history of our predecessor's struggle in founding the revolutionary cause through arduous efforts. They should motivate themselves to create more self-consciously a more magnificent future with their own hands. The younger generation must be armed with a lofty ideal and creativity. And this ideal must be the communist ideal which is based on a scientific world outlook; and this creativity must be one which is based on the integration of the basic principles of Marxism-Leninism and the socialist practices in China.

It is under the historical conditions that the world has entered the 1980's of the 20th century and marvelous progress has been made in the field of science and technology that our youth undertake the historical mission of making China prosperous. Lenin repeatedly pointed out that to build socialism in a backward country, one must be skillful in making use of every useful thing capitalism has created. Today, in carrying out the modernization construction, we must utilize two resources -- the domestic of foreign resources; explore two markets -- the domestic and international markets; and learn two skills -- the skills to organize construction work at home and to promote external economic relations. The new historical condition emerging due to the implementation of the policy of opening the door to the outside world has opened a vast field for the youth to build socialism. On the other hand, this has also confronted the younger generation with an unprecedentedly complicated environment, namely, the struggle between the socialist and capitalist systems and between the socialist and capitalist ideologies, to win the younger generation. We should never forget that prediction made long ago by the representatives of international monopoly capitalism, stating that their hope of "peaceful evolution" lies in the third and fourth generations of our youth. To be an eagle or to be a chicken? This promising generation who is to be the new successor in leading our country's socialist cause must stand the test and grow up in such a struggle, and loudly voice a clear reply in declaring the complete failure of those capitalists' prediction.

During the period of the May 4th movement, the October Revolution sent us Marxism on the one hand and, on the other, those capitalist ideologies such as pragamatism, social reformism, anarchism and so on were laid before our youth. The advanced youth at that time eventually found the correct direction through studies, reflection and debates. They launched the new culture movement which was mainly guided by Marxism-Leninism, and thus made contributions to enriching our nation's spiritual civilization. Similarly, the youth today are facing varied ideological trends and the dazzling material civilization of the Western world. An ossified way of thinking and shortsightedness will not help in achieving our great cause, while servility to Westerners is shameful. The youthful generation must give full play to the May 4th revolutionary traditions by being skillful in learning all things useful to us and in resisting and criticizing and decadent things. The youth of our country must have the ambition to create a high degree of material and spiritual civilizations which are superior to the capitalist ones. Just as Comrade Mao Zedong pointed out long ago, as an enormous country with the largest population in the world, "China should make greater contributions to mankind."

People have different opinions regarding how to view this younger generation. We are not the worshippers of the theory of spontaneity, thinking that our youth can become useful people in building the country only by "doing what they think they should do." On the other hand, neither are we pessimists who think that our youth are good for nothing. We believe firmly in the theory that "the pupil surpasses the master." The society is in flux. If we do not realize the changing social and historical conditions, do not realize the changing characteristics of youth and if we indiscriminately judge the youth of the 1980's with the criteria of the 1950's, we will not be able to correctly view the nature of the contemporary youth and their main trend.

Over the past few years, the party and the government have done a lot of work in promoting education and arranging jobs for youth. The broad masses of youth can feel this. All conscious youths have already seen that the fundamental interest and future of youth lie in the principles and policies formulated since the party's third plenary session, and thus are more determined and confident in following the party. The broad masses of our youth support the line, principles and policies formulated since the party's third plenary session and are willing to dedicate their lives to the motherland's four modernizations drive. This manifests the nature of the contemporary youth and their main trend. Of course, besides advanced youth, there are also those who are less advanced and backward. We must resolutely and boldly rely on the advanced youth and use their examples to encourage the less advanced elements and speed up the transformation of the backward elements. Thus, all youths will proceed hand in hand toward the great goal of communism. Of course, we must not neglect current problems existing among the youth. It is important for us to analyze the social and historical factors accounting for these problems, exercise appropriate guidance and launch correct education. We must on the one hand uphold our orientation and on the other hand pay attention to methodology. In the wake of the improvement of the economic situation, improvement of the cultural level and increase of the social activities, youth have a wider scope of vision, extensive interests and more hobbies. We must, in accordance with the new situation and new characteristics, carry out vivid and effective education for youth and must not promote oversimplified education. We must not slacken our efforts in educating the youth with the communist spirit, opposing bourgeois ideological corruption and cultivating a new generation who have ideals, morals, culture, discipline and strong physiques. This is not only the obligation of the schools and the CYL, but also a job for all households and the entire society. As far as this is concerned, the writers and artists play an inestimable role in being the spiritual engineers. Each and every producer of spiritual products mush have a high sense of responsibility and must examine whether he is providing youth with milk, water or poison. We must not misinterpret education in the communist spirit for youth as sermons of deviating theory from actual practice.

The essence of communist education is to guide the youth to correctly understand their historical mission so as to dedicate their wisdom and talents to the people and the public good of society. Lenin pointed out: "Only in a process of work like this, can young men and women be cultivated into true communists. Only when they have gained concrete achievements in such work, can they become communists." Therefore, the whole of our society must still continue helping the youth to create more conditions and opportunities for dedicating their wisdom and talents to the socialist cause, open up more opportunities for study, open up more opportunities for developing their talents, open up more opportunities for employment and open up more opportunities for various kinds of work. In short, we must open up a vast array for the nurturing of the new generation.

Our party has always treated the CYL as intimate assistant. The CYL plays an extremely important role in uniting, educating and leading hundreds of millions of young people to shoulder the historical mission entrusted to them. While talking with cadres of the CYL Central Committee, Comrade Hu Yaobang earnestly encouraged the CYL cadres by saying that "it is necessary to adopt a firm political stand and set good examples in actual practice." These words pointed out the glorious task of the CYL and its basic work method. Now that the party's principles and policies have been laid down, the CYL, as the party's intimate assistant, must resolutely implement the party's line, principles and policies in actual practice, organize more activities for youth in accordance with their special characteristics, uphold education in the communist spirit and wage resolute struggles against bourgeois ideas and all other ideas that corrupt the minds of youth. The CYL is not uniting and educating the youths by means of giving orders but rather by means of guidance and setting good examples. The CYL must display such good work style and continue this fine tradition. The CYL cadres must cherish their youthfulness and strive to set good examples in working arduously, studying diligently and putting socialism into practice. Party organizations at all levels must strengthen leadership over the CYL committees, and give full play to the initiative and creativeness of the CYL.

The socialist cause of our great motherland is now in the ascendant and the future belongs to the younger generation who will carry forward the revolutionary cause and forge ahead into the future.

NEW STATE SHIPBUILDING CORPORATION SET UP

OW050350 Beijing XINHUA in English 1200 GMT 4 May 82

[Text] Beijing, May 4 (XINHUA) -- China's state shipbuilding industry is a latest target of economic reorganization and administrative streamlining. The 23rd Session of the Standing Committee of the Fifth National People's Congress today abolished the Sixth Ministry of Machine Building which heretofore had authority in shipbuilding.

The newly established China State Shipbuilding Corporation will be a unified shipbuilding authority with responsibility for planning and supervision of the industry. The new corporation was set up through a merger of shipyards, ship repair works and other units under what was formerly the Sixth Ministry of Machine Building, and those under the Ministry of Communications, according to a spokesman for the corporation.

It will fulfill all contracts signed by the former Sixth Ministry of Machine Building and the industrial bureau of the Ministry of Communications with Chinese and overseas clients, the spokesman said.

Chai Shufan, former vice-minister of the State Planning Commission, was elected president of the board of directors of the corporation at the first session of the board held last month. The election has been approved by the State Council.

The China State Shipbuilding Corporation is a "socialist enterprise owned by the entire people," according to the constitution of the corporation, the spokesman said. It undertakes production and conducts business activities independently, under the principle of combining industry with trade and scientific research with production, while paying attention to products for both military and civilian use and to construction and repairs of ships.

The corporation is at the ministerial level, the spokesman added. It is authorized to plan China's shipbuilding industry and draw up principles, policies and regulations concerning the industry for approval by the State Council.

Bo Yibo, state councillor who was then vice-premier, spoke at the first session of the board of directors of the corporation. The setting up of the corporation, he said, "represents a breakthrough made in the effort to restructure the management system of China's industry."

The old industrial management system now being transformed tended to duplicate production, research and imports, he said, as shipbuilding enterprises and research institutes are rigidly set apart by administrative divisions. Under the system, he said, enterprise management was confused with government administration. In other words, he explained "administrative methods were used to run enterprises, hindering development of production rather than promoting it."

The State Councillor Bo Yibo urged the corporation to achieve still better economic results in production and business operations by adopting new, better economic methods to run its enterprises.

In accordance with the principle of achieving better economic results, the corporation will study the feasibility of using low-interest loans, payment by installments and other methods to boost both domestic and overseas sales of ships, the spokesman for the corporation said.

The corporation will export oil-drilling rigs and equipment for shipboard use, while importing advanced technology.

Preparations are under way to set up shipbuilding corporations in Guangzhou, Tianjin and Dalian, the spokesman said. The Shanghai Corporation of Shipbuilding Industry, which operates under the China State Shipbuilding Corporation, was set up in August of last year.

HONGQI URGES CLEAR-MINDED ECONOMIC REFORMS

HK041000 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0817 GMT 1 May 82

[Report: "HONGQI Holds That Reforms of the Economic System Should Be Clear-Minded and Healthy"]

[Text] Beijing, 1 May (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- The No 9 issue of HONGQI published today carries a signed article which maintains that the reforms of the economic system, including that of the planning system, should be clear-minded and healthy.

The above article "An Immutable Basic Guiding Principle" written by Fang Weizhong discusses the view of relying mainly on the planned economy while making regulation by market subsidiary.

The article holds that we should not forget the superiority of socialist planned economy and that we should not attribute economic losses due to erroneous guiding thought and political turbulence to the system of planned economy. Socialist planned economy has tremendous advantages.

First, the state has the necessary means and is able to make arrangements for the production and needs of the whole society in a unified way to promote the coordinated development of the economy and reduce waste and blind production.

Second, when the economy is in a state of imbalance, it is possible for the state to take overall or partial measures for readjustment to restore the balance of the economy more rapidly.

Over the past 30 years or so since the nationwide liberation, we have relied on the planned economy to establish independent and comparatively complete industrial and national economy systems on the previous basis of poverty and backwardness to guarantee the basic food and clothing needs of 1 billion people. In so doing, we have bridged the gap between the poor and the rich, basically solved the problem of employment, stabilized goods prices on the market and maintained the independence of our country. Without a planned economic system, it is impossible to score these achievements.

The article also points out the three main problems and shortcomings in China's planned economy system.

1. We once stressed that our plans should be complete and meticulous and tried to include everything in the plan. We failed to pay attention to necessary regulation by market mechanism; that is, within a certain scope, some production is allowed to be spontaneously regulated by law of value.

2. We exercised too much and rigid control over that part of economy governed by plan. We failed to pay attention to arousing the initiative of the localities and departments concerned and neglected the rights and interests of the enterprises. This dampened the initiative and enthusiasm of enterprises.

3. We mainly relied on administrative measures and failed to attach importance to and were no good at using economic methods, that is, utilizing the lever of the economy to regulate preduction.

To deal with the above shortcomings, the article proposes reforms of the planned system in the following six aspects:

1. We should take correct theories as our guide. If our theories are lopsided and divorced from reality, deviations and errors are liable to occur in our actions.

2. We should be clear about the orientation of our reforms. In other words, we should follow Chen Yun's instructions on relying mainly on planned economy while making regulation by market mechanism subsidiary, namely, big planning, little freedom, big concentration and little dispersion. The reversal of the order of importance is not allowed and neither of them should be neglected.

3. Proceeding from the practical situation in China, we should formulate comprehensive plans based on all-round consideration and overall design and put forth some feasible methods and measures. We should avoid the practice of proceeding without a plan and attending to one thing and losing sight of another. We should particularly avoid the occurrence of contradiction and clash in the process of carrying out the reforms.

4. While carrying out the reforms, we should carry out experiments and conscientiously study their feasibility. Reforms should be conducted in a controlled manner and in proper order. At the same time, managerial follow-up work should be done. We should avoid rushing headlong into mass action.

5. As for some reforms which have been completed, we should expeditiously sum up experience so that the problems which have occurred will be solved properly and in a timely way. We should neither do things impetuously nor retreat hurriedly when something has gone wrong. We should avoid chaos resulting from the open-door policy or reimpose restrictions once a chaotic situation arises.

6. Before the formulation of new plans, we should not rashly change or give up the old methods. We should stick to the principle that there can be no destruction without construction to avoid confusion and anarchism, that is, each going his own way.

NATIONWIDE DISCUSSION WILL AID CONSTITUTION

HK060201 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 6 May 82 p 4

[CHINA DAILY Commentator's article -- "A People's Constitution"]

[Text] The draft of a revised constitution of the Chinese People's Republic has been published for open discussion throughout the country. A period of four months has been set for all the people to discuss and amend it. A new draft incorporating all necessary amendments will be presented to the National People's Congress for adoption before the end of the current year.

After passage by the NPC, this will be the fourth constitution since the founding of the People's Republic. The first, adopted in 1954, also went through nationwide discussion, but owing to the then prevailing historical conditions, it left a lot to be desired when socialist transformation was carried out a few years later.

A second constitution was enacted in 1975, in the last lap of the "Cultural Revolution," which was overwhelmingly tainted with leftist abnormalities. The third, hurriedly drawn up soon after the downfall of the gang of four and adopted in 1978, was quickly found outdated.

Events took a drastic turn after the end of that year when the third plenary session of the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party decided on a reorientation of its ideological and political line. It was not until after the sixth plenary session last June that conditions became ripe for drafting a new constitution that both reflects the fundamental interests of the masses of the people and sets forth a practical course for the whole nation to pursue in carrying on socialist modernisation.

It was on the basis of a resolution on certain questions in the history of the CCP passed by the June plenum re-assessing the merits and demerits of the 30 years since the founding of the People's Republic, particularly of the "Cultural Revolution," that a new constitution was drafted. Moreover, without an appraisal of the achievements of the political and economic policies for the past three years, many of the stipulations in the draft revision could not have been worked out.

Citizens' Rights

A dominant feature of the new draft is close concern for the people. In the main, it embodies stipulations of their rights and the indispensalbe safeguards to protect them. It can even be said that nothing is included in the draft that is irrelevant to them.

The overall statement in the preamble that "all power of the People's Republic of China belongs to the people" is substantiated by 22 articles enumerating citizens' fundamental rights, as against 16 such articles in the 1954 constitution. The time-honoured principle that "all citizens are equal before the law" is an added provision in the new draft.

The newly-added provision that the "personal dignity of citizens is inviolable" is particularly significant in contrast to the widespread despotic actions against cadres and intellectuals during the 10 years of tumult, when extra-legal detention of citizens, deprivation or restriction of citizens' freedom of person and extra-legal search of persons and their homes were common. According to the new draft, such actions will be treated as crimes and responsible persons punished.

Freedom of religious belief, permitted in the current and previous constitutions, is now implemented by the specific stipulation that "the state protects legitimate religious activities."

Democratic

The democratic nature of the revisions is not only to be found in the broadened scope of citizens' fundamental rights, but permeates the preamble and the entire chapter on the functions of the state.

The Communist Party, as well as any other party, and the armed forces shall operate within the scope of the constitution: no one shall transcend it. Another outstanding provision is the abolition of the traditionally life tenure in posts held by leading state and government officials. The chairman of the People's Republic, those of the NPC and the Central Military Commission and the premier shall not serve more than two five-year terms.

Government officials at every level shall be appointed or dismissed by the people's congress of the corresponding level. A newly established auditor to be appointed at each government level by the NPC will have the independent power to supervise the handling of state funds by government officials.

De-centralization, or, rather, restrictions an over-centralization, of power of both government organs and economic enterprises is also an important sign of democratization and in accord with socialist modernization.

The nationwide discussion of the draft revision in the coming months, itself demonstrating the popular spirit to which it is dedicated, will enable that latest PRC Constitution to be a more acceptable and practical fundamental law than all previous ones.

ARTICLE TRACES APPROVAL OF FIRST CONSTITUTION

[Article by Dong Chengmei [5516 2152 5019]: "Some Facts About Whole-People Discussion of China's First State Constitution"]

[Text] It took 1 year and 8 months (from January 1953 to September 1954) to draw up our first state constitution. This process involved large-scale mass discussions on three occasions of which the whole-people discussion of the draft constitution was the most prominent.

The first discussion involved representative figures from various quarters. In Beijing, 17 discussion groups were organized and in various large administrative areas, provinces, autonomous regions and municipalities directly under the central government, 58 discussion units were established. They conscientiously discussed the draft constitution. More than 8,000 people took part in the discussions which lasted for 2 months or so and about 6,000 suggestions for amendments were raised in the discussions. All these suggestions greatly helped the work of drafting the constitution. The revised draft constitution based on these suggestions was adopted by the 30th session of the central people's government committee and was promulgated on 14 June 1954. After that, it was presented to the people of the whole country for discussion.

The second discussion involving the whole people lasted for 2 months or so. More than 1.38 million opinions on the revised draft were put forth excluding duplicate ones which were sorted out. About 44.89 percent of those opinions dealt with the preamble and general program of the draft constitution. This showed that people of the whole country were particularly concerned with the problem of building socialist society. About 30.57 percent of the opinions were about state organs; 19.38 percent were about the fundamental rights and duties of citizens; about 1.4 percent of the opinions touched upon the problems of national flag, national emblem and the capital, and about 4 percent dealt with other problems.

The third discussion involved all deputies who attended the NPC session held in September 1954. At that time, deputies who came to Beijing from various parts of the country were divided into 33 groups and their discussions lasted for 3 days. They also put forth 818 suggestions and additional opinions on the revised draft.

The constitution drafting committee revised the former draft again in accordance with the above opinions and submitted it to the 34th session of the central people's government committee held on 9 September 1954 and its interim meeting held on 14 September of the same year for discussion and approval. After that, it was presented to the First NPC for discussion and examination.

On 15 September 1954, on behalf of the constitution drafting committee, Comrade Liu Shaoqi delivered his "report on the draft PRC Constitution" in which he also answered those opinions raised in the whole-people discussions. From 16-18 September, all NPC deputies discussed the draft constitution and the report on the draft constitution. There were 89 deputies who took the floor. All the deputies warmly supported the draft constitution, expressed agreement with Comrade Liu Shaoqi's report on it and suggested that the NPC session adopt it.

In the First Session of the First NPC held on 20 September 1954, 1,197 deputies who attended the session unanimously adopted the PRC Constitution by secret ballot. After that, the NPC presidium issued a circular to the people of the whole nation. This was how our first state constitution was born.

LEADERS ON DECORUM, COURTESY ACTIVITIES

OW051420 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1152 GMT 5 May 82

[Text] Beijing, 5 May (XINHUA) -- Wang Zhen, Wan Li, Xi Zhongxun, Wang Renzhong, Bo Yibo and other leading comrades met with all the comrades taking part in a discussion meeting to sum up the "all-people decorum and courtesy month" activities on the morning of 4 May. In their talks, they asked party organizations at various levels to further develop their organizational and leading roles in promoting civility and courtesy activities with "five stresses and four beauties" in a deep-going and lasting way, in order to turn the people of our country into those who have ideals, morality and culture and observe discipline, and turn our country into a modern and powerful socialist country with a high degree of democracy and civilization.

In his speech, Comrade Wang Renzhong warmly praised the achievements of the first "all-people decorum and courtesy month" activities in March this year. He said decorum and courtesy month activities were a rehearsal, which has shown that our party is full of fighting capability. We should consolidate and develop our achievements. On the basis of our experience, we should further organize our forces and persist in unfolding civility and courtesy activities with the "five stresses and four beauties." We should assign responsible persons to take charge of the work. We should consolidate and develop various organizations and forms of activity to produce a system. We should educate cadres, party members, CYL members and all people with communist thinking and morality and give full play to the party's fine tradition of hard struggle and being fearless of sacrifice. We should advocate the revolutionary spirit of serving the people wholeheartedly instead of seeking personal fame and gain. We should give wide publicity to good people and good things, uphold justice, support advanced people and models, criticize erroneous thinking and encourage backward people and units to make progress. We should pay attention to both material and spiritual civilization. On the basis of division of labor between the party and the government, party committees should further try to build spiritual civilization. They should pay attention to doing ideological and political work well, whip up the enthusiasm of the masses and encourage them to build material civilization, sensing they are masters of the country. We should proceed in a solid manner and strive to make new progress. We have great faith in our cause and we can certainly achieve success.

In his speech, Comrade Wan Li stressed: It all depends on our efforts and perseverance. As long as we strengthen party leadership, government work and bring into play the spirit of the foolish old man who removed mountains, the achievements and experience of the "all-people decorum and courtesy month" activities can surely be carried forward. Thus, our people's moral standard can surely be restored to that of the past and be held in world esteem.

In his speech, Comrade Bo Yibo pointed out that since the five stresses and four beauties activities have a bearing on the four modernizations drive, it is necessary to link closely with economic construction, while unfolding activities on the five stresses and four beauties and promoting the spirit of self-reliance. This will enhance national confidence and promote material construction.

Comrade Wang Zhen said: To persevere in unfolding the five stresses and four beauties so that they become the moral practice of the Chinese nation is an event of major importance. If our 1 billion people are armed with Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, surely they will contribute to the development of the Chinese nation and the cause of liberation of the world's people.

Also present at the meeting were: Deng Liqun, director of the CCP Central Committee Propaganda Department; Yu Wen, Wang Huide and He Jingzhi, vice directors of the Propaganda Department; Zhou Yang and Liao Jingdan, advisers of the Propaganda Department; and Han Ying, first secretary of the CYL Central Committee; and Gao Zhanxiang, secretary of the CYL Central Committee.

ARTICLE ON LITERATURE, ART SERVING POLITICS

[Article by Wang Ruoshui [3769 5387 3055]: "Literature and Art, Politics, the People"]

[Text] I

Some comrades are not able to comprehend why we no longer use the slogan "Literature and art should serve politics." Here, I would like to talk about my own understanding of this question.

For 17 years after the setting up of our country, the three slogans "Literature and art should serve politics," "Literature and art should serve the workers, peasants and armymen" and "Literature and art should serve socialism" were often used indiscriminately and interchangeably. They were actually regarded as having the same meaning. In "the eight points for literature and art" which were jointly drafted by the party groups of the Ministry of Culture and the Federation of Literary and Art Circles, the following is written: That literature and art should serve proletarian politics "precisely means that they should serve the workers, peasants and armymen, serve the interests of the socialist cause and serve the interests of the overwhelming majority of people throughout the country and in the whole world." Why is it then that the Central Committee has at present put forth that as the general slogan for the orientation of literature and art, "Serving the people and serving socialism" should be used instead of "serving politics?"

Before answering this question, I would like to raise another question first: What does politics serve, if literature and art serve politics?

For many years, we have heard of slogans such as "Literature and art should serve politics," "Education should serve politics," "Philosophy should serve politics," "Science should serve politics" and "Physical culture should serve politics," but we have scarcely heard about what politics should serve. Politics seems to have become something paramount and all other things should serve it and are subordinate to it. Thus, this has given rise to a question: Is politics itself an objective? It is relatively clear that literature and art themselves are not objectives. The idea of "art for art's sake" finds no support in our country. Does this mean that "politics for politics' sake" is correct? Of course, many of our tasks and work have a political objective. "Unite for the purpose of consolidating the proletarian dictatorship." In a certain sense, consolidating the proletarian dictatorship is an objective. But in the final analysis, it is not. The people's democratic dictatorship belongs to the category of superstructure and politics. We need to consolidate the people's democratic dictatorship, but we should also ask: What is the use of the people's democratic dictatorship? Politics needs to be served by other things, but we should also ask: What then does politics serve?

Stalin said that a specific superstructure serves a specific economic base. Therefore, proletarian politics should serve the socialist economic base. Comrade Mao Zedong said, "The aim of this dictatorship is to protect all our people so that they can devote themselves to peaceful labor and make China a socialist country with modern industry, modern agriculture, and modern science and culture." ("Selected Works of Mao Zedong," vol 5, p 366) This clearly states that dictatorship itself is not an objective. It serves economic construction and serves production. However, as pointed out by Stalin, socialist production itself is not an objective either, but there is an objective -- meeting the people's material and spiritual needs. This is to say, politics serves the economy and, in the end, serves the people.

Therefore, literature and art serve politics and, in the end, serve the people. Nevertheless, the slogan "Literature and art should serve the people" has many more implications than "Literature and art should serve politics." Literature and art are spiritual production. In the same way as material production meets people's material needs, literature and art meet the people's spiritual needs. Of course, literature and art should educate the people. But receiving education is also a spiritual need of the people. Besides, the people also have a need to appreciate beauty, a need for amusement, a need to rest and so on. Literature and art should also meet these needs. Some comrades say that literature and art serve the people by means of a "medium" -- politics. I do not think this is so. Generally speaking, literature and art are closely related to politics, and literature and art should not be divorced from politics. We must affirm this but we should not go to extremes. We should not demand that each poem or each painting should, without exception, have a political content. Nor should we say that those without a political content are not needed by the people. The people's spiritual needs are manifold and literature and art also serve the people in various forms. These rich contents cannot be covered by the slogan "serving politics," nor can they be covered by "serving the economy" or "serving production." Therefore, we had better say "serving socialism and serving the people." Socialism is the people's fundamental interest and, therefore, serving socialism is also serving the people.

II

Demanding that literature and art should serve politics results from a fear that literature and art may be come divorced from politics. Will politics also be divorced from the people? What should literature and art do in case politics does not serve the socialist economic base or the people?

There are grounds for raising this question. This is not a strange question at all. Let us start with theory.

The superstructure should serve the economic base. The term "serve" here might have first been used by Stalin. As a demand, it is correct to put it this way. Does it inevitably serve the economic base in reality? This is ambiguous even in what Stalin said. On the one hand, he said, "It cannot be otherwise." On the other hand, he said, "Once the superstructure renounces this role of auxiliary and passes from a position of active defense of its base to one of indifference towards it...it will lose its essence and cease to be a superstructure." ("Marxism and Problems of Linguistics") This seems to say that superstructure sometimes does not serve its base, in which case it cannot be called a superstructure. What is it called then if it is not called superstructure? No matter what it is called, both literature and art and politics sometimes, in fact, do not serve the economic base or are contradictory to the economic base.

I think what Engels said about this question is correct. He said, "The development of politics, law philosophy, religion, literature and art are based on economic development. However, they influence each other and also influence the economic base." ("The Complete Works of Marx and Engels," vol 39, p 199) Engels did not use serving or being served to sum up the relationship between superstructure and the base. Nor did he use it to sum up the relationship between politics and literature and art.

He said that politics and literature and art influenced each other but they were all based on the economy and influenced the economic base in return. The word "influence" has a much broader sense than "serve." How does politics influence the economy? In his book "Anti-Duhring," Engels explained that political power might play its role in two directions: in the same direction as that of economic development, thus promoting economic development; or in the direction opposite to that of economic development, thus obstructing economic development and eventually collapsing under economic pressure. In short, as a superstructure, political power may adopt an indifferent attitude towards its base and it is possible that it may not serve its base.

Looking back at the road we have traveled may help us to understand this better. After the founding of our country, situations in which political power was indifferent towards its economic base and even sabotaged its economic base occurred. In fact, the political movement of the "Great Cultural Revolution" "played its role in a direction opposite to economic development." Political struggle pounded at everything, including its own base. The power entrusted by the people broke away from the people's control and brought serious disasters to the people. What role did the slogan "Literature and art should serve politics" play under these abnormal conditions?

This is a new question which arose in practice. This question could not have been raised at the Yanan forum on literature and art in 1942. At that time, the party's line, principles and policies were all correct. They indeed embodied the interests, desires and demands of the broad masses of people. Therefore, when it was put forth at the same time that "literature and art should serve the people" and literature and art were subordinate to a specific political line, revolutionary writers did not see much difference between the two. Serving proletarian politics was the same as serving the people and writers were to serve in that way. However, at a time when mistakes occurred in the line and policies, it was, in fact, difficult for "serving politics" to keep in step with "serving the people."

We all remember the fate of literature and art in the decade of internal turmoil. Due to views that treated the relationship between literature and art and politics in an oversimplified way, literature and art being subordinate to politics was further interpreted as literature and art being subordinate to a specific political line. But there were only two lines at that time. If you did not belong to "Chairman Mao's proletarian line," you belonged to "Liu Shaoqi's revisionist line" and you were "serving the capitalist restoration." This was the theoretical basis for exercising the proletarian dictatorship in the ideological and cultural fields. This gave rise to many "literary inquisitions." Phenomena of kings and lords and gifted scholars and beautiful ladies appearing on the stage were exaggerated as political problems that would change the color of the country. Some comrades think that the drawback of the slogan "serving politics" is only due to its being erroneously interpreted as serving policies or serving concrete political talks but if it is interpreted as serving a line, no problem will occur. Facts have proved that this is not true.

Of course, the politics we are talking about is not the politics of a small number of people but that of a class and the masses. However, all the political movements that took place after the setting up of our country were in the form of a mass movement but not all these movements were in conformity with the people's interests. What kind of politics was the "Great Cultural Revolution?" Of course, what Lin Biao and the "gang of four" engaged in was feudal fascist politics. However, the "Great Cultural Revolution" was not the problem of the party. The party made a mistake. Besides, it appeared, at least in the early stage, in the form of a mass movement. Millions of people were drawn into this movement and although they disliked it, they committed mistakes in the wake of others. In our country, the proletariat is represented by the party and proletarian politics is the party's activities, the party's theory and practice and the party's line, principles and policies. Where can we find abstract "proletarian politics" other than these?

In reality, there is no such thing as extremely pure and one hundred percent correct "proletarian politics." We should not substitute ideals for reality. The masses, a political party or a leader can make mistakes. We cannot say that proletarian politics will not make mistakes or that once it makes a mistake, it cannot be called proletarian politics. Otherwise, we are in effect saying that the proletariat will not make mistakes. How can we say this?! Did not the proletariat make many mistakes in history? Things became different after Marxism emerged but it still could not avoid making mistakes. If mistakes occur in politics, they should be corrected in accordance with the people's interests. The people also have the right to criticize, including the right to criticize in literary forms. Since the poems at Tiananmen condemned the "gang of four," they also criticized the politics of that time. Of course, the Tiananmen incident was also a mass political movement and therefore, we can say that the poems at Tiananmen served the political struggle of the masses. However, it is better to say that everything is subordinate to the people's interests and literature and art and politics should also be subordinate to the people's interests than to say that everything is subordinate to the people's interests than to say that everything is subordinate to politics. In a socialist country, the people are the objective and the people are the masters.

III

Viewed from practical writing activities, the slogan "literature and art should serve politics" has also been the cause of many drawbacks even in works on a theme or economic construction. The theme of works about industry was always on the struggle against right-deviationist conservatism. In works about technical reforms in factories, the intellectuals would always be conservative, the factory directors would always have blind faith in the experts, the workers would always be pace setters in technical reforms, class enemies would always carry out sabotage activities in the dark, party committee secretaries would always be correct and, without exception, problems would always be solved the moment party committee secretaries handled them. Of course, there were such things in real life but it was wrong for everybody to write about them and turn them into a formula. On the one hand, the practice of giving arbitrary and impractical directions and making rash advance was very common in factories and rural areas. On the other hand, a lot of literary and artistic works were about the struggle against conservatism. We could hardly see in them the image of party committee secretaries who were commandists and who gave arbitrary and impracticable directions. Nor did we see the image of correct and advanced technical experts. Why did this contradiction between literature and art and reality occur? This was because for many years, our party had been continuously struggling against right deviation. Should literature and art have been subordinate to this kind of politics? In the first place, there were mistakes in the policies which had become divorced from reality, but literature and art were asked to serve them. Consequently, writers were forced to depart from real life, to write according to the requirements of these policies and to use these works, in return, to prove that the policies were correct. Was it not more of a hindrance than a help to "serve politics" in this way?

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, the party has revived the fine tradition of seeking truth from facts and proceeding in everything from reality and has formulated a series of correct principles and polices. On the other hand, writers have also emancipated their minds. They now dare to proceed from real life and, at the same time, uphold the correct political oreintation. In this way, unity between truthfulness and politics again exists in literature and art.

We need freedom in writing. This kind of freedom is used to serve socialism and to serve the people. We say that we oppose "bourgeois liberalization," but we should not misunderstand this term and think that bourgeois art has much freedom. In fact, in the capitalist society, art is also a commodity. It has to serve the bourgeoisie and money. It cannot shake off the trammels of "box-office value."

For the sake of box-office value, it may propagate sex and violence. It seems to enjoy much freedom but it is manipulated by money and is not free art. What is worthy of notice is that there is also a tendency of "making money the end-all" in some of our literature and art. I do not mean that we should not attach any importance to box-office value. What I mean is that we cannot put it in the most important position. We should not pander to backward ideas and the low tastes of some audiences or readers for the sake of box-office value. This cannot be considered as meeting the people's needs. What the people really need are things beneficial to them. Nor can it be considered as serving the people. It serves box-office value. As far as box-office value is concerned, highbrow art and literature are not as good as popular art and literature. We should not abuse the freedom of writing. We often say unity between freedom and discipline, but here I prefer to say unity between freedom and responsibility. Discipline is something external, whereas responsibility is a demand we set on ourselves. There is unity between freedom of writing and a writer's responsibility. We have freedom of writing but we cannot be irresponsible. We hold ourselves responsible to the people and to socialism. When Comrade Deng Xiaoping said that party leadership should not flagrantly interfere in literature and art, he explicitly increased the responsibility of writers and artists.

IV

The saying that literature and art is subordinate to politics was put forth during the stormy years of revolutionary war. At that time, the people's entire attention was focused on politics. It is not difficult to understand why this saying was put forward. Later on, the slogan "serving politics" was derived from this saying and it has been used ever since. It was not until the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee at which the focus of our work was shifted to socialist modernization that it was possible to reexamine this slogan. Likewise, people are now able to put politics in an appropriate place and to assess the social functions of literature and art from a wider angle.

Literature and art reflect social life and also exert an influence on life. Here "social life" includes politics and the economy. On the other hand, the proletarian dictatorship should not only serve the economy but promote the development and prosperity of socialist culture as well.

When Stalin said that it was impossible for superstructure not to serve the economic base, he stressed the unity of the two but overlooked their contradiction. Comrade Mao Zedong noticed this in 1957. In his article "On the Correct Handling of Contradictions Among the People," he said: Even in a socialist society, "there is harmony as well as contradiction between the superstructure and the economic base." Viewed from ideology, the socialist ideology guided by Marxism-Leninism is suited to the socialist economic base but the bourgeois ideology is in contradiction with this base. Viewed politically, the state system and laws of the people's democratic dictatorship are suited to the socialist economic base but certain bureaucratic ways of doing things in state organs and defects in certain links in our state system are in contradiction with this base. In the above discussion, I have mentioned contradictions which emerged in the "Great Cultural Revolution." They occurred under extremely special circumstances. But under normal conditions, contradictions such as those put forth by Comrade Mao Zedong will still occur. Viewed from the experience of over 30 years, even socialist ideology guided by Marxism, including Marxist theoretical work itself, has harmonious aspects as well as contradictory aspects, that is, aspects of falling behind the needs of socialist reality. Moreover, our political system is still not perfect and our law is still not perfect. They are not entirely suited to the economic base either.

In short, both culture and politics have aspects which are suited to the economic base as well as aspects which are not suited to it. The party's policy of "letting a hundred flowers bloom and letting a hundred schools of thought contend" is precisely a way for the true, the good and the beautiful to triumph over the false, the evil and the ugly.

It is also a way to strengthen the leading position of Marxism in the ideological circle and to promote the prosperity of socialist culture by means of the free development of various artistic forms and styles and free contention of various scientific schools (including criticism and self-criticism). This is how the party exercises political leadership over culture. This is how the party serves the people and makes culture more suited to the needs of socialism and the people. Likewise, when literature and art praise the state system of the people's democratic dictatorship and the party's correct leadership and criticize bureaucracy and unhealthy trends, they exert an influence on politics. This is also to make politics more suited to the economic base and to make it better serve the people.

In short, since both politics and literature and art serve the people, they are faced with the same question of whether they are serving them well or not. This question has to be tested in practice. What is conducive to socialism and to the people should be affirmed and what is harmful to socialism and to the people should be corrected. In a socialist country, the people's interests are higher than anything else.

RENMIN RIBAO ON GOVERNMENT RESPONSIBILITY SYSTEM

[Article by Yan Jiaqi [0917 1367 0366]: "A Talk on Responsibility System in Government Work"]

[Text] Economic responsibility system is a system of responsibility among the state, the collective and individuals in our socialist economic life. The purpose of forming economic responsibility systems is to define the economic responsibility of various units and individuals in the process of production so that the responsibility system at various levels can be combined with the principle of distribution according to labor at the same time that "power," "responsibility" and "interest" can be unified. As the economic responsibility system is being implemented more widely in our economic life, it has not only reformed labor discipline and mobilized the initiative of the broad masses of producers and management staff, but has also improved the management of producing units and economic effect and vigorously promoted the development of our socialist economy. Although the economic responsibility system needs further development, practice has proved that it is one of the effective systems in our socialist economic life.

As the economic responsibility system has played such a large role in the economic sector, people cannot but consider that it is also necessary to form various forms of responsibility systems in the political sector, particularly in our government work at various levels.

It is a common phenomenon that the efficiency of our government organizations at various levels is low. We understand that the efficiency of government organizations is mainly determined by two factors. One is the factor of the government organizations themselves. The establishment of government organizations, the division of authority among different government organizations, the handling of the relations between lower- and higher-level organizations and the definition of the authority and responsibility among different positions in government departments -- all these have a considerable impact on the efficiency of government organizations. The second is the factor of government staff. The way in which government staff members are promoted, the way in which they are used and the fact that there is no complete and effective examination system and punishment system have all affected the efficiency of the government. For quite a long period in the past, we did not pay enough attention to these two aspects. As a result, the formation of government organizations and the actual work of these organizations are characterized by excessive staff, duplication or effort, unclear delineation of responsibility in various positions, and the situation in which people do not care about efficiency is very serious. In order to change these situations, it is imperative in the process of reforming government organizations to set up various forms of responsibility systems in government work.

In appointing people for positions in government work, the "power" must accord with "responsibility" (of course, with regard to "honorary positions" and some "advisory positions," often "power does not accord with the position." The emergence of a few such positions will not create a bad influence on government work; on the contrary and under certain conditions, such positions are necessary). If a government staff member with heavy "responsibility" does not have the corresponding "power," he is not in a position to carry out his job effectively. He can only complete the defined tasks by relying on active and voluntary help from others, and as a result, there is no guarantee that he can carry out his responsibility. On the contrary, if a government staff member is heavily "empowered" and yet without "responsibility," it is possible that he will exercise his power arbitrarily and at will. Because his deeds are not subject to punishment according to law, various incidents may occur that are harmful to the interests of the state and that violate the rights of the people. Of course, it is possible that those who are in power but who have no responsibility do not use their power arbitrarily, but they will be in a state of inertia and they are good at "shifting responsibility onto others." All these situations have not only seriously affected the relations between the government and the people but have also made government inefficient. A government is a tool of a class in exercising its rule and a government of any class has problems of efficacy. A government that is paying attention to regulating its relations with the people and to efficiency consequently puts "power" in the same place with "responsibility." In all of these positions in government organizations, there should be no position that has "responsibility but without power," nor should there be "power without responsibility." It is imperative to make "power" accord with definite "responsibility."

Generally speaking the "responsibility" of government staff refers to "responsibility in work" and this responsibility can be divided into "political responsibility," "administrative responsibility" and "general legal responsibility." In a country with complete administrative rules and regulations for government organizations and other management tasks, the "administrative responsibility" of government staff is also manifested as "legal responsibility." In a country with incomplete administrative rules and regulations for government organizations and other management tasks, the "administrative responsibility" is not necessarily manifested as "legal responsibility." "General legal responsiblity" refers to public "legal responsibility." In many countries now, both government staff and the public will bear legal responsibility if they violate general laws (such as criminal law and civil law).

What is "political responsibility?" Generally speaking, all senior government officials that are elected or appointed have political responsibility. For example, the representatives to the people's congresses at various levels are politically responsible to their electors and the senior officials of the CCP Central Committee and local governments at various levels are politically responsible to the National People's Congress and people's congresses at various levels. The constitution of our country stipulates that "the State Council is responsible to the National People's Congress and it has to make a work report; during the closing period of the NPC, it is responsible to the Standing Committee of the NPC and it is has to make a work report." The local pepple's governments and people's congresses at various levels and the standing committees of these congresses also have such relationships. Local people's governments at various levels must also be responsible to higher state organizations while local people's governments at various levels are under the unified leadership of the State Council. Such "power-responsibility relations" in fact manifest the "political responsibility system." During an election, electors or representative organizations elect those who have implemented the party's policies, set an example in abiding by law, demonstrated a healthy work style and have close relations with the masses to representative or government organizations.

However, under this "political responsibility system," even if the people's representatives or government staff do not violate laws or neglect their duties, they still may not be reelected to representative or government organizations once the electors or representative organizations no longer trust them. Electors and representative organizations have the right to dismiss from office incompetent representatives or senior government officials. Higher government organizations also have the right to dismiss from office senior government officials in lower levels who are no longer considered competent in their positions. It can be said that losing an election or recalling or removing somebody from office represent important methods in the commitment of "political responsibility" of people's representatives or certain government officials. As the constitution, government organizational law and election law have defined the appointments and dismissals with regard to the emergency of people's representatives and senior government officials, it can be said to a certain extent that "political responsibility" is also "legal responsibility."

Contrary to "political responsibility," the "administrative responsibility" of government staff refers to a kind of responsibility that should be borne by those who have violated the rules and regulations of the related government adminsitrative organizations and their management tasks. The people's representatives who hold no government positions have no "administrative responsibility" for government tasks. The establishment of the system in government work includes the "political responsibility system" and more important, the "administrative responsibility system." In order to establish the "administrative responsibility system," it is necessary to improve and strengthen the party's leadership over cadre tasks, improve government personnel management organizations and define laws and regulations for various administrative organizations and management. The establishment, power and work procedures and the relations of government organizations as well as the power and responsibility of various positions must be defined through administrative legislation so that in their work, all government staff will have rules and regulations to follow and they will be responsible and correctly handle and solve various problems in a timely way. When there is a contradiction of power among government administrative organizations or when they are shifting responsibility onto each other, these problems can be solved through legal procedures.

In establishing the "administrative responsibility system," it is also necessary, through administrative legislation, to define such matters as how to value, check, award, promote and punish government staff. Rules and regulations must also be formulated for regularly evaluating and checking the ideology, deeds, level of implementing policies, level of organizing, professional knowledge and working efficiency of government staff. According to the results of these tasks, measures must be taken to define and readjust the salaries, jobs and grades of government staff. Those who are indolent in their work, disrespectful in their jobs, infringe upon public interest for their own interests and who arbitrarily exercise their power must, according to the rules and regulations of the related government administrative organizations and their management work, bear "administrative responsibility" and they must accordingly be punished and handled. Of course, a complete "administrative responsibility system" must define supervisory methods and punishment procedures for government staff as well as procedures and methods of appeal for the staff who are subject to administrative responsibility and who refuse to accept the punishment.

Premier Zhao Ziyang said in his "report on the question of restructuring the State Council" that through reform, the government organizations must resolutely change the situations that are characterized by irrational division of work and indefinite responsibility. He said: "In the past, the various phenomena such as arguing over trifles, shifting responsibility onto others and no one taking responsibility are a manifestation of bureaucratic work style; but it is also mainly because of indefinite division of responsibility and work." Therefore, in order to enable our governments at various levels to serve the people still better and improve the efficiency of government organizations and their staff, it is necessary to proceed from our specific national conditions and in reforming our government organizations to set up various effective forms of responsibility system in government work.

POWER CONFERENCE STRESSES ECONOMIC RESULTS

[By RENMIN RIBAO and XINHUA correspondents]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 28 Apr (XINHUA) -- The first national electric power conference held by the newly merged Ministry of Water Conservancy and Power called on all workers and staff members of electric power departments to calculate for themselves the power industry's economic and socioeconomic results in guaranteeing national economic development and to make the limited electric power resources produce maximum socioeconomic results. The conference's main topic was how to increase the power industry's economic results. In power production, quite a number of units at present are troubled by high coal consumption and a high rate of line loss. As a result, in recent years the cost of power has increased and profit has dropped. In 1981, the cost of power sold by enterprises under the former Ministry of Power Industry increased by 6 jiao and 3 fen per 1,000 kilowatt-hours over that in 1980, and the profit rate for investment dropped by 1.4 percent. The country's line loss rate was as high as 8.91 percent in 1981, about 1.5 percent higher than that in industrially advanced countries. The line loss rate in rural areas is even greater. The comrades who attended the conference held that although there were objective factors, poor administration and management were the main reasons for the high line loss and high coal consumption.

In the field of electric power capital construction, the problems of long construction periods, high construction costs and so forth are widespread. Construction of a large or medium-sized hydroelectric power project generally required 3 to 5 years to complete in the 1950's and till the mid-1960's. It now requires 5 to 10 years. The average combined investment per 1,000 kilowatt has also increased from 1,024 yuan then to more than 1,400 yuan now. The first generating unit of the Baishan power station in Jilin was originally scheduled to go into operation in 1980. It is not completed yet and completion has been postponed for 3 years. The power station's original plan called for an investment of 360 million yuan. It has now been increased to 880 million yuan, more than double the original figure.

The conference pointed out: This year power departments should increase power generation by 1.3 percent over last year to ensure that industrial production will increase by "at least 4 percent and possibly 5 percent." This task is a very arduous one. To encourage the entire power industry to pay attention to increasing economic results, the conference commended 156 advanced units which had made outstanding achievements in ensuring production safety, coal and power conservation, power supply services, water reservoir management, construction results and so forth.

Comrade Bai Rubing, first secretary of the provincial CCP committee, made an important speech at the rally. Comrade Gao Qiyun, secretary of the provincial CCP committee, presided over the rally.

Attending the welcome rally were representatives of various prefectures and municipalities who had attended the provincial forum of representatives of model laborers and advanced personages; comrades who had attended the forum of representatives of model laborers and advanced personages emerged on the provincial metallurgical front; model and distinguished figures of all trades and professions in Jinan municipality; and comrades in charge of trade union work -- over 2,200 people in all.

Prior to the opening of the welcome rally, leading comrades of the provincial and the Jinan municipal CCP committees and people's governments, including Bai Rubing, Qin Hezhen, Li Zhen, Gao Qiyun, Li Zichao, Xu Jianchun, Zhao Feng, Lin Ping, Liu Peng, Liu Zhongqian, Ding Fangming, Wei Jianyi and Li Yuanrong, as well as responsible persons of the departments concerned directly under the provincial authority and of mass groups personally received the representatives who had attended the national forum of representatives of model laborers and advanced personages and comrades who had attended the provincial forum of representatives of model laborers and advanced personages.

At the welcome rally, Comrade Bai Rubing, first secretary of provincial CCP committee, called on the broad masses of workers and staff on all fronts in the province to immediately set off an upsurge of learning from the advanced and rushing to be the advanced and to charge forward in and make contributions to the four modernizations. He said: Heroes, models and advanced personages always reflect the spirit of the times and represent the way forward for society. Launching mass activities of emulating, learning from, catching up with, helping and in turn surpassing each other and disseminating the advanced ideology and experiences of model and distinguished personages among large numbers of workers and staff to continually create new and still higher levels in all fields are the demands of the times, the needs of undertakings and the aspirations of the masses. Party and government leaders at all levels and various mass organizations should support and commend the advanced with a clear-cut stand, with ardor and sincerity and with a high political sense of responsibility and conscientiously sum up and propagate the model deeds and advanced ideology and experiences of distinguished personages. Workers, staff and comrades on all fronts should respect, cherish, support and learn from the advanced ideology and model deeds of distinguished personages to open a vivid prospect of everybody learning from, catching up with and rushing to be advanced.

Comrade Bai Rubing pointed out: Some advanced collectives and personages incur satire, ironic remarks and censure from others. This is an unhealthy trend and evil practice and a reflection of backward consciousness. Party and government leaders at all levels and various mass organizations should criticize justly and forcefully such an unhealthy trend and evil practice. The people who are backward ideologically should be educated to enhance their awareness and change their attitude. Those who frame and attack the advanced personages should be investigated and dealt with. As for those who are involved in serious cases, their legal responsibility should be investigated.

Comrade Bai Rubing said: Building the four modernizations is a great common cause of thousands upon thousands of people. Only by mobilizing and uniting with all the forces that can be united can we fulfill this cause. Therefore, I hope all model and advanced personages in the province will actively and voluntarily promote unity with others and score new achievements and win still greater honor in building material and spiritual civilizations.

HUBEI ON UNAUTHORIZED USE OF CULTIVATED LAND

HK290404 Wuhan Hubei Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 28 Apr 82

[Station commentary: "Resolutely Check Unauthorized Seizure and Use of Cultivated Land"]

[Summary] "In recent years the construction of houses in the rural areas has been developing speedily in our province. However, following the large-scale construction of houses, some new problems have emerged.

"In some localities people take up good cultivated land by moving to places they have selected at will; a few market towns and enterprises and institutions owned by communes and production brigades have enclosed or seized land at will; in some localities there are great loopholes in the acquisition of land, resulting in serious waste of cultivated land; and in some localities people even engage in illegal transactions, transfer and lease of land.

"The principal cause of these problems lies in the fact that the leadership groups of a few units do not attach sufficient importance to this question. Some cadres even take the lead in seizing cultivated land and building houses without authorization or seek personal gain by taking advantage of their position and power. All this has made unauthorized seizure and use of cultivated land more serious."

In checking unauthorized seizure and use of cultivated land, it is first of all necessary to do a good job of ideological and political work among the rural cadres at the grass-roots level and the commune members, it is also necessary to enforce law and discipline. In various localities an inspection should be made of the unauthorized seizure and use of cultivated land. With respect to those who have created a very bad impression by their poor conduct, it is necessary to deal with them seriously in accordance with the relevant regulations of the State Council and the province.

MAO ZHIYONG ATTENDS HUNAN PARTY MEETING

HK260253 Changsha Hunan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 25 Apr 82

[Text] A Hunan party representative meeting concluded on 24 April after 7 days in session. After repeated deliberations and consultation from bottom to top and top to bottom, the 600 representatives elected 50 delegates and 5 alternate delegates to attend the 12th national party congress. The election was by secret ballot, with the number of candidates exceeding that of delegates elected.

Provincial CCP committee First Secretary Mao Zhiyong spoke on 18 April on the questions of convening the party representative meeting and electing the province's delegates to the 12th national party congress.

Provincial CCP committee Second Secretary Wan Da made an important speech in the afternoon of 24 April on upholding the party's communist purity and opposing corruption and degeneration. He pointed out in his speech: Hitting at the serious criminal activities in the economic field is a major expression of the class struggle in socialist society in the economic field in new historical conditions. Judging by the situation in recent years, there has indeed been a notable increase in serious criminal activities in the economic field. Due to the corruption and degeneration of a few party members and cadres, the party's prestige among the masses has been gravely damaged and its combat effectiveness has suffered heavy loss. If we fail to wage resolute and effective struggle against this corruption and allow it to develop, it is certain that still more party members and cadres will come to grief and that the destiny and future of our party and state will be threatened. Hence, our struggle to hit at criminal activties in the economic field and oppose corruption and degeneracy is precisely aimed at averting this danger and upholding our party's communist purity.

Comrade Wan Da said: In the new historical conditions, in order to enhance our ability to resist corruption and avoid degeneracy and uphold the party's communist purity, we must make great efforts to establish the revolutionary outlook on life. At present, the party members and cadres must restudy Chairman Mao's "In Memory of Norman Bethune," "Serve the People," and "The Foolish Old Man Who Removed the Mountains," strive to be so devoted to public service as to forget one's own interests.

Comrade Wan Da said in conclusion: To maintain the party's nature as the vanguard force of the working class and its communist purity, we must ceaselessly step up education for the party members and cadres, and enforce strict control and supervision and party discipline. We believe that we will certainly achieve complete victory in this struggle under the current leadership of the CCP Central Committee.

FENG JIXIN ADDRESSES GANSU YOUTH DAY MEETING

SK050956 Lanzhou Gansu Provincial Service in Mandarin 1125 GMT 4 May 82

[Text] According to our sources, on the afternoon of 3 May the CYL committee under the provincial-level organs sponsored a report meeting at the auditorium of the Gansu provincial people's government to mark the 63d anniversary of the May 4th movement. Feng Jixin, first secretary of the provincial CCP committee, delivered a report at the meeting in which he urged the broad masses of youths throughout the province to become a new generation with ideals, morality and sense of discipline and to contribute greatly toward building material and spiritual civilizations.

In his report, Feng Jixin first extended his festive greetings to the broad masses of youths. Then he stated: To commemorate the 63d anniversary of the May 4th movement today means that we should follow and carry forward the revolutionary spirit raised in the May 4th movement, persistently follow the party's leadership, ardently cherish socialism and uphold the socialist road.

Feng Jixin stated: Our country has stepped into a new historical period which imposes heavy tasks upon the broad masses of youths. Therefore, each ambitious youth should conscientiously assume these tasks and voluntarily fulfill the central work set forth by the party. At present, the broad masses of youths should do a good job in fulfilling the following three tasks:

1. All-out efforts should be made to engage in economic construction. Gansu Province is vast in territory, endowed with abundant material resources and has great potential. Thus, youths should strive to emancipate their mind, break with old conventions and aim high and have lofty ambitions to improve the backward situation of Gansu as soon as possible.

2. Efforts should be made to actively join in the struggle against serious economic crimes and sincerely devote every effort to preserving the purity of communism and opposing any corrosive and deteriorating ideological education.

3. Efforts should be made to take the lead and set an example in creating spiritual civilization.

Feng Jixin stressed: To strengthen education in the spirit of organization and discipline among youths is an important weapon to resist the corrosive influence of any nonproletarian thinking and an important guarantee of the program to achieve the four modernizations. Efforts should be made to encourage youths to implement earnestly the party's principles and policies and to set themselves examples in abiding by the law and legal system set forth by the state and the party as well as labor discipline and work orders. Special attention should be paid to doing a good job in ideological remolding among backward and misled youths so as to divert all young men's youth and wisdom to the program of achieving the four modernizations.

Attending the report meeting were young staff, workers and CYL members from the provincial-level organs.

QINGHAI'S LIANG BUTING ADDRESSES PARTY MEETING

SK010252 Xining Qinghai Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 30 Apr 82

[Text] According to our reporters, the Qinghai provincial party representatives' meeting which opened on 26 April successfully concluded this afternoon. Attending the meeting were 198 party representatives and 3 nonvoting representatives. The meeting elected 15 delegates and 2 alternate delegates to attend the 12th national party congress. Their nationalities include Han Zhang, Tu Hui, Monggol and Sala. The whole process of deliberations and elections was permeated with democracy and carried out in strict accordance with democratic procedure. It embodied from beginning to end the party's principle of democratic centralism.

With a high degree of political responsibility and a serious and earnest attitude, the representatives conducted repeated deliberations and discussions. After candidates were determined, a secret ballot was held to elect the delegates whose number is less than that of the candidates and who represent all circles and areas. The meeting also conscientiously heard and discussed Comrade Zhao Haifeng's speech on our province's current major tasks and Comrade Ma Wanli's speech on dealing blows at serious economic crimes.

The standing committee of the provincial CCP committee sponsored this representatives' meeting. Comrades Liang Buting, Zhang Guosheng, Zha-xi-wang-xu and Zhao Haifeng presided over the meeting in turn. Comrade Liang Buting made an important speech at the end of the meeting.

After reviewing the basic situation at the meeting, Comrade Liang Buting said: The Standing Committee of the 5th National People's Congress recently held its 23d plenary session at which the draft on the revision of the PRC Constitution was discussed, approved and promulgated. The people are being mobilized to discuss the draft. In the second half of this year, the 12th national party congress and the 5th Session of the 5th National People's Congress will be held as scheduled to discuss and approve the sixth 5-year plan and the new constitution, analyze new circumstances and experiences in the four modernizations, study and solve new problems in the four modernizations and adopt new policy decisions. We believe that after these important meetings and major arrangements, our state and party life and the building of material and spiritual civilizations as a whole will undoubtedly enter a new phase of sound development, and the bright future of the four modernizations will doubtlessly be unfolded before our eyes even more clearly to inspire us to march forward.

Comrade Liang Buting said: Since the gradual shift of the emphasis of the party's work to the four modernizations, our economic construction is overcoming numerous difficulties and advancing steadily under the guidance of the eight-character principle of readjusting, restructuring, consolidating and upgrading. Central leading comrades recently reviewed and summed up experiences of the past few years and noted that the party must strive to do a good job in four major tasks now and for a considerably long time to come to guarantee smooth progress of the four modernizations.

The four major tasks are: 1) reform administrative leading organs and gradually conduct comprehensive reforms in political, economic and leading systems; 2) protractedly and frequently carry out the struggle to deal blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field and the struggle to oppose the corruption of capitalism; 3) grasp the building of spiritual civilization as a major task in the historical period from now on and adhere to it as well as the building of material civilization; and 4) constantly strengthen the party in organization and ideology to maintain and enhance the party's role as a strong leading core in the political, economic and cultural life of our country.

The four major tasks are four basic guarantees set forth after the four basic principles to enable to four modernizations to progress smoothly. They are a high-degree generalization and summing-up of the rich experiences gained in political, economic and cultural fields in the past few years. They are of great immediate significance and a long-term leading role in the party's work now and in the future. They have substantially enhanced the consciousness and broadened the political thinking and view of our leading cadres at all levels. Everyone of our comrades, especially responsible comrades at medium and high levels, must use the important guiding thought to arm himself, learn how to correctly understand and handle relations between politics and economy, between superstructure and economic foundation, and between the building of material civilization and spiritual civilization. Everyone of us must clearly understand the internal relations of the work, continuously sum up experiences, explore regular patterns, take the situation as a whole into consideration and enhance his willpower and be a firm, sober-minded and ambitious Marxist.

Comrade Liang Buting said: The building of spiritual civilization covers a wide range. To put it briefly, it has three meanings: ideals, morality and discipline. It is to enable everyone, male or female, old or young, party member of nonparty member, to become a noble person who has ideals and morality and abides by discipline. During the protracted revolutionary struggle, our party has established a set of fine traditions and work styles, including lofty ideals, firm faith, strict discipline and the spirit of defying difficulties, self-reliance and arduous struggle. All these are our precious heritage which we relied on to achieve victory in the revolutionary struggle and which we will rely on to achieve success in the four modernizations in the future. We must never forget it.

In the past few years, we emphasized the building of material civilization which was absolutely necessary. However, quite a few comrades have somewhat ignored the building of spiritual civilization or failed to effectively carry it out. This is an issue which we must concentrate our efforts to solve.

Comrade Liang Buting emphatically dwelt on the issue of party building. He said: The party itself is the superstructure of our society. The proletarian political party occupies a positon which is at the core of the superstructure of socialist society. During the socialist period, the party building, like other spheres in the superstructure, is having problems in continuously keeping abreast of the economic foundation and meeting the needs of the development of the four modernizations. The most important of all four basic principles set forth by the CCP Central Committee is the party's leadership and the socialist orientation. A major criterion for judging whether the party's leadership is correct is to see whether or not the socialist orientation is adhered to. Under the current circumstances of our country, to adhere to the socialist orientation of the four modernizations without the party's leadership is absolutely impossible. The party's building was an important weapon for us to achieve a victory in the revolutionary struggle before the country's liberation. During the new historical period in which the four modernizations are being carried out, it still is our important weapon. Especially since the 10-year sabotage by Lin Biao and the gang of four has caused serious internal damage to the party, restoring the party's fine traditions and strengthening the party's consolidation and building become even more prominent and urgent. Since the smashing of the gang of four, the CCP Central Committee has attached great importance to the issue of the party's rectification, exposing, criticizing and investigating persons and incidents in the party implicated with the gang of four's plot to usurp the party and power is an important step to purify the party's organization. The struggle to deal blows at serious economic crimes focuses on persons and incidents inside the party and is also a step to strengthen the party's organization.

With regard to the ideological consolidation, great achievements have been scored in eliminating ideological turmoil, restoring ideological order and restoring the original value of Marxism- Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought by conducting among all party members the discussion on the criterion for judging the truth and education on the ideological line of dialectical materialism, by mobilizing all party members after the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee to discuss the decision on various questions left over from history since the country's founding and by integrating the readjustment and implementation of the decision with the education on eliminating the influence of leftist errors and clarifying right and wrong.

However, we must realize that impurity in the party's organization, ideology and work style and the phenomenon that some party members and cadres fail to agree with the CCP Central Committee in politics still pose a serious problem which we should by no means ignore. It requires our long-term, arduous efforts to restore our party members and cadres' ideology, morality, party spirit and political quality and our party's fighting capacity to the best level in history to meet the new demands of the four socialist modernizations.

The provincial CCP committee has made some concrete arrangements and measures in the outline for this year's work. I hope that comrades will conscientiously enact them and strive to achieve an obvious turn for the better in our party style and building within this year.

In conclusion, Comrade Liang Buting said: This year, our province's economic construction task is very arduous. We should not only strive for a solid, not inflated, growth in readjustment, but also raise the economic results to a certain degree. To fulfill this arduous task, all party members should unite together to strive for it. Since the beginning of this year, our province's various undertakings have developed very well. Despite a serious snow disaster, remarkable achievements have been scored in the struggle of combating disasters and protecting animals. Damage caused by snow has substantially decreased compared with previous years in which similar disasters took place. The quality of crop sowing is higher than that of last year. The antiflood and antiwaterlogging work in the intermediate and late stage of field management has been carried out earlier and better than ever. In the first quarter, the industrial production increased by 14.5 percent compared to the corresponding 1981 period, registering an all-time high. The revenue plan was also overfulfilled ahead of schedule. However, all fronts including agriculture, animal husbandry, industry, communications, capital construction and finance and trade still have some problems and difficulties. We should by no means take them lightly or slacken our efforts.

The CCP Central Committee has now set forth an ever clearer orientation for the four modernizations and the party's work. We are convinced that as long as the people both at higher and lower levels in our province hold identical views, act in unison, adhere to the four basic principles and persist in the four basic guarantees, we will doubtlessly score one victory after another in the four modernizations under the correct leadership of the CCP Central Committee.

SICHUAN TAX WORK CONFERENCE -- The Sichuan provincial conference on tax work was held in Chengdu at the end of April. Vice Governor He Haoju attended and spoke. The conference lay stress on studying the issue of strengthening tax management. The conference pointed out that last year, the province discovered that the payment of some 50 million yuan of taxes had been evaded. The majority of enterprises which evaded the payment of taxes were not acquainted with the tax law and therefore, paid taxes wrongly or failed to pay them. However, many enterprises intentionally evaded the payment of taxes. It is therefore necessary to further strengthen tax management. WEN WEI PO DISCUSSES BUSH'S TRIP TO BEIJING

[Article by Kuan Chien-tzu [4619 6015 1311]: "A Send-Off for Mr Bush to Beijing"]

[Text] Mr George Bush of the United States is to go to Beijing on 7 May. Mr Bush was former chief of the U.S. Liaison Office in Beijing before the establishment of the Sino-U.S. diplomatic relations. To be fair, Mr Bush has made his contribution to establishing Sino-U.S. diplomatic relations.

This time, he will go to Beijing in the capacity of vice president. Besides, he will be on an official visit. He will look much more impressive than before.

What is the purpose of Bush's present visit to Beijing? This has not been officially announced. His intended visit was only disclosed after he left Washington on his trip to countries in Asia and to Australia. It was reported then that he wished to go to Beijing after his visits to Asia and Australia, but Beijing did not respond at once. "Can you come at any time you please?" Beijing consented after some consideration. Therefore, Bush will be going. What is the purpose of his visit? Journalists are very sensitive and they are certain that it is to settle the question of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan.

Bush admitted in New Zealand that this was "a serious question." However, asked whether the United States would set a time limit for arms sales to Taiwan, Bush did not reply.

This is quite natural. How can Bush make public his mission before arriving in Beijing? However, one thing is quite certain. He has admitted the importance of the Sino-U.S. relations. He has admitted that this question involves U.S. national interests. Therefore, he holds that the question of arms sales to Taiwan must be frankly negotiated.

What he said is quite pleasing to the ear. However, he said that the issue of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan was an "internal matter." What does this mean?

Can the issue of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan, which is a province of the PRC whose capital is Beijing, be regarded as a U.S. "internal matter?" Does this mean that Taiwan is an internal part of the United States? Have you made a mistake, Vice President Bush?

If the U.S. worthies do not change this way of thinking, they will never be able to get along with us on an equal footing. They are interfering in the internal affairs of another country, yet they regard their interference as their own "internal matter." They have thus posed themselves as the world's overlords. They seem to think that the whole world belongs to the United States and therefore the whole world's affairs are U.S. "internal matters."

Dear U.S. worthies, you are wrong and have said something wrong. Why is it necessary to take the trouble of coming to hold talks in Beijing with the Chinese if the issue of arms sales to Taiwan is a U.S. "internal matter?" China has never meddled in others' "internal matters," but it will never allow others to interfere in its "internal matters" or "internal affairs" no matter whether you are the U.S. overlord or the Soviet overlord!

Bush said: We do not want to put the clock back, restart old disputes or open up old wounds, nor do we want to denounce the PRC with language used in the past.

Very well, thank you, Vice President Bush for your kindness. But if the clock is turned back, it is not China that owes the United States a debt but the United States that owes the Chinese a debt. A few major examples will be enough to illustrate this: In the aggression of the eight-power allied forces in 1900, the United States was involved. When Yuan Shikai opposed Dr Sun Yat-sen and attempted to become emperor, he was supported by the United States. After World War II, the KMT planned to "wipe out the communist bandits within 3 months," and the United States supported it with arms supply.

Let us ask: Is it the United States that forgives China or China that forgives the United States?

At present, the United States again supports Taiwan's KMT authorities with arms supplies. Is it different in nature from what you did when the KMT launched the civil war? Have not Taiwan's KMT authorities been clamoring again about "counterattacking the mainland" since the beginning of this year? Is it not obvious that the United States is supporting the KMT to set up a separatist regime by force of arms so that Taiwan may serve forever as a U.S. "unsinkable aircraft carrier" even if there is no "counterattack?"

Referring to arms sales to Taiwan, Mr Bush said in Tokyo that the United States would show consideration for its old friends. This means that the United States is persisting in its old ways, that is, it is persisting overbearingly in interfering in China's internal affairs and in violating China's sovereignty. Why should Mr Bush take the trouble of traveling a long way to Beijing if this is the case?

It is ridiculous for the U.S. political VIP's to say that they will not forget their old friends. In China, your old friends were Empress Dowager and Yuan Shikai. In those days, you opposed Dr Sun Yat-sen; Syngman Rhee and Ngo Dinh Diem were also your friends. In whose hands did they die? In Europe, Britain is your old friend. However, during the Suez Canal war, U.S. Secretary of State John Dulles opposed your old friend Britain resulting in Robert Eden's resignation in an extremely awkward manner. In Latin America, the Argentine military government is a pro-American political power and is your old friend. But at present, you have again stabbed your old friend in the back! We do not want to predict when and what you will do to your old friend in Taiwan. In short, the term "old friend" you use is not worth a fig. It is merely used to cover up your hegemonist acts.

Mr Bush need not say fine words during his visit to Beijing. It is better for him to set a time limit for arms sales to Taiwan, that is, to set a time limit for violating China's sovereignty! This may be regarded as the greatest kindness to us Chinese. We Chinese people will make our own judgment and decide what action we will take in accordance with what the United States does!

HONG KONG PAPER VIEWS PRC FOREIGN TRADE

Trade With South Korea

HK050155 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 5 May 82 p 8

[By Peter Humphrey]

[Text] China's triangular trade through Hong Kong with South Korea has rocketed tenfold in the past two years. Chinese goods officially recorded as being shipped from Hong Kong to Korea last year totalled HK$413.17 million and Korean origin goods likewise shipped to China totalled HK$810.99 million, giving an aggregate trade volume of HK$1.22 billion. These statistics were compiled by the government's census and statistics department.

In 1980 Korean registered goods valued around HK$180 million were exported through Hong Kong to China and Korea's imports of Chinese goods through Hong Kong were around HK$150 million, giving an aggregate of HK$330 million, one quarter of last year's figure. This compares with an aggregate volume in 1979 of only HK$120 million, indicating that in merely two years this trade has grown tenfold.

The total volume of all trade between China and Korea through all third countries is difficult to estimate, though Seoul businessmen and customs authorities last year estimated the total at around HK$6 billion.

Korean customs authorities disclosed last year that China was Seoul's largest supplier of imported anthracite, valued at HK$14.6 million.

Buinessmen who were formerly Chinese citizens employed by the Ministry of Coal in Beijing and who are familiar with China's coal exports told [SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST] BUSINESS NEWS that of almost seven million tonnes of coal exported last year, at leaat 0.7 million tonnes went to Korea. This contrasts sharply with lower tonnage estimated of 175,000 based on the value quoted by Seoul customs of HK$14.6 million for anthracite divided by the world average per ton price of the coal.

Upwards of one million tonnes went to North Korea, sources said, around three million tonnes to Japan and large amounts to Romania. A remaining 1.8 million tonnes was more diffusely exported in smaller consignments, and it is from this portion that coal ends up in Korea, the businessmen said.

A former official of the Coal Ministry in Beijing said the ministry holds up-to-date information of prices offered for coal by Korea. Re-export statistics compiled by the census and statistics department did not list coal as a significant item in China-Hong Kong-Korea trade.

Other large elements of the Sino-Korean trade fall into the agricultural produce category, such as sesame, soyabeans, peanuts and Chinese garlic, explained a businessman who has just shipped 3,000 tonnes of Chinese sesame to Seoul.

The Korean Government advertises its annual needs and bids its buying price, and all business in raw materials and foods is officially conducted by the government rather than by private businesses. Korean officials are also fully aware of the origin of their purchases, he said.

Chinese trade organisations have items in their contracts with Hong Kong businesses exacting that the buyer must provide the seller with a document proving that the goods were not delivered in Korea, South Africa or Israel. Nor will China accept in its ports vessels carrying the flag of these three countries.

However, goods are loaded on to ships in Chinese ports and shipped directly to Korea. Coal, pig-iron and agricultural produce is shipped mainly from Qinhuangdao, Tianjin-Xingang and Lianyungang.

Some Japanese shipping and trading companies specialise in this business, shipping Chinese goods both to Korea and Taiwan.

Trade With Saudi Arabia

HK060310 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 6 May 82 p 8

[By Peter Humphrey]

[Text] Saudi Arabia, a country officially in China's black books because it maintains relations with Taiwan, is importing large quantities of Chinese products through Hong Kong. Saudi Arabian imports of Chinese products through Hong Kong last year were valued at $262 million, mainly comprising textiles worth $43 million and trade goods worth $35 million.

China also imported a modest $40,425 of goods from Saudi Arabia through the Colony, principally internal combustion engine components worth $21,000.

Beijing has denied all relations with Saudi Arabia so long as Riyadh recognises the Chinese Nationalist regime on Taiwan. The discreet visit to China of a Saudi prince last year triggered speculation that Beijing and Riyadh want to extend at least their trade relations, if not to establish diplomatic relations.

With South Africa, Israel

HK060257 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 6 May 82 p 9

[By Peter Humphrey]

[Text] China, which has soaring trade with its anticommunist "enemy," South Korea, also has flourishing trade links with South Africa and Israel via Hong Kong.

This is despite the fact that Beijing has long forsworn all relations with Pretoria because of South Africa's apartheid policy, and with Israel because of its treatment of the Palestinians.

Hong Kong official figures reveal that China's trade with South Africa -- using Hong Kong as the staging post -- topped HK$175 million last year.

Sources in South Africa have told the SCM POST that Chinese goods are openly sold in shops there, and in central Johannesburg there is a shop rather like Hong Kong's China products stores, specialising in goods imported from China.

As previously reported in the SCM POST, China's Hong Kong-routed trade with South Korea has expanded 10-fold in the past two years. Businessmen believe that Sino-South African trade will likewise rocket in coming years.

The re-export products from China represent a significant chunk of the total volume of goods shipped from Hong Kong to South Africa last year -- about 20 per cent. The figures were compiled by the government's census and statistics department.

Reliable sources add that a much larger volume of business is conducted through Overseas Chinese in other third countries. No reliable figures can be compiled for the overall total of trade between China and South Africa though because of the great sensitivity which imbues the issue of China's relations with those countries.

Only in March China's foreign minister, Mr Huang Hua, said in a message to a United Nations meeting to mark the international day for the elimination of racial discrimination that China refuses to enter into "any relations whatsoever" with the South African Government. His message described the South African Government as a racist regime which had committed a crime against mankind. China officially aligns itself with African black liberation movements. "The Chinese Government has always firmly refused to enter into any relations whatsoever with the South African authorities and supported the imposition of sanctions on South Africa by all countries," NCNA quoted Mr Huang as saying.

Yet China's recorded exports through Hong Kong middle-men to South Africa last year, totalled HK$169 million. China's imports from South Africa were a mere HK$6 million, according to official Hong Kong statistics. The main Chinese exports reaching South Africa last year were textiles, valued at about HK$60 million. China's imports of South African goods were mainly pearls and precious stones modestly valued at HK$4.4 million.

Just as China's trade with South Africa and Israel jars with Beijing's official foreign policy, the sale of Chinese products in those two countries points to similar double standards in Pretoria and Tel Aviv. Because of South Africa's long standing anathema to socialist countries and because of China's support for black Africa, Pretoria has taken a strong line against relations with China. It has preferred relations with Taiwan's Kuomintang regime, which fled Communist China in 1949, and the past few years have seen an upsurge in friendship between Taipei and South Africa. There have been frequent exchange visits of senior leaders.

Beijing would find it impossible to establish relations with Pretoria at present, not only because of the Taiwan issue, but especially because by so doing it would lose its relations with virtually all other African countries.

Relations with those countries are for China a mainstay of its Third World foreign policy system. Among the goods openly displayed in Johannesburg shops are clothes, household wares and handicrafts. It is not difficult to distinguish the China-made from the Taiwan-made goods sold in South Africa even though both may bear the tag "made in China." The use of mainland China's simplified characters on items examined confirms that they originated from the People's Republic.

While China, in its present spirit of economic pragmatism, has pursued indirect trade with its enemies, it is hyper-sensitive should anyone suggest this is so. For example vigorous denials from Beijing followed American press reports in November that China had supplied Pretoria with enriched uranium for two 1,000 megawatt power plants. And when it was reported that China had provided fuel for South African tanks in Namibia in exchange for diamonds and gold, Beijing reacted sharply, accusing Moscow, Hanoi and Havana of spreading malicious rumours. In the case of China's exports to Israel through Hong Kong, local figures show that the volume is less significant than its South African counterpart.

Last year the value of exports was HK$32 million, but this was nonetheless eight percent of the total volume of exports shipped from Hong Kong to Israel. The main products exported were crude animal and vegetable products -- valued at almost HK$19 million -- and textiles worth HK$6 million.

China's imports from Israel through Hong Kong were a fraction of this and amounted to only HK$223,075, mainly consisting of textiles and synthetic fibres. With Israel, Beijing has dismissed the possibility of relations because of the Chinese commitment to organisations fighting for the cause of a free Palestine. Indeed, last year when it was alleged that Beijing planned to buy arms from Tel Aviv, an official Chinese magazine declared: "The Chinese Government will have nothing to do with Israel as long as it occupies Arab territories and denies the Palestinian people their national rights."

WEINBERGER SPEAKS TO U.S. SENATE ON NUCLEAR ARMS

[Text] Washington, April 29 (XINHUA) -- U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger said today that the United States is opposed to proposals which would freeze nuclear forces "at the current unequal level" with the Soviet Union. The Soviet Union, he noted, continues to lead the United States in most measures of strategic forces, but the United States still has the advantage in total numbers of deliverable warheads. However, "the Soviets may equal or surpass us in the total number of warheads during the 1980's as they continue the rapid expansion of their strategic nuclear arsenal," he warned.

Weinberger was the first witness at a series of hearings the Senate Foreign Relations Committee began this morning on public and congressional calls for a U.S.-Soviet nuclear freeze. Secretary of State Alexander Haig, Director of Arms Control and Disarmament Agency Eugene Rostow, former defense secretaries James Schlesinger and Harold Brown, Senators Edward Kennedy and Henry Jackson will also testify during the hearings, altogether six which will take three weeks to complete. Weinberger said: "Concern has been expressed that the Reagan administration has not moved fast enough on arms reduction negotiations, that we have been wasting time.... Actually we have gained time." The U.S. Government has done so by initiating its "long term program to improve the stability and security of our nuclear deterrent force, thus providing the only basis for negotiations that can lead to real reductions." "In the near future, the president will make far-reaching proposals for intercontinental arms and invite the Soviet Union to commence strategic arms reduction talks," he added.

The extensive hearings are taking place amidst a growing mass movement for a halt to the superpower nuclear armament race. Charles Percy, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said, "All across America a grassroots movement is organizing in support of prompt and dramatic action on arms control." Claiborne Pell, a senior Democrat of the committee, had this to say: "The people want the two superpowers to negotiate seriously and energetically to reduce the risk that nuclear arms will ever be used anywhere, for any purpose."

Yet there are some more factors that have prompted the current public debate on this issue. While unemployment totals 10 million and the budget deficit reaches 100 billion dollars, the administration, under the "rearming the United States" policy, put the next fiscal year's military budget at 215.9 billion dollars. [Word indistinct] percent more than for the current year. A total of 1,600 billion dollars will be spent in the next five years to strengthen the U.S. Armed Forces across the board. In addition, West European allies, being exposed to stronger public sentiments against escalating U.S.-Soviet nuclear arms race, have been reluctant to show their support for U.S. nuclear armament policy. Instead they insist that the U.S. should never discard disarmament as a policy.

Several resolutions on nuclear disarmament have already been proposed in the Senate. The Foreign Relations Committee will "examine carefully the political, strategic and technical practicality of each resolution," and report out a single resolution that can command overwhelming support in the Senate and be supported by the American people, Percy declared.

U.S. SENATE COMMITTEE REJECTS REAGAN'S BUDGET

[Text] Beijing, May 6 (XINHUA) -- The U.S. Senate Budget Committee Wednesday unanimously rejected President Ronald Reagan's 1983 budget, which contains an exorbitant deficit, according to reports from Washington.

The rejection came in the wake of failed secret negotitions between the White House and Congress on cutting the proposed budget deficit and of Reagan's televised address seeking support for his budget proposals.

Since the Republican-dominated Senate committee rejected Reagan's budget, this could be an indication that the President's economic policies will encounter further opposition.

Reagan's budget, submitted on Feb 8, contains a projected deficit of 91.5 billion U.S. dollars. But congressional sources predict the deficit could reach as high as 182 billion U.S. dollars without tax increases and spending cuts.

Economists worry that such a huge budget deficit would make it impossible for the high interest rates to drop and would prolong the present recession.

RENMIN RIBAO VIEWS SOVIET ECONOMIC SITUATION

HK061006 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 4 May 82 p 7

[Report: "Soviet Economic Situation in the First Quarter Was Still Not Good"]

[Text] The Soviet Central Statistics Bureau recently published a communique on the statistics for the first quarter of this year. While stressing that "the national economy grew" in this quarter, it admitted that there were "serious defects" in the fulfillment of the production plan.

According to the plan, industrial output value for this year should grow by 4.7 percent. However, in the first quarter of this year, it grew by only 2.1 percent as compared with that in the same period of last year. No matter whether it is compared with the whole of last year or with the same period of last year, this year's first quarter saw a record low in industrial growth in the Soviet Union during peacetime.

As stipulated by the plan, industrial labor productivity should grow by 4.1 percent this year. But it grew by only 1.5 percent in the first quarter of this year. Compared with previous years and the same periods, industrial productivity in the first quarter of this year also dropped to a record peacetime low. According to the 1981-85 5-year plan, the growth in industrial output value is to be realized chiefly by increasing labor productivity. For this reason, the Soviet authorities are "worried" about the noticeable decrease in labor productivity.

The manufacturing of industrial product also was not in a good situation. According to the Soviet official communique, the output of 27 of the 65 varieties of "the most important products" in the first quarter of this year decreased as compared with that in the same period of last year. These products included steel, iron ore, chemical fertilizer, cement, petroleum equipment, cars, timber, fabrics and dairy products.

Three consecutive years of bad harvests have adversely affected this year's agricultural production. Up to the present, the Soviet Government has not yet announced the figures of last year's grain output. It is estimated that actual grain output was 60-70 million tons short of the target, so that more than 40 million tons of grain must be imported this year. As far as the conditions in the first quarter of this year are concerned, the Soviet Union only announced that the outputs of meat and milk dropped by 1 percent and 4 percent respectively as compared with that in the same period last year. This invariably resulted in even shorter supplies. Recently, in Moscow, the purchase of such foodstuffs as meat, sausages, butter and cheese was limited to a certain amount; these foodstuffs were available only to those who held food coupons in many other cities and were just unavailable in the shops in some localities. Moreover, the supply of many kinds of industrial consumer goods also was very abnormal. For example, it was not easy to buy such goods as cotton cloth, aluminum pots, soap, washing powder, toothpaste and brushes, toilet paper and film because they often were out of stock.

PRINCE SIHANOUK ARRIVES IN BEIJING 6 MAY

Meets Huang Hua

OW061324 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1200 GMT 6 May 82

[Text] Huang Hua, state councillor and concurrently minister of foreign affairs, met and feted Prince Sihanouk and his wife in the Great Hall of the People tonight. They had a friendly and cordial talk.

Prince Sihanouk and his wife arrived in Beijing from Pyongyang on the afternoon of 6 May. Han Nianlong, adviser to the Foreign Ministry, and others greeted them at the airport.

Issues Statement

OW061858 Beijing XINHUA in English 1839 GMT 6 May 82

[Text] Beijing, May 6 (XINHUA) -- Samdech Norodom Sihanouk reiterated in a statement here today that he and the Kampuchean national liberation movement he leads would make no demands as regards the formation of a tripartite coalition government of Kampuchean patriotic forces, that he and his movement would accept what the other two parties propose and approve any agreement or compromise reached between them.

As regards the "tripartite coalition," the statement says, certain newspapers, news agencies and radios of the Western world continue to assert that "the three factions have not reached an understanding on the division of power." This is completely inaccurate, it says. "My front (or party) and myself, contrary to the F.N.L.P.K. [Kampuchean People's National Liberation Front] of Mr Son Sann, do not claim any power, any post, any portfolio, and do not pose any condition for our participation in an eventual 'tripartite coalition' government. It is thus most unjust to continue to assert that the 'three' factions are wrangling over power and preventing the formation of the 'coalition' within a short period of time," the statement says.

It says, "Our unchanged and invariable position in this regard is as follows: a) We do not make any demands for ourselves in the government to be formed; we shall accept what the other two factions will propose to us; b) we shall always and completely respect the three-point agreement concluded in February 1982 in Beijing by Mr Khieu Samphan, head of the delegation of the Democratic Kampuchean Government, and Norodom Sihanouk; c) we shall approve unreservedly any agreement or compromise between the other two factions to be realized for the formation of the 'tripartite coalition'."

The statement says, "If a new 'summit conference' of Cambodian leaders of the anti-Viet resistance is to take place in a country other than the People's Republic of China or the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, I shall not be able to take part in person but I shall be represented in this new conference by former Prime Minister In Tam. I emphasize once again that my presence in such a new conference is absolutely useless, for my front (or party) demands nothing and approves in advance what is to be reached as an agreement or compromise between Mr Khieu Samphan and Mr Son Sann."

Samdech Norodom Sihanouk arrived here from Pyongyang today. He said in his statement that he will return to Pyongyang after a few weeks, and will come to China again at the end of August.

ZHAO ZIYANG BIDS FAREWELL TO LIBERIA'S DOE

OW061610 Beijing XINHUA in English 1550 GMT 6 May 82

[Text] Beijing, May 6 (XINHUA) -- Samuel Kanyon Doe, head of state, commander in chief of the armed forces and chairman of the People's Redemption Council of the Republic of Liberia, left here by special plane this afternoon for a visit to Shanghai, in the company of Chinese Vice-Minister of Foreign Affairs Gong Dafei.

Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang went to the state guesthouse to bid Chairman Doe farewell before his departure. Zhao asked Doe to convey the cordial regards and best wishes of the Chinese people to the Liberian people. "Your current visit to China is of great significance for strengthening friendship between our two countries and will help increase mutual understanding between the two peoples," he said. Zhao said he hoped to see further development of friendly relations between China and Liberia.

Doe expressed his thanks to the premier for the warm reception accorded him. He said he hoped that Premier Zhao could have an opportunity to visit Liberia so that the two sides would again exchange views on issues of common concern.

Premier Zhao said: "I would be very glad to visit your country, and welcome you to visit China again."

Upon their arrival in Shanghai, the Liberian guests were welcomed at the airport by Mayor of Shanghai Wang Daohan and others. In the evening, the Shanghai Municipal People's Government hosted a banquet in honor of the guests. Mayor Wang and Chairman Doe proposed toasts to the continuing development of the friendship between the two countries and two peoples.

COMMENTARY VIEWS UK, U.S. FALKLANDS STAND

["Commentary: Immediate Halt to Anglo-Argentine Conflict" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, May 7 (XINHUA correspondent Mei Zhenmin) -- The military action in the South Atlantic is dangerously escalating despite repeated professions of Britain that she is still seeking a peaceful settlement of the conflict with Argentina over the Malvinas Islands, the focus of world attention.

Britain has mounted repeated air and naval attacks on Port Argentino (Stanley) and other Argentine positions on the Malvinas Islands following British landing on South Georgia Island on April 25. The British Navy sank an Argentine cruiser with a crew of 1,000 officers and men in waters beyond the 200-mile exclusion zone around the Malvinas Islands. [Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese at 1610 GMT on 6 May in its version of this commentary omits the preceding portion of this paragraph] Now the British naval task force is only tens of nautical miles off the Malvinas, poised for a forced landing on the islands.

The British Government declared that the action it has taken is aimed at putting "military pressure" on Argentina to force it to withdraw its troops from the islands. In other words, Britain is trying on the strength of her gigantic fleet to impose her will on a weaker country which has stood up in defence of its sovereignty. A Thai newspaper accused Britain of action "in revival of the gunboat policy she practised in the colonial era."

However, the colonial era of the 17th and 18th century is past and gone long ago, and the gunboat policy no longer works. The British naval assault has inflicted heavy losses on Argentina but her own losses are also quite heavy, with the sinking of one of her new-type destroyers and the downing of jetplanes.

What is noteworthy is that the British action has enraged public opinion in Third World countries and in the whole world. Many Latin American and other developing countries condemned Britain and voiced solidarity with Argentina. Ecuadoran Foreign Minister Luis Balensia called the British bombing of the Malvinas Islands a "new, colonial aggression." Some Latin American countries expressed their willingness to give Argentina material and military support. Even some West European countries which supported Britain were shocked and expressed regret for the British sinking of an Argentine cruiser. They called for restraint on the part of Britain. West Germany made an urgent call for an immediate ceasefire between Britain and Argentina and for every possible effort to seek a peaceful solution.

Irish Defence Minister Patrick Power said in Dublin, "We felt that Argentina was the first aggressor and originally backed Britain. But obviously the British themselves are very much the aggressors now and we are taking a neutral stance."

REUTER reported on May 4: "While governments were reluctant to criticise a key ally, there appeared to be growing unease over Britain's apparent intention to keep up military pressure in the South Atlantic." It also reported that "West European support for Britain showed signs of wavering today."

Originally the United States maintained some kind of a "neutral" stance when it mediated between Britain and Argentina. But shortly before Britain bombed the Malvinas the U.S. Government made a sudden about-face to side with Britain and imposed sanctions on Argentina. The U.S. move had encouraged Britain in her adventurous act, thus helping to kindle the conflagration of war in the South Atlantic. [The Beijing XINHUA Chinese version omits the preceding three paragraphs]

This United States' stand has hurt the national feeling of the Latin American people and deepened its contradiction with the Latin American states. [The Beijing XINHUA Chinese version omits the remaining portion of this paragraph] In a note of protest to the United States on May 2, Argentina pointed out that the Argentines can neither understand nor forget that in one of the most critical hours of their history, the United States "has preferred to side with a power outside this hemisphere and cooperate with its aggressive designs." Some leaders of Latin American countries pointed out that this act of the United States in contrary to the historical trend has shelved the U.S. claim in the Monroe Doctrine that "America belongs to the Americans," the Pan-American doctrine, and the Pan-American cooperative pact. Some even said that gone is the day of Latin America being the U.S. "backyard."

It is obvious that the British adventure and U.S. partiality have deepened the gap and contradictions between Latin America as one side and Britain, the United States and Western Europe as the other side. The raging flames of war in the South Atlantic are detrimental to North-South cooperation. But the Soviet Union is seeking advantage from the crisis over the Malvinas Islands. Third World countries and all other peace-loving countries are following with anxiety the developments in the South Atlantic. Now the United Nations is trying to start fresh mediation and Argentina has given a positive response. People are waiting anxiously to see whether Britain would stop her hostile action against Argentina in response to U.N. mediation? And, is there any hope of settling the dispute over the Malvinas Islands by peaceful means?

WANG BINGQIAN'S 1982 STATE BUDGET REPORT

OW050901 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0059 GMT 5 May 82

[Text] Beijing, 5 May (XINHUA) -- Report on the draft state budget for 1982 presented at the 23d Session of the Standing Committee of the Fifth NPC on 28 April 1982 by Finance Minister Wang Bingqian.

Members: The Fourth Session of the Fifth NPC discussed the implementation of the 1981 budgetary estimates and the revenues and expenditures projected in the 1982 state budget and authorized the Standing Committee of the NPC to examine and approve them after formally completing the 1981 final state accounts and the 1982 state budget. The 1981 final state accounts are presently being compiled stage by stage. According to the available preliminary figures, total revenues amount to 106.43 billion yuan and total expenditures to 108.97 billion yuan. Expenditures exceed revenues by 2.54 billion yuan. Both revenues and expenditures are slightly higher than estimated, but the deficit is slightly below estimate. Generally speaking, the situation has been good. When the year's final state accounts are formally compiled, they will be presented for examination and approval. Now, entrusted by the State Council, I will make a report on the draft state budget for 1982 for examination by the session.

I. Draft State Budget for 1982

Financial and economic conditions throughout the country in 1982 will continue to turn for the better. Since the beginning of this year, new gains have been made in production, construction and other economic undertakings by the various localities and departments as a result of their continued efforts to implement the policy of achieving further economic readjustment and greater political stability. Activities for building a socialist spiritual civilization have gradually been unfolded in society. At the same time, efforts to deal blows against serious criminal activities in the economic field are being made. Government restructuring has begun to be carried out in a systematic way. All this indicates that 1982 will be another year in which the political and economic situation throughout the country will make good progress. To meet the need of development in the current situation, necessary adjustments have been made in the state's 1982 budgetary revenues and expenditures on the basis of the original targets. The basic principles for budget arrangements are: to persistently rely on planned economy as the main factor and market regulation as a supplementary one and to make efforts to increase state revenue by improving production and enhancing economic results; to continue to restrict the scope of capital construction and various budgetary expenditures, properly increase allocations for energy production and communications and expenditures for culture, education and national defense; to keep steadily to the current policy regarding the distribution of income so that the living standards of the urban and rural population will continue to improve on the basis of increased production; and to continue to maintain a basic balance between revenues and expenditures and a fundamental credit balance and to ensure the stability of market prices in general so that the national economy will develop in a stable manner.

In accordance with the aforementioned objectives, the draft state budget for 1982 now being compiled provides for total revenues of 110.45 billion yuan and total expenditures of 113.45 billion yuan, with expenditures exceeding revenues by 3 billion yuan. Compared with the previously projected state budgetary revenues and expenditures for 1982 examined and approved by the Fourth Session of the Fifth NPC, there is an increase of 500 million yuan in both revenues and expenditures with expenditures still exceeding revenues by 3 billion yuan. Efforts should be made to slightly trim this deficit by increasing production and practicing economy in the process of implementing the budget.

Total revenues for 1982 are 4.02 billion yuan more than in 1981. The breakdown of total budgetary revenues is as follows: receipts from enterprises amount to 34.41 billion yuan; taxes, 64.6 billion yuan; receipts from other sources, 240 million yuan; depreciation funds turned in by enterprises to central financial departments, 2.2 billion yuan; receipts from the issuance of treasury bonds, 4 billion yuan; and receipts in the form of foreign loans, 5 billion yuan.

The 1982 total state budgetary revenues are worked out mainly on the basis of total industrial and agricultural output value as outlined in the economic and social development plan and on the growth in retail trade of social commodities. Consideration has been given to increasing revenues by cutting enterprises' expenses through reducing operational losses, improving finance work, strengthening tax collection, monopolizing tobacco sales and raising tobacco and wine prices. At the same time, attention has also been paid to losses in revenue due to the reduction of prices of commodities such as polyester and cotton fabrics, TV sets, radios, wristwatches and stretch nylon, further price subsidies for major agricultural and sideline products and for basic necessities needed by the people, continued job arrangements for jobless youths in cities and increased expenses for maintaining simple reproduction [jian dan zai sheng chan 4675 0830 0375 3932 3934] of metallurgical, chemical industrial and forestry enterprises. In general, the revenue budget is a positive and reliable one.

Total state expenditures for 1982 are 4.48 billion yuan more than in 1981. The breakdown of total budgetary expenditures is essentially as follows:

1. Appropriations for capital construction total 29.73 billion yuan. Direct state investments in capital construction total 18.63 billion yuan, an increase of 1 billion yuan over 1981. The state investments are used mainly for basic construction related to energy and transportation. Investments from local financial reserves and from local reserves for capital construction total 6.1 billion yuan. They show some decrease compared with the previous year.

2. Funds allocated for tapping the potentials of enterprises through technical transformation, plus those for subsidizing the development of new products, come to 5.42 billion yuan, about the same as last year. In addition, depreciation funds and profits to be retained by state enterprises amount to over 20 billion yuan. Because the sums involved are so large, unified arrangements for rational utilization so as to raise economic returns are important.

3. Additional allocations of circulating funds for enterprises total 2.4 billion yuan. These are intended mainly to meet the needs of newly commissioned enterprises and certain special reserves. At present, funds for production and circulation are enormous and overstocking of materials is serious. The state is now taking steps to help enterprises to reduce circulating funds to a rational level.

4. Expenditures for aiding rural people's communes and other operating expenses for agriculture amount to 7.61 billion yuan, showing some increase over last year. In developing agriculture, we rely mainly on correct policies, science and the collective economy, as well as on necessary assistance from the state. Since the current state funds for aiding agriculture are by no means small, they must be rationally managed and used so as to improve economic returns.

5. Allocations for culture, education, health and science total 18 billion yuan, an increase of 780 million yuan over 1981 following growth for several consecutive years. In addition, localities and enterprises also have allocations for these sectors. Despite financial difficulties in recent years, the state has made great efforts to speed the development of culture, education, health and science. The average annual growth rate of state financial revenues was 5.3 percent in the 5 years from 1977 through 1981 while allocations for culture, education, health and science averaged 15 percent. Of course, there are still problems with regard to needs in the above sectors that yet have to be resolved. However, they can be resolved only step by step within the capability of the state's financial and material resources.

6. Expenditures for national defense and preparations against war total 17.87 billion yuan, an increase of 1.07 billion yuan over 1981. In order to speed the modernization and regularization of the armed forces, an increase of expenditures in this respect is necessary.

7. Expenditures for administration and management amount to 7.8 billion yuan, an increase of 560 million yuan over last year. The main reasons for the increase are that as a result of further strengthening public security, procuratorial and judicial work and transferring some army cadres to office work, the funds for wages and administrative and operating expenses need to be increased accordingly in these areas.

8. The general reserve funds account for 2.7 billion yuan, 1 billion yuan of which are for the central authorities and 1.7 billion yuan for local authorities.

9. Payments on the principal and interest of foreign loans amount to 3.55 billion yuan. It is estimated that up to the end of 1982, the total amount borrowed by the state will be more than $5 billion after deducting the matured principal that will be paid off.

The above draft state budget continues to maintain a basic balance between revenues and expenditures. This will help control market prices, remove step by step the potential dangers in the national economy and maintain economic stability. At the same time, proper arrangements are made in the budget for future development of the national economy, thus preparing for construction in the next stage. The budget also takes into account improvement in the people's living standards on the basis of the growth of production. Proper arrangements are also made for the employment of job-seeking young people in cities and towns and for the adjustment of wages for those working in government offices and scientific, cultural, educational and public health departments where there is no bonus system.

It should be realized that the state budget for 1982 is rather tight. A basic balance between revenues and expenditures was achieved last year mainly by greatly cutting down expenses. However, since some necessary spending has to increase this year, there will be a discrepancy between revenues and expenditures. To achieve a balance between revenues and expenditures this year, it is particularly necessary to increase revenues and strictly control expenditures. As things stand now, the task of bringing in all revenues must be fulfilled through arduous effort by all areas and departments. In the course of implementing the budget, we may encounter some spending problems that are hard to predict. To achieve a basic balance between revenues and expenditures this year, we must make vigorous efforts to increase production, practice economy and increase revenues, and strive to reduce deficits by conscientiously cutting down expenses in the course of implementing the budget.

II. Strive To Implement the State Budget for 1982

More than 3 months have passed this year. As far as revenues and expenditures in the first quarter are concerned, the overall situation is good. Total revenues in the first quarter amounted to 23.8 billion yuan, fulfilling 21.7 percent of the annual budget; and expenditures were 20 billion yuan, making up 17.8 percent of the annual budget. Revenues exceeded expenditures by 3.8 billion yuan (revenues in the first quarter of last year exceeded expenditures by nearly 4 billion yuan). It can be seen from this that both revenues and expenditures have progressed rather normally. However, what merits our attention is that a slack mood has occurred in some units and that more requests have been made for additional expenditures by various quarters because a basic balance between revenues and expenditures was achieved last year and the situation in revenues and expenditures was better in the first quarter of this year. The State Council recently issued a circular to all areas and departments, calling on them to pay attention to controlling expenditures and to resolutely prevent a bigger discrepancy between revenues and expenditures so as not to affect the task of balancing the state budget.

To ensure a basic balance between revenues and expenditures this year, we must have a clear understanding of the current excellent situation and favorable conditions, resolutely surmount the various difficulties and successfully carry out the following several tasks in a down-to-earth way:

First, we should mobilize the masses to further carry out activities to increase production and practice economy, with a view to achieving better economic results. Increasing production and practicing strict economy are the basic means for us to increase socialist wealth as well as an effective way to solve financial difficulties and the problem of inadequate funds at present. Considering the trends in the development of production this year, the targets set in the state plan can be fully attained. We should strive for a slightly higher growth rate in production and for somewhat better economic results. Particular attention should be paid to combining the growth rate with economic results. Efforts must be made to achieve a practical, "unexaggerated" growth rate, to prevent poor economic results and "inflated figures" and to prevent anyone from seeking an undeserved reputation while actually doing us harm.

Stressing economic results means maximizing production that caters to the needs of society while consuming as little labor and materials as possible. Enterprises should strive to turn out good-quality, marketable products while reducing the consumption of raw materials. If consumption of raw materials is high and products are shoddy and unmarketable, then the more such products manufactured, the greater the waste. We discarded large quantities of such products as useless when we made an inventory of enterprise assets and established how much capital enterprises had. The lesson drawn from this is profound indeed. From now on, we must avoid doing such things not worth the outlay. This year we must tap our potential in achieving better economic results, achieve a higher growth rate and ensure an increase in both production and revenue so that the increase in financial revenues will be in proportion to that in industrial and agricultural output. This is the first prerequisite for fulfilling or overfulfilling the state budget for 1982.

Second, it is necessary to straighten out enterprises' financial affairs, to step up the work of tax collection and to vigorously bring in all financial revenues. To tap the potentials of existing enterprises, achieve better economic results and increase financial revenues, the State Council has decided to carry out a planned, all-round consolidation of existing enterprises by groups in 3 years. A general inspection has recently been made of the financial affairs of enterprises in various localities. Through the inspection, it was discovered that problems are rather widespread in enterprises, such as confusing financial affairs, inaccurate accounts, wantonly fixing production costs, willfully using funds for purposes other than those originally planned and withholding or misappropriating state revenues. This not only affects enterprises' normal production and operation but also makes it hardly possible to accurately reflect, count and analyze their economic results. In consolidating enterprises, it is therefore necessary to give top priority to straightening out their financial affairs. Leaders of departments in charge of enterprises at various levels and those in basic-level enterprises should all attach importance to and support financial and accounting work and should not regard it as something nonessential or as a hindrance. Through the consolidation, it is necessary to strengthen the basic work in finance and accounting and to practice business accounting in an all-round way in order to bring about a radical change for the better in enterprises' confusing financial affairs.

At the same time, it is also necessary, through straightening out enterprises' financial affairs, to close loopholes in revenue and expenditure so that state revenues illegally misappropriated by some enterprises can be recovered. It is estimated that additional revenue of about 2 billion yuan can be recovered this year when this work is done well. This will greatly help balance the state revenues and expenditures.

To effectively strengthen the work of tax collection and give full play to the role of taxation as leverage in the national economy, the State Council has also decided to further strengthen tax organizations by assigning competent leading cadres to such organizations and staffing them with additional tax cadres this year. Since tax collection is a task of a strong policy character, the tax policies must be unified throughout the country. All areas and departments throughout the country must strictly implement unified state laws and decrees on tax collection and must not overstep their authority to reduce or remit taxes. All taxpayer units and individuals must conscientiously fulfill their obligation to pay taxes. The money an enterprise receives from selling goods must first be used to pay its taxes. When an enterprise fails to pay its delinquent taxes after being repeatedly urged to do so, banks will be notified according to regulations to withhold its deposits for this purpose. In addition, those concerned will be investigated for their responsibility in this regard. All tax organizations must enforce the tax laws impartially and make resolute efforts to change the situation in which management is lax and supervision ineffective.

Third, in accordance with the principle of seeking truth from facts and acting according to our capability, it is necessary to effectively keep expenditures within the financial capability of the state. During the readjustment of the national economy, the growth rate in production and financial revenues cannot be very high while many things need to be done. Hence, there is a sharp contradiction between the needs for funds and the possibilities of getting them. This calls for us to uphold the principle of doing things with the money we have and doing more things with less money and to keep things under control according to the state plan and budget. In view of the situation in which it is rather difficult to balance the budget this year, there should be no more new requests for additional expenditures from now on, except in special circumstances. Investment in capital construction should be kept within the target set in the state plan and should not exceed the target in order not to overextend the capital construction front and to avoid a short supply of materials and a war of attrition. Proper arrangements have been made for other expenditures according to the requirements for the development of undertakings and the possibilities of financial resources. In implementing the budget, it is necessary to carefully calculate and strictly budget, to economize on expenditures and not to exceed the targets set in the budget. Continuous efforts should be made to control various nonproductive expenses and the purchasing power of various social groups in order to reduce the pressure on the supply of commodities in the market.

In economic construction, we must pay attention to giving play to the role of banks. We must, through bank credits and loans and in a planned way, use a portion of deposits of local governments, enterprises and individuals to support the state's economic construction while basically maintaining a credit-loan balance. However, we must take note that the banks' sources of funds for loans are also limited and, while using a portion of their deposits for construction, they must seek an overall balance between financial and material resources. Therefore, bank loans should be granted according to plans and must not be over-granted at will. In addition, attention must be focused on economic results. Loans should not be granted for any projects without economic results. Enterprises' loan repayments should be made according to regulations, using newly accrued profits and not from the originally available profits.

Fourth, continue to adhere to the present policy of financial distribution and maintain its stability and continuity. Since the 3d plenary session of the party's 11th Central Committee, the state has made appropriate adjustments in the financial distribution policy in order to correct the past condition under which accumulation and consumption were seriously imbalanced and the financial power was over concentrated while financial control was too rigid. According to preliminary statistics of the Ministry of Finance, from 1979 to 1981, the state spent a total of over 140 billion yuan on raising the prices for purchasing agricultural and sideline products, cutting the rural areas' taxes, arranging for young people's employment, increasing the workers' wages, implementing the bonus incentive system, giving allowance for higher prices of some agricultural means of production and some daily necessity goods, housing construction for workers in cities and urban construction.

For implementing measures such as funds for enterprises, retainment of a certain percentage of profits, and enterprises' allowed to be responsible for their own profits or losses, the state allowed enterprises to retain a total of over 28 billion yuan for their own use in those 3 years. The living conditions of people in urban and rural areas has somewhat improved now and the enterprises' financial power has expanded. Under these circumstances, we should strive to stabilize the financial distribution ratio within the scope permitted by the state's financial strength. We should be realistic and should act according to our ability and not do anything beyond our power. It is necessary to gradually make necessary adjustment and rectification of what is unreasonable under the prerequisite of stabilizing the policy. This year, the purchase prices for farm and sideline products will not be raised, the quotas of state monopoly purchases and assigned purchases must be fulfilled and must not be lowered at will, and the scope and range of price increases and price negotiation for purchases above the quotas should be strictly in accordance with the state regulations. As for the price allowances for various products currently in effect, excessive allowances for certain products should be properly adjusted. Since some enterprises did not follow the state regulations in issuing bonuses and allowances, there have been incidences of abuses or giving bonuses in disguise. These are being rectified. As to the measures of letting enterprises retain a certain percentage of profits and be responsible for their own profits or losses, these should be carried out strictly according to state regulations. All the cases of retaining more profits than stipulated in regulations must be corrected. In short, whatever is reasonable and permitted under present policies should be firmly protected; whatever is unreasonable and overstepping the regulations should be effectively corrected; and obtaining income by illegal means will be dealt with in a stern manner.

Fifth, it is necessary to enforce state laws and discipline in order to wage resolute struggles against criminal activities in the economic sector. The current struggle is an important expression of the class struggle in the economic sector under the new historical conditions. Only by properly carrying on the struggle can we correctly implement the open-door policy externally and the policy of enlivening the economy internally and ensure that China's modernization program will proceed along the socialist path. Cases of economic crimes that have been cracked in various localities show that they are often linked with violations in financial and economic discipline. The various finance and tax departments must therefore detect and provide clues for investigation of economic crimes through financial supervision under leadership of the local people's governments and with close cooperation among the public security, procuratorial and judicial departments; the struggle must be properly conducted. Of course, there are distinctions between economic criminal activities and violations of economic and financial discipline. The two must not be confused.

In handling economic criminal cases, the "decision on severely punishing criminals who do great damage to the economy" adopted at the 22d Session of the 5th NPC Standing Committee and the "decision on severely striking at criminal activities in the economic sector" recently issued by the CCP Central Committee and the State Council as well as relevant state laws must be adhered to. Such cases must be referred to the judicial departments and be handled according to law and in the light of circumstances of individual cases. Cases that violate financial and economic discipline must be seriously handled according to relevant laws and decrees of the nation. All income acquired by certain units by illegal means must, in principle, be recovered. No units are allowed to reap economic benefits by illegal means. In serious cases, responsibility must be affixed on the responsible persons of concerned units and concerned personnel and be imposed by disciplinary sanctions. To this end, the financial departments must investigate the loopholes and shortcomings of the current financial system and financial management work. They must strengthen financial legislation and perfect economic laws and regulations.

Dear members, China's present political and economic situation is excellent. Although China faces many difficulties, they are difficulties in advancing and can be overcome by our efforts. Last year, the big financial deficit was greatly reduced, and it is quite possible to achieve a basic balance between revenue and expenditure this year. We must invigorate our spirit, seek truth from facts, unite as one, work with one heart and one mind and strive to fulfill and overfulfill the 1982 state budget.

POWER OF NPC STANDING COMMITTEE EXAMINED

[Article by Wang Shuwen [3769 0647 2429], deputy director of the jurisprudence research center of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences: "Expanding the Powers of the NPC Standing Committee Is a Major Measure for Perfecting the Socialist Political System"]

[Text] Beijing, 6 May (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- One of the special features in revising the constitution this time is the expansion of the power of the NPC Standing Committee. It is stipulated in the constitution that the organ endowed with the highest state power and the NPC Standing Committee is its standing body. As China is a country with a huge population and vast territory, there should be a larger rather than a smaller number of deputies to the NPC in order to enable it to represent the people more satisfactorily. However, owing to the relvatively large number of deputies, the annual NPC sessions cannot last too long, and the NPC sessions can only focus on solving some issues of basic importance in the life of the state. This gives rise to the necessity for the NPC Standing Committee to handle a number of matters that have to be promptly dealt with when the NPC is not in session. From the above, we can see that it is imperative to strengthen the work of the NPC Standing Committee. The draft of the revised constitution expands the power of the NPC Standing Committee. Compared with the 1954 constitution and the 1978 constitution, the NPC Standing Committee's power is expanded mainly in the following aspects:

1. Greater legislative power. The 1954 constitution stipulated that the NPC is the sole legislative body of the state. Although there is no clause to such an effect in the 1978 constitution, all the power to make laws is vested solely in the NPC in the 1978 constitution. The draft of the revised constitution makes some changes in this respect and stipulates that both the NPC and the NPC Standing Committee exercise the legislative power of the state and both are empowered to make laws and decrees. The NPC is empowered to make and revise the criminal law, civil law, the basic law concerning the structure of the state and other basic laws, and the NPC Standing Committee is empowered to make and revise any other laws. Moreover, the draft of the revised constitution also provides that when the NPC is not in session the NPC Standing Committee is empowered to make some partial revisions or additional amendments to the basic laws that have been made by the NPC. These provisions will play an important role in strengthening and perfecting socialist legislation in China.

2. The power to supervise the enforcement of the constitution. Supervising the enforcement of the constitution is of great significance in safeguarding the sanctity of the constitution, ensuring its enforcement and bringing into full play its role as the fundamental great law. Both the 1954 and the 1978 constitutions provided that this power be exercised by the NPC. However, it has been proven by practice that the NPC is in session for too short a time to supervise the enforcement of the constitution, because supervision is a constant task. Therefore, the draft of the revised constitution provides that this power should be transferred to the NPC Standing Committee. This revision will facilitate the intensification of supervision over the enforcement of the constitution and the strengthening of the socialist legal system.

3. When the NPC is not in session, the NPC Standing Committee is empowered to examine and approve partial readjustments to the plans for national economic and social development and to the state budget, when found necessary in the course of their implementation. This will facilitate a prompt solution to problems that crop up during the implementation of these plans and budgets and ensure that the socialist national economy is being developed in a harmonized and proportionate manner.

4. Expanding the NPC Standing Committee's power in supervising the state organs. For example, when the NPC is not in session, the NPC Standing Committee is empowered to decide on appointments and dismissals of ministers, chief auditor and secretary general of the State Council in accordance with the nomination of the premier.

Moreover, the draft of the revised constitution also provides that when the NPC is in session, any member of the NPC Standing Committee has the right to address inquiries to the State Council, the Supreme People's Court, the Supreme People's Procuratorate and any ministry or commission of the State Council in accordance with the procedures provided by law. The state organs to which the inquiries are addressed are obliged to answer them. These provisions will play an important role in strengthening supervision over the administrative, judicial and procuratorial organs of the state by the state legislature.

In the draft of the revised constitution, there are also some new provisions for strengthening the organization of the NPC Standing Committee. The draft provides that members of the NPC Standing Committee must not be appointed to any posts in the state administrative, judicial or procuratorial organs, so they will be able to concentrate all their energy and spend all their time in performing their duties as members. It also provides that the chairman, vice chairmen and secretary general of the NPC Standing Committee form a board of chairmen to handle the routine work of the committee. Moreover, it provides that every province, region and the municipalities directly under the central government should send a chairman or vice chairman of their people's congress standing committees to attend the meetings of the NPC Standing Committee. This will facilitate the intensification of contacts between the NPC Standing Committee and all the localities, and make the decisions of the NPC Standing Committee more suited to the actual conditions and demands of the whole nation.

The provisions in the draft of the revised constitution about expanding the power and strengthening the organization of the NPC Standing Committee represent a major measure for perfecting the socialist political system. These provisions are of great significance in giving full play to the supreme organ of state power, strengthening socialist democracy and the socialist legal system, and ensuring and promoting the development of the cause of socialist modernization.

BEIJING RADIO VIEWS ORGANIZATIONAL REFORMS

OW070529 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1200 GMT 5 May 82

[Station commentary: "They Are Reforms That Accord With the People's Common Aspirations"]

[Text] With the adoption of three proposals, including the restructuring of the State Council's ministries and commissions by the just concluded 23d Session of the 5th NPC Standing Committee, the restructuring of various ministries and commissions has been basically completed. This is an important event in the political life of the people of all nationalities in our country. It is an event that merits a celebration. During the course of restructuring the ministries and commissions, people are happy to see that, for the good of the party's cause, many veteran comrades have warmly supported the less experienced but younger and capable cadres to assume the important leading posts. This fully demonstrates the veteran cadres' communist broadmindedness, their high sense of responsibility toward the country and their communist vision of taking the people's interests into consideration. Now a large number of morally and professionally competent cadres who are in the prime of their lives have assumed the leading posts of various state organizations. Because they are vigorous and have a high political consciousness and are professionally trained, the people believe they will, under the leadership of the party Central Committee, do a very good job in shouldering their historical tasks.

During the Fourth Plenary Session of the Fifth National People's Congress held last year, Premier Zhao Ziyang was warmly acclaimed by the NPC deputies and the CPPCC members when he mentioned in his government work report that decisive measures would be taken to carry out organizational reform and combat bureaucracy. The acclamation reflected the people's common aspirations. It shows that this revolution -- that is, the current organizational reform -- must be launched because that is what the people want, and that it certainly will have the wholehearted support of the people of all nationalities throughout the country.

Comrade Hu Yaobang once stated that the policies upheld by the CCP accorded with the people's aspirations and that was the basic guarantee that our cause would triumph. Ours is a socialist state that practices democratic dictatorship of the people. To achieve a high degree of socialist democracy, the most basic requirement is to enable all the people to fully enjoy the highest authority of administering state affairs on the basis that various forms of ownership of, and the right of allocating and using, the means of production are enjoyed by the people. If the state organizations, which exercise these rights for the people, are excessively enormous and complex, certain cadres are apt to lose contact with the masses and reality and will inevitably become subjective and bureaucratic in one way or another. Not only will this directly affect the state organizations' functions and efficiency, it will also weaken the people's authority in administering the state. For this reason, the current organizational reform, in addition to building simpler but more efficient state organizations, will, from a fundamental viewpoint, be conducive to eradicating bureaucracy and establishing a high degree of socialist democracy under which the people's right of being the masters of their own country can be more efficiently exercised. So this is really an important event which is necessary for the four modernizations and which accords with the people's common aspirations.

Now this important event has made a very good start. As far as the reform of various ministries and commissions is concerned, much work has to be done in the next stage. For example, the scope of responsibilities must be clearly defined, efficiency must be improved, placement of the veteran cadres must be properly carried out, rotational training of the cadres must be intensified and the number of staff members must be reduced. Only when these tasks have been properly carried out can our accomplishments in restructuring the state organizations be consolidated and expanded and become more prominent.

As for the reform of the local organizations, enterprises and establishments and the reform of the organizational structure, political and economic systems, they are tasks to be accomplished on a long-term basis. To accomplish these tasks requires us to study and resolve the many new situations and problems. Although numerous difficulties are expected, we must have full confidence in attaining our goals. As long as we act in accordance with the people's common aspirations, it is beyond doubt that our cause will triumph.

RENMIN RIBAO CITIES LENIN ON FIGHTING BUREAUCRACY

[Article by Song Hongxun [1345 3163 6054]: "'Better Fewer, But Better' -- Studying Lenin's Concept for Improving State Organs"]

[Text] In leading the Soviet state and socialist construction, Lenin always paid close attention to fighting bureaucracy. He also used his profound insight to invent many methods and measures to overcome bureaucracy. One of the important measures he put forth was to improve state organs. At the beginning of 1923, Lenin dictated from his sick bed "How We Should Reorganize the Workers' and Peasants' Inspection," "Better Fewer, But Better" and other important articles that were mainly concerned with the problem of improving state organs. These articles were the important documents that Lenin wrote for the 12th Congress of the CPSU which was about to be held at that time. Studying Lenin's ideas on improving state organs is of practical significance today when we are reforming our government structure.

Socialism, in essence, is incompatible with bureaucracy. Therefore, bureaucracy is not an inherent persistent disease of socialism. However, in a socialist society there is often severe bureaucracy that corrodes the organs of the party and state and it is often so serious a "malpractice" that we have to carry out a prolonged struggle against it.

The October Revolution smashed the old bureaucratic machine of the Russian bourgeoisie and established a workers' and peasants' state. At that time, there were very few instances of bureaucracy in the Soviet Government. On the contrary, the Soviet Government operated speedily and effectively and was full of vigor. This new work style completely cleared up the depressing atmosphere of the old officialdom which was characterized by delays and a perfunctory work style. As a result, the creativeness of the masses was given full play. At the meeting of the All-Russian Central Executive Committee that was held immediately after the victory of the revolution, some leftists of the Social Revolutionary Party demanded, in the tone of lords and masters, an explanation for why the newly-established Council of People's Commissars had promulgated a series of decrees without first applying for approval of the Central Executive Committee. Lenin immediately answered, "Socialism cannot be decreed from above. Its spirit rejects the mechanical bureaucratic approach; living, creative socialism is the product of the masses themselves." ("Collected Works of Lenin" vol 26, p 269) When Lenin recalled this incident later, he said that at that time they did not have any idea about the possible evils of bureaucracy, even though 6 months had passed since the October Revolution.

However, a socialist society emerges, after all, from the womb of a capitalist society. Therefore, the old ideologies, customs and traditions will have an impact on the people for a long time. Bureaucracy, as a vestige of the old society, cannot be eliminated as soon as the old system is overthrown and it will continue to spread in the new society and poison the people. That is why many communists who braved untold dangers during the years of revolution have been consciously or unconsciously tainted with bureaucracy when their positions have changed.

Soviet state power passed stern trials during the years of arduous civil war, but the serious destruction that the war had brought to the economy and the scattered and unorganized nature of small production and the people who suffered poverty also resulted in a revival of bureaucracy within the organs of the Soviet state. Lenin pointed out that the things that were conditions for achieving victory in a blockaded country, a besieged fortress, had by the spring of 1921, revealed their negative side and the bureaucratic practices, as a legacy of the "siege" and the superstructure built on the isolated and downtrodden state of the small producers, fully revealed themselves. (summarized from "Collected works of Lenin" vol 4, pp 526, 527) Therefore, by the time the new economic policies were being implemented to shift the stress of work onto economic construction, various bureaucratic practices, such as abstract empty talk, losing contact with reality, delay in operations, shifting responsibility, redtape, issuing arbitrary directives, abusing power of office, dereliction of duty and employing an excessive number of staff had spread to every department including the party organizations. Regarding this state of affairs, Lenin gained the close attention of the leaders at all levels and called on them to carry out steadfast struggle against bureaucracy. At that time, Lenin fully understood the serious harm of bureaucracy and attached due importance to the struggle against it. In his letter to People's Commissar of Finance G. Y. Sokolnikov, he said, "Communists have become bureaucrats. If anything will destroy us, it is this." ("Collected Works of Lenin" vol 35, p 552)

During 1921 and 1922, Lenin discussed the problem of fighting bureaucracy in many of his articles, letters, reports and work plans and put forth a series of methods and adopted a series of measures to overcome bureaucracy. In May 1921, in the "Instruction of the Council of Labor and Defense to Local Soviet Bodies" which he personally drafted, he focused on the problem of the methods and effort to fight bureaucracy. The methods put forth by Lenin at that time were: reorganizing workers' and peasants' inspection; recruiting nonparty members for the inspection work; allowing legal proceedings to be taken against bureaucrats, dismissing redundant personnel and carefully selecting personnel; inspecting and readjusting the work of the various organizations; and so on.

In order to overcome the malpractice of bureaucracy that was stifling Soviet state organs, Lenin personally took the lead in doing a lot of work and set an example. For example, in 1922, Lenin went out on some business, but he did not travel in the manner of a "high-ranking official." Instead, he took a train. As a result, he found that "things could not be worse.... Nobody is looking after things and nothing is in good repair, nothing is in good order. It seems that all the fuel is stolen and there is water in the kerosene. The engine's operation is so rough that no one can stand it.... It is simply a shame to run things in such a disorderly way and to work so perfunctorily." After this journey, he wrote a letter to the leading person concerned and demanded that he immediately appoint a person to take charge of this work and put an end to acting as bureaucrats and overlords. (summarized from "Lenin on the Socialist Construction of Soviet Russia" pp 275 - 277)

Lenin time and again requested the relevant departments to mete our administrative punishment to those who neglected their duties and dismiss or even prosecute them if their offenses were serious. Sometimes Lenin personally pursued some officials for delay and dereliction and asked the judicial departments to punish them. He thought that public trials of these cases would raise people's sense of responsibility and draw the attention of the broad masses and the broad ranks of cadres to this problem. Thus the aim of the trials would be really achieved and the development of the economy would be facilitated.

In October 1922, at the fourth session of the All-Russian Central Executive Committee's ninth convocation, Lenin said that he was particularly concerned about the problems in state organs. He said that this was an old problem but it would always remain new. When he recalled the simplification of the state organs, he said that according to an investigation in August 1918, the number of personnel in the state organs and soviet organizations in Moscow totaled 231,000; after a simplification of the overstaffed departments, another investigation was carried out in October 1922 and the result showed that the number of personnel had increased to 243,000 instead of being reduced as was expected. He said with emotion, "the proportion of those, perhaps, scores of courageous and hard-working men and women, relative to the hundreds of those who sabotaged -- or half-sabotaged, floundering among their voluminous papers -- this proportion is very often such that our vital affairs became submerged in a deluge of paper." ("Collected Works of Lenin" vol 33, p 356)

Though Lenin's sickness took a turn for the worse at the end of 1922, he continued to be concerned with improving the work of the state organs. In the "Pages From a Diary" that he wrote during the time he was sick, he took the general vocational education board as an example and said that many departments of the Soviet state organs were bloated and overstaffed. The scale of these departments and their personnel had to be reduced. In fact, many departments and their personnel had to be reduced. In fact, many departments had been disproportionately inflated for their selfish departmental interests. He wrote, "There is still very much in the proletarian and peasant state that can and must be economized on.... This can be done by closing institutions which are playthings of a semi-aristocratic type" without exception. (ibid, vol 33, p 419)

Lenin always regarded fighting against bureaucracy as an issue of vital concern to the socialist cause and to the destiny of the party and state and treated improving the state organs as an important measure in fighting bureaucracy. He sternly pointed out that "unless we wage a systematic and persevering struggle to improve the state organs, we shall perish before we manage to lay the foundation of socialism" (ibid, vol 32, p 311) However Lenin did not fail to see that fighting against bureaucracy was a long-term struggle and that improving the state organs was an arduous task.

For a time, there were some people who held that only when bureaucracy was completely eliminated could the initiative of the masses be brought into play. Lenin thought that this view was completely wrong. In May 1921, one M.F. Sokolov wrote to Lenin and said, "Independent mass activity is possible only when we wipe off the face of the earth those ulcers which are called bureaucratic general offices and central boards."

In reply, Lenin wrote, "Although I have not been out in the provinces, I know this bureaucracy and all the harm it does. Your mistake is to think that it can be destroyed all at once, like an ulcer, that it can be 'wiped off the face of the earth.' This is a mistake. You can throw out the czar, throw out the landowners, throw out the capitalists. We have done this. But you cannot 'throw out' bureaucracy in a peasant country; you cannot 'wipe it off the face of the earth.' You can only reduce it by slow and determined efforts. To 'throw off' an ulcer of this kind is impossible. It can only be healed." (ibid, vol 35, p 490) Lenin was of the opinion that the basic way to cure bureaucracy lay in raising the cultural level and management abilities of the masses and that an important measure was to radically improve the state organs. He thought that the principle in improving state organs must be "better fewer, but better."

ARTICLE ON STATESMAN WEI ZHENG'S LAST YEARS

[Article by Zhou Huaiyu [0719 2037 1342]: "Wei Zheng's Resignation"]

[Text] In the 10th year of Zhenguan (A.D. 636), 57-year-old Wei Zheng became old and feeble before his time as a result of overwork, poor health and illness. He earnestly requested Li Shimin to let him resign and retire lest he should adversely affect state affairs, but his requests were repeatedly turned down. In order to explain the matter more clearly, he presented a compendious memorial to Li Shimin, saying: "During the Sui Dynasty, I experienced various hardships and most people of my rank died. Now that peace has been restored and you have promoted me to a high position, I wish I could use my position to repay your kindness and benevolence. I formerly suffered from eye trouble which, compounded by nettle rash, has become more serious with each passing day. As soon as it grows dark, I cannot see anything from a distance of several feet away. If I move about quickly, there is a palpitation in the pit of my stomach. Now that there is great order across the land and there are a large number of talented persons, there is no reason for a sick person such as myself to stay at my post. Not only should I not be promoted, I should be relieved of my post. Please appoint me to a sinecure post so that I can wait upon you, fully express my views on various matters and make good the omissions and deficiencies. This is not just a pretension but my sincere wish." ("Quotations From Wei Zheng's Expostulations," vol 5)

From this memorial we can see that there were three reasons or motives why Wei Zheng wanted to retire:

First, he was old and infirm. He "formerly suffered from eye trouble which was later compounded by nettle rash" and "there was a palpitation at the pit of his stomach" (believed to be heart trouble). He was not equal to his job and therefore "should be relieved of his post." Second, "there were a large number of talented persons, there was no reason for a sick person like him to stay long at his post." Wei Zheng therefore decided to retire and yield his position to a more talented person in order to conform to the natural law of supersession of the old by the new. And third, Wei Zheng proposed that he be an "official with a sinecure post" (an official with a rank but without power) and to wait upon Li Shimin with the intention of "making good the omissions and deficiencies" and reflecting upon things as they really were. This was in fact an attempt to detach himself from the onerous daily routine and move into a more suitable position in order to give counsel to the cause of Zhenguan.

Wei Zheng in fact discussed retirement with the emperor by means of the three-point proposal stated in the memorial. He pointed out two important questions to Li Shimin. First, those who were old and infirm should retire and yield their posts to more talented persons because this conformed to natural law and was demanded by the situation. Second, when, old officials retired, they should not be leisurely and carefree but should "make good omissions and deficiencies" and "fully express their views" on important and long-term problems in order to continually make contributions to the long-term peace and good order of the country.

Li Shimin finally realized the truth in that Wei Zheng had expressed his heartfelt views. Thereupon he approved Wei Zheng's request and relieved him of his post by appointing him to a "sinecure post." This was a senior "sinecure post" specially set up for retired senior officials. They had no specific duties but had to take part in discussions of important state affairs and to check up on work. Li Shimin also instructed Wei Zheng to take charge of an "advisory body." Wei Zheng's salary, his attendants and the number of soldiers guarding the gate and doors of his mansions were provided as usual at no cost.

Wei Zheng died of illness 7 years after he retired. He did not spend the remaining 7 years of his life idly for, after his retirement, he persisted in doing two jobs. First, he write books to establish his theory. In the 11th year of Zhenguan (A.D. 637), he made contributions, together with Fang Xuanling, for the perfection of decrees, regulations and rites of the early Tang Dynasty by revising 138 articles of the "new etiquette." Second, he was concerned about the political situation and constantly had discussions with Li Shimin. He paid close attention to every major policy decision of Li Shimin that had a strong bearing on politics and discussed them with him when such matters arose. Not only did he have oral discussions with Li Shimin he also constantly presented written memorials. In the year following his retirement, Wei Zheng sent no less than four "memorials" in 1 year, expressing his views on many important questions such as the selection and employment of able and virtuous persons, giving up an extravagant life and adopting a frugal one and preparing for danger in times of peace. When he detected Li Shimin's faults, he remonstrated with him without mincing words, adopting the attitude of "being ashamed that the emperor could not compare favorably with Yao and Shun." In his later years he wrote the famous "memorial on 10 questions for reflection" and "memorial on 10 faults" in which he raised 10 questions for reflection to Li Shimin and set forth 10 great faults, with analysis and criticism, so that Li Shimin was greatly moved. The older he became, the more bravely he talked with Li Shimin. It was not until the 17th year of Zhenguan (A.D. 643) when he was suffering from a severe and lingering illness and was on his deathbed that he stopped writing his unfinished will in which he admonished Li Shimin "not to hesitate to employ able and virtuous persons and remove the evil ones." It was no wonder that when Wei Zheng passed away Li Shimin expressed his heartfelt condolences by saying: "I have lost a mirror in Wei Zheng's death."

WANG ZHEN, DENG LIQUN PRAISE WANG XUEWEN

HK060829 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0720 GMT 4 May 82

[Text] Beijing, 4 May (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- In his speech given at the celebration meeting marking the 55th anniversary of Wang Xuewen's taking up theoretical and educational work, Wang Zhen, member of the CCP Politburo and newly appointed headmaster of the CCP Central Party School, said that retired old cadres and cadres who had left their posts for convalescence should shoulder the heavy responsibility of passing on experience, helping and setting an example for young cadres and should make contributions to building socialist material and spiritual civilizations in China.

Wang Xuewen is one of China's earliest Marxist economists and is already 87 years old. Yesterday, the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences held a celebration meeting marking the 55th anniversary of his taking up theoretical and educational work. Wang presided over the celebration meeting and made a speech.

Deng Liqun, director of CCP Central Committee Propaganda Department, also spoke at the meeting. He praised Wang Xuewen and said that he had worked seriously and led a simple life and was worthy of being regarded as an inner-party model.

The 87-year-old Wang Xuewen went to study in Japan in his youth. He was the student of Hajime Kawakami, a noted economist. In the 1920's and 1930's, he was engaged in the left-wing literary movement in Shanghai. During the war of resistance against Japanese aggression, he was engaged in theoretical and educational work in Yanan for a long time. After the founding of new China, he was pushed aside and for a long time attacked by Chen Boda and others. Wang Xuewen has made many important academic contributions. His chief works are "An Introduction to Social Problems," "Modern History of Economic Thinking in Europe," "Outline of the Course of Political Economics" and "Several Questions on the Methodology in Political Economics." They all have been very influential.

Also present at the celebration meeting were noted personages Fan Ruoyu, Guo Huaruo, Song Zhenting, Liao Gailong, Zhang Xiangshan, Qin Chuan, He Ying, Yu Zhan, Mo Wenhua and Liu Da.

TRANSPORTATION CALLED 'WEAK LINK' IN ECONOMY

HK070237 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 7 May 82 p 3

[Text] The volume of cargo handled by China's railways, highways and rivers has increased 14.8-fold since 1952, while the number of passengers has increased 8.2-fold, the WORLD ECONOMIC HERALD [SHIJIE JINGJI DAOBAO] of Shanghai reports.

However, transportation is still a weak link in the development of China's industry and agriculture. Last year, in Shanxi, the richest coal-mining province, lack of transportation held up more than 17 million tons of coal.

Foreign ships have been stuck in Chinese ports due to lack of facilities. In 1980. this caused a loss of $200 million in state revenues. Traveling whether by land or air is a headache for most people.

The WORLD ECONOMIC HERALD said insufficient investment is the main reason for the under-developed transportation system. The paper said in 1957, economist and statesman Chen Yun warned that backward transportation would hamper the national economy. He advocated that more funds be allocated for this sector. But his advice went unheeded and investment in transportation averaged only one to two per cent of GNP.

Network

In comparison, the article said, Japan spent about 3.6 per cent of its GNP from 1959 to 1969 to build up a transportation network.

China's system is also not well planned, the article said. Some branches are neglected and too much money is concentrated in building new railways.

The nation has more than 51,000 kilometres of railways which handle 70 per cent of the volume of cargo transport. But, not enough attention has been paid to improving the busy lines in the eastern half of the country.

River and coastal navigation, which handled 20 per cent of cargo transport before liberation, now only handle 13 per cent. The costs are higher than rail transport. This is true of Yangtze River transport, which has received negligible investment.

Highway transport fees in China are about 20 times higher than railway charges. In some other countries the ratio is six to one.

The article said that readjusting the structure of the transportation network and improving management could raise efficiency and greatly relieve congestion. But this sector needs investment.

EDITORIAL ON WORKERS' REWARDS, PENALTIES

HK061010 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 3 May 82 pp 1, 4

[Editorial: "Both Rewards and Penalties Are Essential"]

[Text] The "regulations on rewards and penalties for enterprise workers and staff members" promulgated by the State Council is an important law for developing economic construction and spiritual civilization. It must be implemented in all localities and by all departments and enterprises.

Modern socialized mass production calls for strict labor discipline. Since the downfall of the "gang of four," the majority of enterprises have shown a change for the better in varying degrees in the observance of labor discipline. However, at present, the pernicious influence of anarchism which prevailed during the decade-long internal disorder has not yet been wiped out. In some factories and mines, the phenomena of disorder and lax discipline exist to a serious extent. A very small number of people have long been feeding themselves on the grain grown by the peasants and receiving wages from the state but they make trouble instead of doing any work. They refuse to mend their way although the leaders have criticized and educated them and the masses have helped and exhorted them. Some of them run wild and have become absolutely lawless. They are "black sheep" spreading their evil influence on the masses and causing serious obstruction to production, work and social order. This situation should no longer be allowed to exist.

It is highly necessary to lay down a system strictly governing rewards and penalties in order to maintain good order in production and work. Enterprises should commend and reward the workers and staff members who have done their jobs well and observed discipline and the law. They should punish, by way of economic and administrative penalties, and even expel those who have seriously violated labor discipline and refused to mend their ways after repeated education. Rewards and penalties supplement each other and both of them are essential. Those who have rendered meritorious service should be rewarded and those who have made mistakes should be punished. Only when rewards and penalties are meted out strictly and impartially will it be possible to encourage the advanced and motivate those who lag behind. If rewards are not given for good performance and penalties are not given for evil deeds and if right and wrong are confused, it will be impossible to establish good order. This is true in society and also in an enterprise. People often find it easy to see the use of rewards but do not see the necessity of penalties. For this reason, some comrades regard rewards as an absolutely good thing and panelties as an absolutely bad thing. In fact, rewards and penalties are the two sides of the same matter. If there are only rewards and no penalties, the role of rewards as encouragement will diminish. If there are only penalties and no rewards, the meaning of penalties as a warning will also diminish. It was clearly laid down in the "outline of labor regulations for state-run enterprises" adopted by the State Council in 1954 that an enterprise might mete out, in accordance with the seriousness of the case, administrative and economic penalties for its workers and staff members who had violated discipline, and that the enterprise might dismiss the offender or refer the case to the court of justice if the offense was serious and caused heavy damages and losses. This shows that meting out rewards and penalties was a correct methods which existed before the "Great Cultural Revolution" and which was regarded at that time as just as fair. It was only during the "Great Cultural Revolution" when the people were confused ideologically that they felt that "the spearhead was pointed at the masses" once penalties were mentioned. Actually, the "black sheep" who have been dismissed do not represent the masses. On the contrary, the masses deeply abhor the "black sheep." It is precisely these regulations which ensured good order in society and production in our country during the 1950's. They safeguarded instead of harmed the interests of the masses. Judging by the experiments conducted in Shanghai, in units which had firmly inplemented these regulations, a very small number of people were punished and still fewer were dismissed. Some of those who were dismissed had been absent from work for many years without good reason and had actually left the enterprise. Others had seriously violated labor discipline, seriously damaging state property.

They refused to mend their ways after repeated education, and the broad masses of workers and staff members were critical of them. Still others were punished by public security and judicial departments for offenses against the criminal law and were no longer qualified to be workers or staff members. Dismissal of these offenders was precisely a measure to protect the interests of the masses. The workers and the cadres of the enterprises warmly supported it.

If an enterprise does not have the power to mete out rewards and penalities and dismiss offenders, it cannot maintain labor discipline. Such an enterprise cannot be managed properly. Of course, by carrying out political and ideological work among the majority of workers and staff members, by educating them on the work regulations and by implementing the reward system, we can urge them to consciously observe rules and regulations and maintain good order in work and production. However, it will not do to just persuade and educate the very few people who go in for anarchism and spread their evil influence on the masses. There must be essential, strict discipline to keep them within bounds. We have always put emphasis on education. But, education cannot serve all purposes. It is incorrect to overemphasize education and to exaggerate the role of education to the extent of doing away with the legal system or underrating the use of the legal system. Especially today when the general mood of society has not yet basically changed for the better, education alone cannot solve all problems if a strict legal system is lacking. It is clearly laid down in the "regulations on rewards and penalities for enterprise workers and staff members" that an enterprise has the power to mete out rewards and penalties and in particular to dismiss those who have seriously violated labor discipline and refused to mend their ways after repeated education. These regulations inhibit some people from taking a socialist enterprise as a place where they can do evil and from cherishing the idea that they cannot be dismissed from the enterprise. Some units have carried out these regulations. Their management has taken on a new look and their workers and staff members are full of vigor, observe labor discipline more strictly and carry out production in still better order. This testifies to the usefulness of these regulations.

In implementing the regulations of rewards and penalties, it is necessary to attach primary importance to strengthening political and ideological work. Penalties are a special form of education. They are the means and not the end. The masses should be mobilized to seriously study the regulations so that they understand why they should be rewarded or punished, what they should do and what they should not do. Generally speaking, it is necessary to uphold the principle of relying mainly on ideological education and taking penalties as a spplement. In dealing with a specific case regarding a particular occurrence or individual, it is necessary to make a meticulous analysis. This specific case should not be taken as the pretext to oppose punishing those who should be punished. Making efforts to commend the advanced, establish healthy practices and emulate good personalities and good deeds has always been the focus of our political and ideological work. This is the only way to enable everyone to tell right from wrong, honor from disgrace, and consciously safeguard rules and regulations and labor discipline. The workers and staff members should be educated to cultivate the sense of responsibility as masters of their own affairs and the good habit of observing discipline and law. Particular attention should be paid to doing ideological work among workers and staff members who are lagging behind. Efforts should be made to patiently and meticulously carry out ideological work with those who have seriously violatged labor discipline. Due penalties should be meted out for those who must be punished. The rules and regulations should be carried out in such a way that it is possible to attain the goal of educating the offenders as well as all others. It is imperative first to tell the offenders the reason why they should follow the rules and regulations before they are punished according to law. In no way should the meting out of penalties be taken as a simple matter and the punishment of offenders as a matter that gives pleasure. It is wrong not to conduct education at ordinary times and to punish an offender once he goes against discipline. It is still necessary to educate the very few people who have been dismissed and to help them turn over a new leaf and become useful persons, instead of showing no interest in them. Leading cadres are absolutely forbidden to find excuses to mete out punishments to retaliate on the masses who pointed out their violations against economic discipline. Such a leading cadre is bound to be punished.

Leading cadres of enterprises must act exemplarily and uphold principles in order to give rewards and punishments impartially. At present, some enterprises have lax and weak leaderships. They dare not look into the violation of labor discipline by their workers and staff members, still less punish them. They even compromise with and tolerate the few troublemakers. As a result, there is no difference between merits and demerits and between right and wrong; those who should be rewarded are not rewarded and those who should be punished are not punished. This greatly dampens the enthusiasm of the workers and staff members. It should be understood that it is impossible to establish healthy practices without cracking down on unhealthy practices; tolerating and being overlenient to evil-doers and evil deeds means promoting unhealthy practices and breaking away from the masses. For this reason, leading cadres must uphold principles, look into violations of discipline and mete out rewards or punishments when necessary. At the same time, it is necessary to make investigations penetratingly and meticulously, so that rewards and punishments are given to those who deserve them. We can believe that during the overall consolidation of enterprises, as long as the regulations of rewards and penalties are seriously implemented, it is definitely possible to increase the workers' and staff members' sense of responsibility as masters of their country and to establish good order in production, work and society so that a new situation where rewards and punishments are given impartially and everything is in good order will be opened up in the socialist enterprises.

ARTICLE EXAMINES LIU SHAOQI'S ECONOMIC POLICIES

[Article by Lu Yu [7120 7183] and Wang Yu [3076 5940]: "We Must Proceed From Actual Conditions When Formulating and Carrying Out Economic Construction Policies -- Studying Liu Shaoqi's 'On Economic Construction Policies in New China'"]

[Text] "On Economic Construction Policies in New China" was an outline of a report written by Comrade Liu Shaoqi in June 1949. In accordance with the spirit of the Second Plenary Session of the Seventh CCP Central Committee, Comrade Liu Shaoqi made a penetrating analysis of the social and economic situation in new China and expounded the essential principles, policies and measures that should be adopted in the course of building our economy. Even today, this important article is still very applicable.

A proletarian political party must stipulate correct policies and must not proceed from subjective assumptions or knowledge we get from books. Instead, we must proceed from actual conditions. This is the seek-truth-from-facts policy advocated by our party all along.

After the establishment of new China, what was the economic situation in our country? First of all, as the outline mentioned, the basic situation was that "ours is a big country that is backward in industry, and furthermore, development is uneven." At that time, the output value of modern industry was only about 17 percent of the GNP and the foundations of some major light industries, processing industries and heavy industries was very weak. Furthermore, the only existing industries were concentrated along the coastal areas; the distribution was irrational. Agriculture and the handicraft industry, which constituted more than 80 percent of the national economy, were still using tools that were not much different from those which had been used in ancient times. After the establishment of new China, although "the economy of our country will have a speedy recovery and development," in order to change the backward economic situation, we will have to work very hard for a long time. Under the circumstances that our industry was backward and developments were uneven, it was inevitable that economic sectors of different natures and forms would concurrently exist after we had won the revolution. It was impossible to practice a unitary system of socialist ownership of the means of production. Within a certain period of time, we could only practice the new democratic economy which was principally formed of five economic sectors under the leadership of the proletariat (through the Communist Party).

These five economic sectors were: the state sector of the economy, the cooperative sector of the economy, the state capitalist sector of the economy, the private capitalist sector of the economy, the small commodity sector of the economy and the seminatural economy. This was the other basic economic situation in new China. In his outline, Comrade Liu Shaoqi also specifically analyzed the nature of and roles played by the five economic sectors. He pointed out: "Contradictions and struggles do exist in the new democratic economy formed by the above-mentioned five economic sectors. This is the struggle between socialist and capitalist factors and tendencies. In other words, this is a struggle between the proletariat and the bourgeoisie. This is the fundamental contradiction in new China since the imperial and feudal powers have been eliminated. This contradiction and struggle will determine the future of China -- whether China will finally become a socialist or capitalist society. We hold that the new democratic economy is an economy of a transitional nature." Comrade Liu Shaoqi succinctly and precisely analyzed the basic economic situation in new China in his short article. He correctly pointed out the nature, the basic contradictions and the possible prospects of the social economy of new China. This analysis laid a scientific foundation for our party to stipulate and implement correct principles and policies.

In accordance with his analysis that the new democratic economy was an economy of a transitional nature and there were two possible prospects, Comrade Liu Shaoqi proposed that the responsibility of our party was "to gradually increase the socialist sector of the national economy if possible and strengthen planning of the national economy so as to steadily change to socialism step-by-step." This had two meanings. First of all, our responsibility was to bring about the transition to socialism; second, this transitional period could only be realized step-by-step over a long period of time. This task proposed by the outline not only conformed to Marxism-Leninism and the communist objective of the struggle, but also conformed to the actual situation of our country. Since the new democratic state had already established the state sector of the economy which was socialist in nature, it controlled the economic lifelines of the country and occupied the leading position in the national economy. There was the state capitalist economy, which was very similar to the socialist economy, serving as a supplement to the state economy to a certain extent. There was the cooperative economy, which was socialist in nature in varying degrees, serving as an ally of the state economy and as a supplement of decisive significance. Therefore, under the guidance of the correct principles and policies of the Communist Party and the new democratic country, the socialist sector of the national economy would certainly grow step-bystep and new China would be able to avoid developing toward capitalism and would realize the transition to socialism. Any standpoints that were suspicious of the prospects of socialism were groundless. However, during the initial period after new China was founded, the economy of our country was very backward, the state economy was an impressive, but still a very tiny sector of the national economy. The cooperative and state capitalist sectors of the economy were also very small. However, the small commodity and seminatural economy occupied a dominant position. Under these circumstances, it would certainly take a long time to change the private capitalist economy into a socialist economy and to realize the collectivization of agriculture. Furthermore, there would be acute struggles. In his outline, Comrade Liu Shaoqi pointed out: "This transition must be carried out amid acute arduous struggles over a long period of time. This was what Lenin said during the time when the Soviet new economic policy was practiced: It is a question of "who beats whom." It was also groundless to hold that socialism could be accomplished speedily without going through the essential procedures.

To accomplish the above-mentioned tasks, in light of the different economic sectors, Comrade Liu Shaoqi pointed out different policies: "We must take developing the state economy as the principle. We must establish a cooperative economy and extensively and closely integrate the cooperative economy with the state economy. We must help the small producers to gradually develop toward the orientation of cooperatives. We must organize the state capitalist economy to allow the development of a private capitalist economy within the limits that are advantageous to the national economy and the people's livelihood."

"We must gradually incorporate businesses which are monopolistic in nature under state management. Such businesses can also adopt methods used by the state capitalist economy under the supervision of the state. We must prohibit all speculation and businesses which are harmful to the national economy and the people's livelihood." In light of the fact that we were inexperienced in economic construction at that time, there were no comprehensive economic policies and plans, the cadres knew nothing about how to manage the economy and there was no leading economic rgan throughout the country. The outline put forth a series of specific policies and methods.

Practice has proven that the guiding ideology and the principles and policies expounded by Comrade Liu Shaoqi in his outline are practical and realistic and they proceeded from the actual situation of China. They were positive and stable measures. It appears as if the process of replacing the capitalist economy with the socialist economy will be delayed if we promote the economy in accordance with this guiding principle. In actuality, it will not be delayed, but rather it will be expedited because we can avoid unnecessary troubles caused by rash action. As a result, the whole national economy will develop substantially and the socialist sector of the economy will gradually grow larger.

In the final part of the outline, Comrade Liu Shaoqi emphatically pointed out that in the future, we must oppose the two erroneous tendencies in building the Chinese economy. One was "the capitalist tendency," which meant "giving up the leading role of the proletariat in the building of the new democratic economy," "placing all hopes on the development of the private capitalist economy, making unprincipled concessions to the capitalists and making allowances for the weak points of the petite bourgeoisie." The other was "the adventurist tendency," which meant "in our economic plans and measures, adopting, too early and without preparation, socialist measures which are impractical and unfeasible." Later, mistakes made by our party in regard to the guiding ideology were exactly the consequence of the latter erroneous tendency. "The Great Leap Forward" and the people's communes movement begun in 1958 resulted in people setting excessive quotas and giving blind instructions. The practice of making exaggerations and the "communist wind" ran rampant. During the "Great Cultural Revolution," the erroneous leftist tendency began to show its pernicious effects, and went to extremes. After the "gang of four" was smashed, its pernicious influence remained effective for a period of time. Impractical slogans and targets which exceeded the actual national strength were proposed. This accelerated the serious imbalance in the proportions of the national economy and aggravated our financial difficulties. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, we have basically brought order out of chaos and gradually corrected the leftist errors in the guiding ideology. As a result, the economy of our country has gradually developed along a correct path.

From an epistemological point of view, the two tendencies pointed out by Comrade Liu Shaoqi emerged because we did not have a correct understanding of the basic condition of our country. In regard to the transformation of the social economy, if we cannot recognize changes when there has been considerable progress in the political and economic development of our country and when socialist transformation of agriculture, handicraft industry and capitalist industries and businesses is on the agenda, then we will be committing rightist mistakes. On the other hand, when the standard of our economic development is comparatively low and when we have not developed to a stage where the economic relations should be transformed, if we transform the existing economic relations excessively and at too fast a speed, and exceed the level of economic development, then we will be committing leftist mistakes. In regard to economic construction, we made mistakes in the past because we did not proceed from the actual situation of China and were too eager to fulfill the task and we blindly sought excessive quotas. As Comrade Liu Shaoqi pointed out, the result was that "we have exceeded the practicability and feasibility of our economic plans and measures." This caused serious losses to the national economy. Lessons like these were numerous and very profound.

The basic spirit ofthe struggle between the two lines of economic construction proposed by Comrade Liu Shaoqi is still applicable to us today.

RENMIN RIBAO CONTINUES DEBATE ON ANARCHISM

[Article by Gu Zhaoji [7357 5128 1015]: "How To Understand the Scientific Nature of Criticism of Anarchism -- A discussion With Comrade Ma Jia"]

[Text] Editor's note: The article by Comrade Ma Jia was published on 31 January 1980, on page five of this newspaper. Following its publication, Comrade Gu Zhaoji wrote an article putting forward a different view of the question. This article, however, was not published at the time; in response to the author's demands we now publish it for the first time. We also reprinted Ma Jia's orginal article in full. In our opinion Ma Jia's article raises some interesting questions concerning the criticism of anarchism. It contains solid analysis, presents a clear case and is written in a crisp and clear style. The author's view is correct. [end editor's note]

On 31 January (1980) RENMIN RIBAO published Ma Jia's article "We Must Pay Attention to the Scientific Nature of Criticism of Anarchism" which criticizes other people for being unscientific in their criticism of anarchism. The author believes that since the founding fathers of anarchism are all opponents of the state they are all therefore opponents of of democracy. Therefore it is incorrect to say that anarchism represents a form of extreme democracy or a mentality of democracy being paramount.

In my opinion Comrade Ma Jia's viewpoint certainly merits serious discussion. Anarchism, like all other ideological trends opposed to Marxism, is constantly changing in accordance with historical development and changes in form. Under socialist conditions in particular, it must necessarily take on special forms of expression and special camouflage. Unless we pay attention to this the real nature of anarchy might escape our notice.

Everyone is familiar with the fact that as opponents of the state, the founding fathers of anarchism had delcared war on all state power. Who at present would dare to openly declare their opposition to all state power? Early anarchism openly advocated individual egoism. Who at the present time, however, would dare to openly support individual egoism. Early anarchism also openly declared a belief in "the ego being the center" and "everything." Who at present would dare to openly sympathize with such views? This being the case, can we honestly say that anarchism simply does not exist in our country?!

Marxism demands that in examining questions we must firmly grasp the essence and study the manifestations. In meeting these demands we have decided that there clearly are some people sympathetic to anarchism. Rather than show the true face of anarchism, these people have adopted the guise of democracy and the mentality of democracy being paramount, and have disguised their true intentions by pretending to struggle for democracy and freedom. Is such a view scientific? Will it not leave people with the impression that anarchism is the ture protector of democracy?

So-called scientific nature is really nothing more than seeking truth from facts. What is so unscientific about analyzing the current manifestations of anarchism by seeking truth from facts? Or must we base our assessment of anarchism solely on the definition of anarchism found in dictionaries of philosophy or on examples of primitive anarchism before our view can be considered scientific?

It is entirely permissible for our current notion of anarchism to differ from primitive forms of anarchism. Since everything develops it is important that notions people have should not be too rigid and inflexible. For example we now see that the absence of discipline and organization, the disregard for party directives and decisions, the practice of each area going its own way and the arbitrary issuance of bonuses as all being forms of anarchism. Does the fact that they are different necessarily mean that we are being unscientific?

If we insist, however, on examining today's anarchism in terms of Comrade Ma Jia's primitive and overly rigid notions of what is "scientific" and what constitutes "anarchism" we will not find any traces of anarchism at all. It is therefore hardly surprising that some people see anarchism in the scientific sense as being the product of specific historical conditions and believe that our country suffers only from bureaucratism, and that anarchism fundamentally does not exist. As far as they are concerned, criticism of anarchism is like Don Quixote's jousting with windmills and is the result of arbitrary use of the notion of anarchy.

It seems, however, that if we examine such a view in the light of Ma Jia's own scientific standards it appears far more "scientific" than Ma Jia's own view.

ANHUI'S ZHOU ZIJIAN'S VIEWS ON 4 MAY YOUTH DAY

OW070238 Hefei Anhui Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 4 May 82

[ANHUI QINGNIAN BAO 4 May article by Zhou Zijian, acting first secretary of Anhui Provincial CCP Committee: "Our Hope Lies in Young People"]

[Text] Young comrades: First, I extend to you congratulations on this festive day. By cordial invitation of ANHUI QINGNIAN BAO, I would like to tell you comrades about some of my experiences and my wishes on the eve of the 4 May Youth Day.

Young people have always been the vanguard of the revolution. On 4 May 1919, a world-shaking student movement broke out in Peiping. The students put forth the revolutionary slogan: "Externally, protect our sovereignty; domestically, get rid of traitors," there by holding high the great anti-imperialist and antifeudal banner. The May 4th movement prepared the ideological and organizational basis for our party's birth and opened a new page in the history of the Chinese revolution.

In the early 1930's, I was a young man about 20 years old, just as you are now. It was the great party and the belief in communism that enabled the young men then groping and agonizing in darkness to discover the bright road for our struggle. Like tens of thousands of other revolutionary young people, I plunged myself into the movement of anti-Japanese resistance and national salvation. I joined the CCP at a time when our country was in danger of being conquered. During the war of resistance against Japan, the party transferred me from Yanan to the Xian office of the Eighth Route Army. In the several years I was there, we received and sent to Yanan and revolutionary bases a large number of young people with high ideals, aspirations and ambitions. They had given up their comfortable life in cities to face indescribable hardships and steel themselves and grow up amidst the flames of war. Many of them sacrificed their very valuable lives. A number of comrades in the leading bodies of various levels today were among these young people then.

What was the motivating force behind their actions at that time? It was the patriotic passion for resisting Japan and the firm belief in communism. Whenever we survivors recall this today, we feel greatly encouraged to carry through to the end the cause not yet accomplished by those martyrs. However, our hope lies in the young people. Although there is a big difference in age between us, our ideal to serve the people is the same. We are all comrades and comrades in arms, and are contributing our meager efforts to our socialist motherland.

It is my earnest hope that young people will unswervingly follow the party and foster a firm belief in communism. At present, we must plunge ourselves into the campaign for building spiritual and material civilization. We should intensively conduct the five stresses and four beauties activities, deal fierce blows at serious crimes in the economic field, resist the corrosive influence of bourgeois ideals, foster a new-type generation and carry through to the end the cause of the revolution of the proletariat begun by such proletarian revolutionaries of the older generation as Mao Zedong, Liu Shaoqi, Zhou Enlai, Zhu De and others. Our hope lies in the masses of young people. I hope that you will all exert yourselves to become promising and useful persons and make still greater achievements.

BRIEFS

SHANDONG SPRING SOWING -- Shandong Province has made great progress in spring sowing. According to statistics compiled on 21 April, the province sowed over 13.5 million mu of various crops. The daily sowed acreage reached 1.7 million mu. The progress of the sowing this year is over 100 percent faster than in 1981, starting about 7 days earlier than in 1981. However, this spring operation requires the province to exert efforts to irrigate on a large scale and to apply more fertilizer. According to statistics, of over 48 million mu should be sowed by creating moisture, an increse of more than 8 million mu over the figure of the corresponding 1981 period. XINHUA INTERVIEWS CAAC DIRECTOR ON PLANE CRASH

HK070318 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1214 GMT 6 May 82

[Text] Beijing, 6 May (XINHUA) -- Our reporter interviewed Shen Tu, director of the Civil Aviation Administration of China (CAAC), who returned to Beijing via Guangzhou after visiting the scene of the accident of Flight CA 266 in Guilin, and asked him questions about the accident.

Question: How did this plane accident occur?

Answer: Flight CA 266 took off under suitable weather conditions, but unfortunately it crashed in the hilly district of Gongcheng 45 km from Guilin. We are organizing a panel of experts from various fields to make a careful study and carry out an objective, scientific and realistic analysis and study before drawing a correct conclusion. This is one of the most serious accidents in the history of civil aviation in China.

Among the 104 passengers who died, some were comrades who worked diligently and made contributions to China's four modernizations; some were dear compatriots from Hong Kong and Macao and Overseas Chinese; and some were foreign friends. All eight members of the crew also died in the crash. On behalf of the CAAC and its entire staff, I express deep mourning for those who died. I also express sincere condolences to the families of the deceased. With deep grief and sorrow, I and my associates are taking up the work of dealing with the aftermath of the crash.

Question: What is the situation regarding clearing of the scene of the accident and removal of the victims?

Answer: Our party and government have attached great importance to this accident. For the sake of dealing with problems arising from the accident, Vice Premier Wan Li called a special meeting of the responsible members of departments concerned 4 hours after the accident. I immediately rushed to Guilin from Beijing, and together with Shi Qingsheng, vice chairman of the Guangxi Zhuang Autonomous Region, the responsible comrades of the municipality and county, drew up a plan and organized a search of the area. Wang Fulin, deputy secretary general of the State Council, visited the scene on the second day. The Guangzhou PLA units also sent more than 600 personnel to comb the area where the accident took place. They surmounted such difficulties as rugged hills, dense forests and rain and carefully looked for the remains and belongings of the victims scattered over seven rugged hills in an area 3 km long and 2 km wide. Within 3 days, they discovered the remains of 104 victims in a relatively complete state as well as some incomplete remains. After reconstruction and preservation, the remains were flown to Guangzhou by special plane. At present, the departments concerned of Guangdong Province and the CAAC are organizing the families of the victims to identify the remains and belongings and to deal with problems resulting from the accident.

Question: How about the question of compensation?

Answer: Compensation will be made to the families of the victims at preferential rates, according to international and domestic rules and CAAC regulations. Our government is a signatory to the 1929 Warsaw Convention on international air transport and the revised 1955 Warsaw Convention signed in The Hague in 1955. We will live up to this commitment.

According to point 1 of Article 22 of the Warsaw Convention signed in The Hague, victims of air accidents on international routes will be paid 250,000 francs. Point 5 of Article 22 of the same revised convention and the Chinese rule is $20,000. All passengers on board Flight CA 266 carried tickets for a domestic flight from Guangzhou to Guilin. However, our government has taken into consideration the conditions and environment in which the Hong Kong and Macao compatriots, Overseas Chinese and foreigners lived, and decided to pay a preferential compensation rate of $20,000 per person according to the standard of the convention. As for luggage, all those with value declared beforehand will be compensated according to the value declared. Those without declared value will be compensated 250 francs (or $20) per kilo. Compensation for hand luggage and other property cannot exceed $400. If under $400, compensation will be based on actual value. The compensation of domestic passengers is governed by domestic rules and regulations, but they will also be paid a preferential rate. Anyone who claims the compensation will have to go through certain legal procedures to obtain it.

Question: What safety measures is the CAAC going to take in the future?

Answer: Although there are still some shortcomings in the service of the CAAC, it has a long safety record and enjoys a very high reputation for safety both at home and abroad. After this crash, the CAAC has adopted a series of measures to ensure air safety and called on all personnel to conscientiously sum up experiences and lessons, strictly observe the responsibility system and conscientiously implement rules and regulations. Leading members at various levels have extensively gone to the basic level, and sent their most experienced technicians and leadership cadres to ride on planes and check on the implementation of safety measures everywhere. At present, the condition of aviation transportation throughout the country is normal. We must do all we can to ensure air safety.

HAINAN'S LUO TIAN ON STUDY OF DRAFT CONSTITUTION

HK060741 Haikou Hainan Island Service in Mandarin 0330 GMT 5 May 82

[Summary] The Hainan Regional CCP Committee Standing Committee held a meeting on 3 May to discuss the draft of the revised constitution and make arrangements for the entire region to study and revise the draft. The participants held that: "the discussion of the draft by people of all nationalities is an important event in China's political life. It is a concrete expression of socialist democracy." After conscientious discussion, the participants deepened their understanding of the reform of China's socialist economic structure and state apparatus.

Luo Tian, first secretary of the regional CCP committee, put forth the following three-point requirement for the entire region to publicize, study and discuss the draft: "1) CCP committees and political and judicial departments at various levels must conscientiously implement the spirit of the circular on studying the draft of the revised constitution issued by the provincial CCP committee and take the lead in study and discussion. 2) It is necessary to extensively and deeply publicize the draft of the revised constitution so that everyone will understand it. 3) It is necessary to make study and discussion a motive force in the building of socialist spiritual and material civilizations. All units and departments must integrate study with reality and solve existing problems in the units and departments."

HENAN RADIO URGES DROUGHT RESISTANCE MEASURES

HK070800 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 6 May 82

[Station commentary: "Act With Great Urgency, Rise To Resist Drought and Protect Wheat Growing"]

[Summary] In Henan Province, drought has been gradually extending from the north to the south since April. In the past few days, it has become more serious because of strong winds which caused severe evaporation of moisture in the soil. Now moisture content of the soil is about 10 percent in most parts of our province, and in some areas it is below 10 percent. This constitutes a great threat to wheat growing and sowing of autumn crops. At present it brooks no delay for the party and people to rise to combat drought, protect wheat growing and ensure sowing of autumn crops. Since the coming of spring, successes have been scored in amy localities in cultivating wheatfields, in preparing the soil for spring sowing and in protecting wheat growing, particularly in drought areas. However, we must be aware that leaders of some localities lack sufficient understanding of the urgency and importance of this combat task and are slow-moving. Some are afraid of difficulties, and some are relying on luck. At any rate, they are not quite ready to fight against drought and gain victory in actively reaping harvests. Moreover, in some places, water is running off in large quantities and is not channeled into farmland. Now, as summer begin, wheat needs ample water for growing, and it is also time for sowing autumn crops. Therefore, now is the time to take action to fight against drought, which decides the size of harvests in agricultural production for the entire year. One should never be indifferent to it, as it has an important bearing on the national economy and people's livelihood.

Party and government organs at various levels should organize more forces to go to the forefront in fighting against drought. It is necessary to further propagate and implement the essential points of the No 1 circular issued by the central authorities. Meanwhile, it is necessary to bring into full play the role of all irrigation facilities, to develop water resources by all means and to conserve as much water as possible. It is also necessary to do well in supplying materials to fight against drought, and particularly rationally distributing oil.

During the time of drought resistance, we must see all advantages. As long as we go into action immediately, we are sure to win in withstanding drought and reaping all-round bumper agricultural harvests this year.

HUNAN MEETING ON PEOPLE'S CONGRESS COMMITTEES

HK060303 Changsha Hunan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2310 GMT 5 May 82

[Text] A provincial symposium on the work of people's congress standing committees of autonomous prefectures, municipalities, counties and urban districts was held in Changsha from 28 April - 5 May.

Some 200 persons attended the meeting. The participants studied and discussed the draft revised constitution and relevant central documents. Representatives of more than 20 units discussed their experiences. Provincial CCP committee First Secretary Mao Zhiyong and provincial people's congress standing committee Chairman Wan Da spoke at the meeting.

The meeting held: The people's congress standing committees at all levels in Hunan have done much work since their establishment. They have accumulated some initial experiences. In order to bring into further play the functional roles of the local state power organs in the new historical period, it is essential to firmly establish in ideological understanding the legal status and authority of the people's congress standing committees at all levels. These committees must do a good job in supervising the people's government, court and procuratorate at the corresponding level.

The meeting demanded that the CCP committees at all levels respect and support the work of the people's congress standing committees and persistently act according to law, in accordance with the spirit of democracy. The people's government, courts and procuratorates at all levels must be responsible to the people's congress standing committees at the corresponding levels, take the initiative in reporting to them on their work and spontaneously accept their supervision.

The meeting pointed out: At present, the people's congress standing committees at all levels must regard mobilizing and organizing the masses to discuss the draft revised constitution as a leading task and tackle it thoroughly. They must ensure that the basic spirit and contents of the draft revised constitution are known to and understood by everyone. By carrying out discussions among all the people, they should lay an excellent foundation for further bringing socialist democracy into play and putting the socialist legal system on a sound basis in the future, and thus promote the advance of all work.

HUNAN RIBAO REPORTS ON RURAL LOAN PROBLEMS

[Text] The 6 May HUNAN RIBAO, on page 1, carried a letter from Comrades (Luo Xiaoshu), (Wang Jisong) and (Tang Zhennan) proposing that it is essential to solve problems in issuing of loans for agriculture.

The letter said: We recently went to Chenqi County to investigate and find out about the situation in issuing agricultural loans. We found that there is a "two many and one few" trend in this work. First, there are many loans for nonproductive purposes. Certain credit and loan departments have the idea of simply making a profit, and think that they can make more profit by issuing high-interest loans. Second, many loans are issued to people who strike up connections with the credit and loan departments. Some cadres in these departments make use of loans to strike up connections. Few loans are issued to households in difficulties. There are about 11,000 households seriously short of production capital. This figure accounts for about 15 percent of the total number of rural households in the county. Some credit and loan cadres consider only the capacity of people to repay loans and are thus unwilling to lend money to households in difficulties.

Due to the problems in the issuance and management of agricultural loans in the previous period, this county has now exceeded its loan quota by 820,000 yuan. However, according to an investigation of typical cases, it will be necessary to lend a further 3 million yuan to the peasants from now to the end of July in order to meet urgent needs for production materials such as draft oxen, farm tools, chemical fertilizer, agricultural chemicals and so on; otherwise, production will be affected.

In order to solve this problem, the county bank has convened an urgent meeting attended by responsible comrades of credit cooperatives. It has taught the cadres to clearly understand the guiding ideology in supporting agriculture, improve their business work style, strictly control nonproductive loans and recover some loans that were made incorrectly.

BEIJING'S DUAN JUNYI DISCUSSES MILITIA WORK

HK060921 Beijing City Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 24 Apr 82

[Text] In his speech at the forum on militia work held in Beijing Municipality on 23 April, Duan Junyi, first secretary of the Beijing Municipal CCP Committee and first political commissar of the Beijing Garrison, pointed out: Carrying forward our party's glorious tradition of grasping the armed forces, we must make further efforts to build up the militia of our captial and bring into play the backbone role of the militia in building material and spiritual civilization.

The forum on militia work was held 22-23 April under the joint sponsorship of the Beijing Municipal CCP Committee and People's Government and the Beijing Garrison. It was attended by more than 100 persons, including CCP committee secretaries of all districts and counties who are concurrently first political commissars of people's armed forces departments. There were also commanders and political commissars of people's armed forces departments, as well as responsible persons of the departments, committees and offices concerned of the Beijing Municipal CCP Committee and government. The forum summed up and exchanged experiences on how to strengthen party leadership over militia work and how to do a good job under new circumstances. It also discussed and studied new conditions and problems that have arisen in present militia work, and defined the future tasks and orientation of the work.

Speaking at the forum, Comrade Duan Junyi said: During both the war years and the time of peaceful construction, the militia has always been an important force to be reckoned with. Strengthening the militia is our party's long-term strategic task. We need the militia both in building and safeguarding the four modernizations. The tendency to look down on militia work is wrong. In his speech, Comrade Duan Junyi stressed the necessity of giving a proper place to militia work in the work of CCP committees, putting it on the agenda and promptly studying the new situation and solving new problems arising in the militia work. He said that we must strengthen political and ideological work among the militia, and militia work must be put on a sound basis organizationally, politically and militarily. At present, we must, in particular, educate the militia to combat the corrosive bourgeois influence and make steady advances in building up the militia of our capital.

Tang Ming, adviser of the Beijing PLA units; Chen Xitong, executive secretary of the Beijing Municipal CCP Committee; Pan Yan, commander of the Beijing Garrison; Second Political Commissar Wu Lie and Deputy Political Commissar (Huang Yijun) also spoke at the forum. Wang Xian, secretary of the municipal CCP committee, and Li Zhongxuan, political commissar of the garrison, also attended the forum.

HEBEI COUNTY OVERCOMES CULTURAL REVOLUTION LEGACY

HK060731 Shijiazhuang Hebei Provincial Service in Mandarin 0400 GMT 26 Apr 82

[Text] According to this station's reporter (Li Wenhuai), the Xiong County CCP Committee has conscientiously implemented the spirit of the party's third and sixth plenary sessions, criticized leftist mistakes, trusted and relied on vast numbers of cadres and the masses, implemented policies in a truth-seeking way, redressed miscarriages of justice, trumped-up cases and misjudged cases, solved problems left over by leftist influence, eliminated factionalism and promoted unity. As a result, the situation, which had been chaotic for many years, is taking a favorable turn. The entire county is now in an excellent situation characterized by stability, unity and enthusiasm for promoting work.

During the Great Cultural Revolution, Xiong County was troubled by serious factionalism and things were tossed about many times in the county later on. Although several attempts were made to solve many problems, including problems left over by history, no major successes were achieved. As a result, various types of work suffered heavy losses. Since the party's sixth plenary session, with the energetic support of the party committee at a higher level, the Xiong County CCP Committee has conscientiously organized cadres throughout the county to study the spirit of the third plenary session and the resolution adopted at the sixth plenary session.

It has also organized them to criticize leftist mistakes in close connection with reality, thus gradually achieving unity in thinking among leaders at all levels and the vast numbers of cadres and the masses under the guidance of the spirit of the third and sixth plenary sessions. The vast numbers of cadres and the masses have achieved the understanding that drawing demarcation lines between people, being correct from beginning to end and factional remnants are products of the Great Cultural Revolution and are also leftists things. They have also achieved the understanding that the Great Cultural Revolution was a civil strife and a catastrophe. The so-called correct line did not exist at all, and there was simply no such thing as being correct from beginning to end. In that period, people simply could not argue on just grounds.

On the basis of heightening their political consciousness, the vast numbers of cadres and the masses have reached a unanimous view on several major issues which had been debated endlessly over a long period of time.

To promote the development of the situation, the Xiong County CCP Committee has adhered to the cadre line in appointing people on their merits, and has conscientiously reshuffled leading groups at all levels. The county has reshuffled 24 departments and bureaus at county and commune levels and 17 leading groups at commune level. The jobs of 143 cadres have been readjusted. Of these 143 cadres, 87 have been transferred to posts of similar grades, 37 have been promoted to higher ranks and 19 have been removed from office or demoted.

Xiong County has firmly grasped the work of redressing miscarriages of justice, trumped-up cases and misjudged cases and adopted effective measures for promoting the work, thus bringing every positive factor into full play. Leftist mistakes have exerted a relatively great influence on Xiong County over a relatively long period of time. Moreover, things were tossed about many times in the county. As a result, there were relatively more miscarriages of justice, trumped-up cases and misjudged cases in the county. To implement policies as quickly as possible, party committees at all levels have consistently adhered to the mass line and gone all out to mobilize the masses, thus quickly finding out about the real situation. In the process of implementing policies, party committees at all levels met difficulties head-on, actively solved problems on their own initiative, did not shift responsibility onto others and did not dodge difficulties, thus quickening the pace of implementing policies. At present, the county does not have a single case that higher authorities demand be completed.

Through the redressing of the miscarriages of justice, trumped-up cases and misjudged cases and the implementation of policies, the county has really strengthened unity and mobilized the people's enthusiasm. The county CCP committee has concentrated its energy on consolidating and reorganizing leading groups of brigades and production teams throughout the county since the beginning of this year. Of the county's 702 paralyzed and semiparalyzed production teams, 692 have been dealt with successfully, thus further perfecting the county's agricultural production responsibility system and mobilizing the enthusiasm of cadres and commune members for promoting production. At present, all communes and brigades in the county are actively fighting a drought and irrigating their wheatfields. They are working hard in order to reap a good harvest this summer.

JILIN'S QIANG XIAOCHU AT UNITED FRONT CONFERENCE

[Excerpts] The provincial conference on united front work sponsored by the provincial CCP committee concluded today after an 8-day session. Attending the conference were leaders of the provincial CCP committee, including Comrades Qiang Xiaochu, Zhang Gensheng, (Zhao Xiu) and Li Diping. Comrades Qiang Xiaochu and Li Diping addressed the conference.

The conference was presided over by Comrade Li Diping. Comrade Song Renyuan delivered a report entitled "Enhance People's Understanding, Keep Abreast of the Current Situation and Do a Good Job in Improving the United Front Work."

The conference stressed that the united front is still one of our party's three magic weapons in the new historical period. To fulfill the great historical tasks in the new period, we must continue to develop the patriotic united front. We must do a good job in publicizing education on theories and policies of the united front, allow all democratic parties and mass organizations concerned to carry out their work independently and with the initiative in their own hands, implement all policies concerning the united front work and make proper arrangements for nonparty personages. Party committees at all levels must genuinely strengthen leadership over the united front work, and secretaries in charge of this work must assume personal responsibility in the work. Efforts must be made to do a good job in implementing the policy on intellectuals and adopt vigorous measures to properly solve problems arising thereform. We must publicize the principles and policies concerning the propaganda work directed toward Taiwan, maintain unity and cooperation between party members and nonparty personages and cadres, establish relations of devotion among them, mobilize all forces that can be united and make new contributions to building the socialist material and spiritual civilizations and realizing the return of Taiwan to the motherland at an early date.

JILIN ABOLISHES 43 'TEMPORARY' ORGANIZATIONS

SK070814 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 6 May 82

[Text] According to JILIN RIBAO, the provincial CCP committee and people's government decided to abolish 43 newly instituted or temporary organizations at the provincial level, and issued a circular to that effect on 23 April.

The circular states: There are 80 newly instituted or temporary organizations founded by the provincial CCP committee and people's government. These organizations have played a proper role in intensifying specific leadership over some work and in coordinating certain departments to accomplish particular tasks. However, quite a few problems exist. They are mainly the overlapping and overstaffing of administrative organizations, which hamper the full exertion of their functions. Therefore, simplifying newly instituted or temporary organizations is imperative under the circumstances. The work and tasks of the 43 abolished organizations should be transferred to relevant permanent administrative organizations. In the future, when major issues and tasks which require coordinated efforts of relevant departments arise, the competent department should call the relevant departments together to solve them through discussion. When opinions differ, the competent department should submit them to the provincial CCP committee or the provincial people's government for examination. Principal leading comrades in charge of the work of the secretary general or deputy secretary general of the provincial CCP committee and people's government should then convene the relevant departments to find a solution.

Temporary organizations assigned temporary tasks should be abolished once the tasks are accomplished. In the future, no temporary organization should be founded to undertake major tasks or temporary assignments which can be assumed by permanent organizations. If a temporary organization is absolutely necessary, a submission must be made to the provincial CCP committee or the people's government for approval, depending on whether the proposed temporary organization is a party or government unit. It is forbidden to set up an administrative body without authorized staff on one's own.

NINGXIA HOLDS PLANNED PARENTHOOD MEETING

[Report: "Regional Planned Parenthood Work Conference Held in Yinchuan"]

[Excerpts] A regional planned parenthood work conference was held in Yinchuan 21-23 April with the aim of better controlling population and further promoting planned parenthood work in the region. Over 80 responsible comrades and planned parenthood cadres from all prefectures, municipalities and counties in Ningxia attended the meeting. They studied central documents on planned parenthood and discussed and put forward revisions of the region's provisional planned parenthood regulations. Regional CCP committee First Secretary Li Xuezhi and regional government Chairman Ma Xin spoke at the meeting. Regional government Vice Chairman Li Shumin presided and gave a summation.

Ningxia has scored a certain degreee of success in planned parenthood work in recent years. The natural population growth rate fell from 32.55 per 1,000 in 1972 to 19.56 per 1,000 in 1981. The rate fell by 12.22 per 1,000 in 9 years.

The conference held: Although the region has scored a certain degree of success in planned parenthood work, its natural population growth rate remains the highest in the country. A tendency for the population growth rate to rise from decline has also appeared since last year. The main reasons for this are as follows: The leaders of certain units fail to sufficiently understand the strategic importance of planned parenthood work, fail to tackle it properly, harbor fear of difficulties and fail to implement plans, rewards and penalties; the notions of "regarding men as superior to women" and "carrying on the family line" have not been eliminated, and this is a hindrance to the smooth progress of planned parenthood work; some people hold that Ningxia is spacious, with a sparse population, so having more children does not matter; since the rural areas instituted production responsibility systems, they have lacked effective measures for population control in the new situation, and the phenomenon of laissez-faire attitudes has appeared; and following the implementation of the marriage law, there has been a continual increase in the number of marriages because the marriageable age is now lower than the age advocated for late marriage.

In the face of these new situations and problems in planned parenthood work, the conference demanded that leaders at all levels attach great importance to the work, get rid of fear of difficulties and be resolved to get a thoroughly good grasp of the work. It is necessary to organize a planned parenthood force and make use of all propaganda media to create public opinion in a big way. The conference held: We must focus planned parenthood work on the rural areas. It is all the more essential to strengthen leadership and improve work in remote mountain areas and places where planned parenthood work is backward. It is necessary to strictly enforce the policies and regulations on planned parenthood.

SHAANXI DISCUSSES, STRESSES FLOOD CONTROL WORK

Flood Control Conference

HK061057 Xian Shanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 5 May 82

[Summary] A flood control work conference was recently held at provincial level. The conference demanded that the entire province mobilize to grasp preparatory work in all fields for this year's flood prevention. It also pointed out that the task of flood control for the province is very heavy and difficult this year. All must be on full alert and keep in mind the flood disaster of last year. Education of cadres and the masses of people in heightening their vigilance and overcoming the idea of leaving things to chance must be strengthened so that they can do well in all preventive work on a solid basis.

For this purpose, the conference put forth the following four demands: 1) It is necessary to make an immediate examination of all water retention projects and solve problems as soon as possible. 2) Measures must be intensified for flood and water-logging prevention. 3) All hydrographic stations and observatories should coordinate to exchange information. 4) CCP committees and people's governments at all levels should place the flood contr l work on their work agenda and earnestly strengthen their leadership. '

Xie Huaide, secretary of the provincial CCP committee, and Vice Governor Bai Jinian attended and spoke at the conference.

Radio Commentary

HK061059 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 5 May 82

[Station commentary: "Mobilize Immediately and Do Well in Flood Control"]

[Summary] The flood session is now approaching, first in the southern parts of Shaanxi and then in the central Shaanxi plain and northern Shaanxi. All places must be galvanized into action to do a good job of flood prevention. Last year, southern Shaanxi and the central Shaanxi plain were hit by severe rainstorms and flood disasters, which caused our country great losses in economic construction and in lives and property of the people. By virtue of this lesson, attention has been drawn to this year's flood control work in most places in our province. However, as a whole, there is still a lack of vigilance and fear of difficulties in some places. This has affected the flood prevention work, and must be overcome immediately. According to recent weather forecasts, there will be heavy rainfall along the Chang Jiang, and a fairly big flood is expected during the coming high water season. This is why we must strengthen our preventive measures. This is especially true in our province, where certain water retention projects which were damaged by last year's floods are still being repaired. This makes our flood control work this year much more difficult than before.

All people must be prepared for major floods and severe calamities so as to do well in the flood control work. At the same time, leaders at all levels must attach great importance to this work and go to the forefront to study and solve problems.

SHAANXI RIBAO ON APPOINTING COMPETENT PEOPLE

HK210216 Xian SHAANXI RIBAO in Chinese 10 Apr 82 p 2

["Weekly Commentary" by Liu Songyang [2692 2646 2799]: "We Must Appoint Able and Competent People to Posts"]

[Text] In his report on structural reforms, Comrade Zhao Ziyang treated "appointing able and competent people to leading groups and building them up properly" as an important issue to settle. He demanded that we should make leading groups at all levels strong and combat-worthy by appointing to them people who are "revolutionary and young and possess general knowledge and professional knowledge." Viewed from results in practice, all localities and units whose leading groups have been formed in accordance with the criteria of appointing able and competent people to posts as put forth by the CCP Central Committee will soon take on a gratifying look and everyone will rouse himself for vigorous efforts to make the country prosperous. On the other hand, all localities and units whose leading groups have not been formed in this way or have not been properly formed in this way will have difficulty in making improvement.

In the past 2 years, CCP committees at all levels in our province have done much work in selecting and promoting fine young and middle-aged cadres, and have taken new steps. However, this is still a far cry from achieving the party's demand.

In some leading groups, the members have not yet roused themselves. They are relatively too advanced in age and their cultural level is ostensively too low. There are few professional and technical cadres in these leading groups. No relative changes have occurred in them. There are many reasons for the slow progress in work in this respect, but the main one is the erroneous views and methods of cadres. Some comrades attach too much importance to qualifications and record of service. They seldom think of problems resulting from age and health. They reckon that young cadres lack basic training and the ability to command. Some comrades appoint people by favoritism and like vulgar and obsequious people who are only good at flattering them, and do not appoint those who have real ability and learning, dare to uphold truth, cast aside considerations of saving face and are selfless and fearless. Some comrades only have faith in themselves and have no faith in the masses. They only consider a handful of people they know and do not select from among a large number of people with whom the masses are familiar. Others consider their own interests in appointing cadres. As a result, able and competent people who are really qualified are prevented from being appointed, whereas some unqualified people are thus able to enter leading groups. This erroneous practice in appointing people by favoritism runs counter to the party's line of appointing people on their merits and is extremely harmful to the party's cause.

It is an important political task of party organizations and leading cadres at all levels to do a good job in reorganizing and building leading groups at respective levels. We must fulfill this glorious historical mission with flying colors. There are three very important points in fulfilling this mission. The first is to maintain the party spirit, eliminate factionalism, be selfless, adhere to the letter of the criteria for appointing cadres as put forth by the CCP Central Committee and strive to appoint able and competent people, who may even be our relatives or people bearing us a grudge. The second point is to truly adhere to the mass line. The cause undertaken by the party is the cause of the millions of people. Only by listening extensively to the views of the masses can we appoint able and competent people to work for the party's cause and for our country's prosperity without personal considerations or jealousy. The third is to pay attention to who will be removed and, in particular, who will be added to a new leading group. Three categories of people should never be allowed to be in leading groups -- those who followed Lin Biao and Jiang Qing to rebel and make their fortune; those who are seriously influenced by factionalism; and smashers and grabbers and those who resist the line, principles and policies formulated since the third plenary session. Once any of them are found to have sneaked in, we should resolutely clear them out in order to ensure the political and organizational purity of leading groups at all levels and to ensure smooth implementation of the party's line, principles and policies.

Reorganizing and building well leading groups at all levels involves the extremely important question of whether or not we will be able to uphold party leadership, and ensure the continuity of the party's Marxist line and smooth realization of socialist modernization. CCP committees and organizational departments at all levels must look upon this as a matter of great importance and seriously do a good job in this respect. We must never lower our guard and treat it lightly.

LIAO CHENGZHI ON SPECIAL ADMINISTRATIVE REGIONS

OW051730 Beijing XINHUA in English 1641 GMT 5 May 82

[Text] Beijing, 5 May (XINHUA) -- "The cause of reunifying the motherland will be realized and can be realized. Efforts should be made to promote the realization," said Liao Chengzhi, vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress, here today in a meeting with Taiwan compatriots in Beijing for International Labor Day celebrations.

Vice-Chairman Liao said: "At present, both the domestic and international situations are fine, although some people are trying to obstruct the reunification, but the wheel of history is irresistible."

He said article 30 of the just-published draft of the revised Constitution of the People's Republic of China stipulates that the state may, where necessary, establish special administrative regions. [Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese at 1251 GMT on 5 May, in a similar report on Liao Chengzhi's remarks, uses the vernacular "te bie xing zheng qu 3676 5887 2398 0575"] The rules and regulations in force in special administrative regions shall be stipulated by law according to specific conditions, he said.

After the return of Taiwan to the motherland, Liao Chengzhi said, everything will be done in line with the nine-point statement concerning the peaceful reunification of the motherland made by Ye Jianying, chairman of the National People's Congress Standing Committee, on September 30 last year. He said: "Some day, and most probably in the 1980's, Taiwan compatriots on the mainland will be able to return to their native places to join their friends and relatives."

Liao urged government departments at various levels to show more concern for Taiwan compatriots' work and life, and pay serious attention to the implementation of the policies toward them, he said.

Vice-Chairman Liao joined the compatriots in a get-together to mark International Labor Day.

More than 30 Taiwan compatriots from 28 provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions participated in the get-together at the invitation of the All-China Federation of Taiwan Compatriots. The compatriots included workers, peasants, former industrialists and merchants, doctors, actors, cadres, teachers and associate professors, scientific research and technical personnel and retirees. Most of them have lived on the mainland for more than 20 years. The get-together was organized by the Beijing Federation of Taiwan Compatriots.

Also present at the get-together were leaders of related departments, Wang Feng, Li Gui, Lin Liyun, Cai Xiao and Ye Zilong.

BEIJING VIEWS DRAFT CONVENTION ON LAW OF SEA

OW080207 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 6 May 82

["International Current Events" program commentary: "First Step in Establishing a New Order of the Sea"]

[Excerpts] On 30 April, the 11th Session of the 3d UN Conference on the Law of the Sea adopted by an overwhelming majority vote the draft convention on the law of the sea, thus taking an important step toward establishing a new law and order of the sea. The convention's coming into being is the result of the protracted struggle of Third World countries for equal rights to the sea and against the superpowers' domination of the oceans.

In the course of the formulation of the convention on the law of the sea, the two superpowers, the Soviet Union and the United States, placed obstacles and employed tricks on a series of important issues of principle, attempting to force their maritime hegemonist trash on others. For example, the Soviet Union and the United States tried their utmost to limit and reduce the width of territorial waters, opposed the establishment of 200-nautical-mile exclusive economic zones, advocated free passage through straits, attempted to exploit and monopolize international seabed resources at will with their money and advanced technology, and so forth. So the struggle was very complicated from the beginning of the conference.

The 11th Session of the 3d UN Conference on the Law of the Sea was convened on 8 March this year. The United States put forward a green paper at the meeting, proposing 230 amendments to the draft convention, including many changes that involved matters of principle. This disgusting U.S. attitude in violation of the spirit of the conference naturally met with opposition by Third World countries and also incurred dissatisfaction and criticism from other participating countries at the conference. The United States voted against the draft convention. It still clung to the six amendments it proposed with regard to provisions in the convention concerning exploitation of deep seabed resources. It indicated that unless the amendments are accepted, the United States would not ratify the convention. The six amendments insisted upon by the United States in fact deny the principle that the seabed under international waters is the hereditary property of all mankind and are aimed at enabling the United States to exploit deep seabed resources without restriction. The Reagan administration also threatened that if the U.S. amendments were rejected, the United States was prepared to sign a small treaty to oppose the draft convention outside of the conference with seven industrial countries including Britain, France, West Germany, Italy and so forth.

These facts show that to establish a new law and order of the sea to safeguard equal rights for all countries, many obstacles remain to be overcome and it is necessary to continue the struggle. However, in the source of events from the drawing up to the final adoption of the draft convention on the law of the sea, it can be seen that no country will ever succeed in attempting to ignore the Third World's legitimate interests and seek maritime hegemony. Only by adopting a lawful and cooperative approach and by consultations and negotiations will it be possible to resolve disputes.

CONCLUDING REPORTAGE ON VISIT OF GEORGE BUSH

Zhao Ziyang Hosts Banquet

OW071510 Beijing XINHUA in English 1500 GMT 7 May 82

[Text] Beijing, May 7 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang gave a banquet at the Great Hall of the People here this evening in honor of George Bush, vice president of the United States of America, Mrs. Bush and their party. Wan Li, Chinese vice-premier, and Huang Hua, state councillor and foreign minister, attended the banquet.

In his toast, Zhao Ziyang said: "Since the issuance of the Shanghai joint communique, Sino-U.S. relations have made a major breakthrough with the normalization of the relations between the two countries. In the past decade, progress has been achieved in many areas of our bilateral relations. The facts show that this is not only in the interests of the Chinese and American peoples but also conducive to peace and stability in the world. Therefore, it has been warmly welcomed by the people of our two countries and world opinion. The Chinese people attach importance to their relations with the United States and desire to see Sino-U.S. relations continue to move forward. We believe that this desire is shared by the American people." He added: "We both recognize that there exist serious obstacles in the present Sino-U.S. relations. At this critical juncture, Vice-President Bush, as entrusted by President Reagan, has come to discuss with us issues of mutual concern. This is no doubt an important visit. We are ready to have a frank and sincere [The transliteration for "sincere" as taken from the Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese version at 1524 GMT on 7 May is: cheng zhi de 6134 2304 0966] exchange of views with the vice president and discuss ways to remove the obstacles in compliance with the principles as confirmed in the communique on the establishment of diplomatic relations between the two countries." China sincerely hopes that Vice-President Bush's visit will yield positive results, Zhao Ziyang said.

In his toast, Vice-President Bush said: "President Reagan asked me to come to China because of the vital importance he places on U.S.-China relations and because of his strong personal commitment to building an enduring relationship -- one based on equality and mutual trust and understanding." The vice-president said the United States acknowledges China's position that there is but one China and that Taiwan is a part of China. "We stand by the principles agreed upon by our government [The Beijing XINHUA Domestic Chinese verion reads: "We stand by the principles established by our government..."] in the joint communique on the establishment of diplomatic relations. We respect China's sovereignty and territorial integrity," he said. "We recognize that there are issues of difference to be discussed, and important ideas to be exchanged. My visit is a symbol of the good faith with which we seek to bridge differences," he said.

Also present at the banquet were Zhou Peiyuan, vice-chairman of the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference; Zhu Muzhi, minister of culture; and Huang Zhen and Hao Deqing, leading members of departments concerned. Arthur W. Hummel, Jr., U.S. ambassador to China, was among the guests.

REAGAN PROPOSES EARLY NUCLEAR ARMS NEGOTIATIONS

OW100808 Beijing XINHUA in English 0755 GMT 10 May 82

[Text] Washington, May 9 (XINHUA) — U.S. President Ronald Reagan today proposed to begin by the end of June formal negotitions with the Soviet Union on the reduction of strategic nuclear arms. Addressing the graduating class of Eureka College, the President's alma mater, Reagan declared that the U.S. would propose a "practical phased reduction plan" under which, by the end of the first phase, long-range ballistic missile warheads would be reduced to equal ceilings at least a third below current levels and no more than half of those warheads would be land-based. In a second phase, he said, the U.S. would seek to achieve an equal ceiling on other elements of strategic nuclear forces, including limits on ballistic missile throw-weight at less than current American levels.

Reagan reiterated his hope that a future meeting with Soviet leader Brezhnev could be arranged "where positive results can be anticipated," if they could not meet in New York next month as originally proposed. "When we sit down, I will tell President Brezhnev that the United States is ready to build a new understanding," he said.

His address today was widely anticipated by observers here as his keynote speech to be delivered at the Versailles summit of seven industrial countries and the Bonn summit of NATO countries. It was also seen as "an effort to turn attention away from the anti-nuclear movement in the United States and Western Europe."

Reagan stressed in his address that "the Soviet Union has used arms control negotiations as an instrument to restrict U.S. defence programs and, in conjunction with their own arms build-up, a means to enhance Soviet power and prestige."

He recalled "the lessons of the past," saying that verifiability, equity and military significance should be the "firm criteria for arms control in the 1980's."

Explaining his "five-point program" for East-West relations, Reagan said it consists of "military balance, economic security, regional stability, arms reductions, and dialogue." "A sound East-West military balance is absolutely essential," he declared. "The Soviets must not have access to Western technology with military applications, and we must not subsidize the Soviet economy."

Reagan charged the Soviet Union for its "aggressiveness." "The Soviet Union continues to support Vietnam in its occupation of Kampuchea and its massive military presence in Laos. It is engaged in a war of aggression against Afghanistan. Soviet proxy forces have brought instability and conflict to Africa and Central America," he noted. He urged "a full Soviet withdrawal from Afghanistan," "withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola" and a halt of "Cuban activities in Central America."

U.S. UNEMPLOYMENT RATE AT ITS HIGHEST SINCE 1941

[Text] Washington, May 7 (XINHUA) -- Unemployment in the United States jumped to 9.4 percent in April -- the highest rate since 1941 -- with 10.3 million people out of work, the government announced here today. Unemployment has been worsening for several months because of the current economic recession. By March, the jobless rose to 9 percent, equal to the post-war record set in May 1975, the high point of the last severe recession. Some 9.9 million people were out of work in March.

The deepening economic recession which started last August hit the nation's manufactures the hardest, with unemployment among blue-collar workers reaching 13.7 percent in April, a record. Unemployment among adults, traditionally the most stable segment of the labor force, spurted to 8.2 percent, also a record high. Teen-age unemployment shot up to 23 percent and joblessness among blacks reached 18.4 percent, both records. Meanwhile the number of Americans forced to accept part-time employment exceeded 5.8 million -- the highest since the government began keeping such figures more than a decade ago. Economists here believed that there is no evidence that the recession has hit the bottom. They anticipated that unemployment may continue to climb over the next few months.

XINHUA Cites Criticism

[Text] Washington, May 8 (XINHUA) -- The nation's 9.4 percent post-war unemployment record released yesterday has invoked serious concern and widespread criticism of the worsening recession and the ineffectiveness of the administration's economic policies. In the bitter partisan hostilities, the House Democratic leadership has moved to tie Reagan administration policies to the rising unemployment. House Majority Leader James Wright likened economy under Reagan to a terminally ill patient, and Senator Kennedy described the unemployed as "Ronald Reagan's breadline." The administration's policies have brought "a record deficit, and now postwar unemployment," Kennedy said. [sentence as received]

The administration's policies at a time of rising unemployment have also been attacked by trade union leaders in different sections of the country. AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland said in Houston yesterday: "The President surrounds himself with economic quacks who practice their trade like the leech doctors of old who believe you can cure a patient of all ills by bleeding him to death."

Gerald McEntee, head of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, told a Michigan group that "the Reagan administration and its supporters in the state have been pulling the rug out from under the average working American."

Meanwhile, analyst Donald Straszheim noted that the latest job figures made it clear that the economy was "sinking rapidly in April." He predicted that figures to be published next week will show a "striking decline" in the nation's industrial output for April. James Capra, an industrial economist at the New York Federal Reserve Bank, said: "It is not a good situation. Not many forecasters had the unemployment rate topping out as high as 10 percent, but with this jump it could happen." He believed that the sharp rise in the jobless rate could mean a further decline in the gross national product in the current quarter.

The White House sought to place the best possible face on the bad news, calling it "disappointing" and saying that President Reagan "remains sensitive to the plight of the unemployed." However, White House Deputy Press Secretary Larry Speakes declined to predict when the employment picture might start to improve. President Reagan, in his weekly five-minute radio broadcast today, deplored the record unemployment rate in April, and urged Congress to "get off the dime" and pass the budget proposal approved by the Republican-led Senate Budget Committee and endorsed earlier this week by the President, which called for cuts of 40 billion dollars in social security and 95 billion dollars in new taxes over a period of three years. Something must be done about unemployment, he stressed.

BEIJING VIEWS EFFECTS OF U.S. ECONOMIC POLICIES

OW071423 Beijing in Mandarin to Taiwan 0400 GMT 6 May 82

[Radio talk: "What Does the Dollar Appreciation Show?"]

[Text] Recently the dollar has again appreciated in the international monetary market. In 1981, its value rose 18 percent against foreign currencies. Since the beginning of 1982, its value has steadily gone up. By the end of March, the Japanese yen had depreciated by more than 10 percent against the dollar. The British pound, French franc and West German mark have also depreciated against the dollar. Of course, the steady dollar appreciation has something to do with the turbulent international situation and the economic slumps in those countries. Nevertheless, an important reason is that the United States is adopting a high interest-rate policy to attract deposits by international monetary investors and thus raise the dollar's value. The steady dollar appreciation has aroused international condemnation. Japan and West European countries are extremely dissatisfied with the U.S. high interest-rate policy. They unanimously criticize it for delaying the restoration of economic prosperity and are determined to protect their currencies.

At the same time, the dollar appreciation has not won much acclaim at home either. The high interest-rate policy adopted by the Reagan administration has caused the United States to be flooded with foreign circulating funds. It is reported that 20 percent of the more than $340 billion bank loans extended to industries and commerce by the middle of 1981 came from foreign banks. The Americans are worrying that if things go on like this, it will bring calamity to the United States. Therefore, some major newspapers in the United States have recently issued one warning after another and opposed excessive dollar appreciation. At the same time, they have called for stopping large amounts of foreign speculative, idle money from entering the United States and causing trouble.

The dollar appreciation has also caused endless anxieties and grievances in U.S. economic circles. Because of the appreciation, American products, priced in dollars, will be sold at higher prices in local currency on a foreign market. Conversely, the depreciation of a foreign currency will make the products of that country cheaper on the U.S. market.

As a Japanese car is, on an average, $1,800 cheaper than its American equivalent on the U.S. market, the steady dollar appreciation against the Japanese yen will, of course, put the American automobile industry in a still more unfavorable position.

In the past year or so, the United States has had an economic slump and decreasing productivity. In 1981, it had a trade deficit amounting to $39.7 billion. The 1982 deficit is estimated to be even worse. The U.S. financial deficit is also steadily rising. President Reagan's budget report estimates that the 1983 financial deficit will be $91.5 billion, but the Congressional Budget Office estimates that it may reach as high as $150 billion. The United States cannot increase its currency in circulation because it wants to curb inflation. Fro this reason, the Reagan administration has to raise interest rates to borrow a large amount of money from the monetary market. At present, the United States has a heavy burden of national debt, amounting to $1,000 billion. The reality of the United States behind the dollar appreciation is that it is beset with contradictions and crises and is strong in appearance but weak in fact.

[Text] Bangkok, May 9 (XINHUA) -- Foreign Minister Sitthi Sawetsila of Thailand left here this morning for a five-day official visit to China.

In his statement prior to his departure at the airport, Sitthi told reporters that during his current visit to China he will meet Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang and Foreign Minister Huang Hua and exchange views on Kampuchea and other important issues. He said he will also have a meeting with Samdech Norodom Sihanouk in Beijing to discuss the formation of a coalition government by the three resistance forces of Kampuchea. "I hope that the coalition government can be set up and believe that this will succeed some day," the Thai foreign minister said.

Sitthi Interviewed on Visit

OW071327 Beijing XINHUA in English 1249 GMT 7 May 82

[Text] Bangkok, May 6 (XINHUA) -- The Kampuchean problem will continue to be the main topic at the foreign ministers' meeting of the Association of South East Asian Nations (ASEAN) scheduled for mid-June. The meeting will stick to the proposals for solving the Kampuchean problem ASEAN have already put forward at the United Nations instead of submitting new ones. These remarks were made by Thai Foreign Minister Sitthi Sawetsila during an interview with Chinese correspondents at his office here this morning on the eve of his forthcoming China visit.

What is important now, Sitthi said, is how to put the U.N. resolutions into effect. Thailand and the other ASEAN countries will adhere to the principle of supporting Democratic Kampuchea's seat in the U.N., and there will be no change in this respect.

On the forthcoming ASEAN foreign ministers' meeting, Sitthi said the meeting in Singapore will devote most of the time to discussing regional problems and various issues relating to ASEAN and will make efforts to seek solutions to these issues. Speaking about the dialogue between ASEAN foreign ministers and foreign ministers of the United States, Japan, Australia, New Zealand and Canada as well as the EEC Commission chairman following the Singapore meeting, Sitthi said he hoped that fruitful cooperation between ASEAN and these countries will benefit ASEAN's work in the next session of the U.N. General Assembly. He said ASEAN is now united and therefore respected by many countries.

Sitthi described the Kampuchean problem as "the most important political issue" of the region. He said ASEAN hopes for regional peace and stability and the establishment of a zone of peace, freedom and neutrality in the area. However, he added, so long as the Kampuchean problem exists, ASEAN countries can neither fulfil their aspirations, nor can they devote all their energy to the construction of their countries for they have to concern themselves with the safety of their countries and other matters.

Asked about Thailand's principle towards Democratic Kampuchea's U.N. seat, he said that the ASEAN countries have been making concerted efforts to seek support for it. ASEAN's efforts have won the support of many countries. The votes in favor of Democratic Kampuchea's seat increased in the last three General Assembly sessions. Sitthi said: The countries which have promised support remain opposed to armed occupation of one country by another. But don't forget the Vietnamese side is going about trying to convince others that the situation in Kampuchea has calmed down. This is only a trick. In fact the Western and other countries have given principled support to Democratic Kampuchea in accordance with U.N. resolutions. Once a coalition government is formed, as expected by the three sides, by Democratic Kampuchea with Khieu Samphan as president together with Samdech Norodom Sihanouk and Son Sann, no one would object to Democratic Kampuchea's seat in the U.N.. Thus a great victory will be scored at the next U.N. General Assembly session for the votes in favor of Democratic Kampuchea will assuredly increase. Otherwise, it is hard to estimate whether the votes will increase or reduce. Thailand, like all other ASEAN countries, will adhere to its principle and not change its stand in support of Democratic Kampuchea's seat in the U.N.

Answering a question about the prospects for a tripartite union in Kampuchea, he said that such a union is very hopeful judging from present reports. The three parties have agreed on a summit and Malaysia has offered Kuala Lumpur as the venue. It must be a success this time. But in the last analysis, success depends on the efforts of all the resistance forces of Kampuchea. Outsiders must not force the Kampucheans to take any course of action.

Asked about Thailand's "economic diplomacy," the Thai foreign minister said that since last year, Thai Prime Minister Prem Tinsulanon paid visits to several countries. Among the members of his delegation were some private businessmen. Formerly, of Thailand's export commodities, agricultural products accounted for 90 percent while industrial products only 5 to 10 percent. Now, industrial exports have reached about 30 percent of the country's total exports. In the coming five years, Thailand wishes to have more foreign investments in the exploitation of its natural gas and petroleum. The Thai Foreign Ministry will make efforts to promote cooperation with the countries concerned in this field. Referring to the Thailand-China agreements on cooperation in trade, science and technology, the Thai foreign minister said the growing trade and new scientific-technical exchanges between Thailand and China will be beneficial to the growth of their national economy and the improvement of the living conditions of the two peoples. He stressed that the Thai Foreign Ministry has also instructed all its embassy and consular officials abroad to pay attention to and promote the expansion of Thailand's foreign trade.

Questioned about his coming visit to China, the foreign minister said that he wished to convey to the Chinese people through the Chinese mass media the best wishes of the Thai people. He expressed his conviction that his visit will further consolidate and promote the friendly relations between the two countries.

RENMIN RIBAO URGES SOLUTION OF FALKLANDS DISPUTE

[Short commentary: "The Malvinas Dispute Will Not Be Resolved Through the Use of Force"]

[Text] Repeated British air and naval strikes against the Malvinas have led to a gradual escalation of the dispute between Britain and Argentina over the islands. Britain and Argentina are currently engaged in an air and naval battle in the South Atlantic; losses on both sides are on the increase and more and more and blood is being spilt. This has not only made a peaceful resolution of the Malvinas dispute more difficult, but has also aggravated tension in the whole of the Western Hemisphere. World public opinion has expressed deep regret and great disquiet over the current situation. The Malvinas dispute is a historical question left over by imperialism and is one for which a just and reasonable solution can only be reached through peaceful negotiations between the nations involved. The international community has already clearly expressed its position on this point. Argentina's sovereign claim over the Malvinas has already won the sympathy and support of a number of nonaligned nations. Originally this question could have been resolved through patient peace negotiations had the reasonable wishes of the Third World been respected. Both Britain and Argentina have expressed a willingness to negotiate a peaceful settlement to the dispute between the two, and Argentina has put forth various suggestions to this end. Resolution No 502, put forth by Britain and passed by the UN Security Council, also calls on both sides to cease hostilities and reach a peaceful solution through negotiations. Various governments have been desperately urging both sides to exercise restraint in looking for a solution to the dispute. Several nations have also come forward to act as mediators. All this reflects international public opinion's strong desire to maintain peace in the South Atlantic. However, just as these various efforts were being made, Britain launched a military assault on the Malvinas Islands, provoking a bloody conflict. This attempt to use military force and the threat to use greater military force to achieve its aims is not a legitimate course of action. It will not lead to a solution of the problem and can only make the situation worse. It should be pointed out that we are now in the 1980's of the 20th century and that any attempt to force the nations of the Third World into submission through the use of warships can never succeed.

When the conflict between Britain and Argentina first occurred the U.S. Government acted as a mediator between the two sides. People hoped that as an ally of both countries Washington would adopt a fair and unbiased stand and would be able to find a reasonable solution to the problem. It is regrettable, however, that in the course of this mediation, the United States, by strongly favoring Britain and bringing great pressure to bear on Argentina, has caused its efforts at mediation to make no headway. On the eve of Britain's military attack on the Malvinas the U.S. Government suddenly changed its neutral attitude and announced its support for Britain and even went so far as to impose economic sanctions against Argentina. People believe that America's actions have in fact encouraged Britain to take military action. Such a view is not entirely unreasonable. The U.S.' course of action has certainly not helped the efforts of the international community to reach a peaceful solution to the dispute and may even have hurt the United States itself. This has been borne out by the strong reaction of Argentina and other Latin American nations against the United States.

Although serious armed conflict has now occurred between Argentina and Britain, negotiation remains the only way to resolve the Malvinas dispute. The UN Security Council and the UN general secretary are now making new efforts to mediate the dispute and have suggested an immediate cease-fire. Argentina has already given a positive response to the U.N.'s mediation and suggestions for a cease-fire. We hope that Britain will be equally responsive and will create the conditions necessary for a peaceful settlement of the Malvinas dispute.

NEW 'OBSTACLE' NOTED IN FALKLANDS SETTLEMENT

OW081920 Beijing XINHUA in English 1834 GMT 8 May 82

["Round-up: Peaceful Settlement of Malvinas Dispute Meets New Obstacle" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Buenos Aires, May 7 (XINHUA) -- Britain's announcement today that it will extend the 200-mile blockade around the Malvinas Is nds has placed a new stumbling block on the way to a peaceful settlement of the dispute. It has shattered the thread of hope of a peaceful settlement which appeared in the past few days.

Of late, appeals for a peaceful settlement have been mounting internationally. Not a few countries have offered mediation. U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar has put forward a concrete proposal reportedly including mutual ceasefire, troops withdrawal and the temporary taking over by the United Nations of the disputed islands, thus bringing a gleam of hope to peace in the south Atlantic.

While coping with economic sanctions and military attacks, Argentina has persisted in its claim for sovereignty over the Malvinas Islands. In the meantime, it has repeatedly expressed its hope for a peaceful settlement. After the U.N. secretary-general has put forward his proposal, Argentina deems the time is ripe for it to act to ease the current tense situation. Argentina has expressed willingness to accept the U.N. secretary-general's proposal as being relatively neutral. It has dispatched Under-Secretary of Foreign Affairs Enrique Ros to New York for consultations on the proposal.

Britain's military action against the South Georgia Island and the Malvinas Islands have not only added to its military and economic burdens, but also effected a turn in public opinion at home and in West European countries unfavorable to the British Government. The mounting appeals in the West for a peaceful settlement through diplomatic channels have made Britain respond to some extent to the U.N. secretary-general's proposal.

However, there are some differences is the response of Argentina and Britain. While Argentina gave the impression of relative satisfaction with the U.N. proposal, the British regard it only as a possibility to a settlement. To pave the way to peace, the prickly issue of sovereignty of the Malvinas (Falklands) has been avoided in the U.N. proposal. Argentina will not withdraw its troops if its sovereignty over the islands is not guaranteed in future negotiations, whereas Britain won't come to the negotiation table without a promise of Argentine withdrawal. Here lies the crux of difficulties in any mediation.

Since its arrival in the South Atlantic, the British task force fleet has achieved no significant victory; on the contrary, it has suffered heavy losses in battle. In these circumstances, new assaults are likely in an attempt to raise Britain's bargaining power at the negotiation table. Prior to the announcement of the extended blockade zone, British Defense Secretary John Nott confirmed that the task force would be reinforced by a strong helicopter squadron. An escalation in the South Atlantic conflict cannot be ruled out.

AFP: GROUP CLAIMS RESPONSIBILITY FOR AIR CRASH

OW071711 Hong Kong AFP in English 1658 GMT 7 May 82

[Text] Tokyo, 7 May (AFP) -- A group calling for the immediate release of convicted radical leaders of China's "Cultural Revolution" has claimed responsibility for the crash of a Chinese domestic airliner in southern China on April 26, it was reported today. Over 100 people aboard the ill-fated British-built Trident jet, including foreigners, were killed.

The claim was made in an airmail letter which was postmarked April 26 by the post office of Guangzhou and received yesterday by the major Japanese newspaper MAINICHI SHIMBUN.

The mimeographed letter said that the group carried out a "revolutionary act" against a domestic airliner on April 26 and would "punish" China's strongman Deng Xiaoping "at any cost this year," the paper added. However, the letter did not specify what the group did to the plane. Reports reaching Hong Kong earlier said the Trident aircraft had exploded in mid-air.

The group called itself "the action committee to rescue Comrade Jiang Qing," the widow of the later Chairman Mao Zedong, who was convicted last year of charges of fatal persecutions along with top radical leaders of the 1966-1976 Cultural Revolution, the paper said.

The plane crashed while on a domestic flight from Guangzhou to the scenic resort of Guilin. Chinese authorities have yet to make public findings of their probe of the accident.

The letter said the group took the action because two subordinates of Vice Chairman Deng Xiaoping had been reported to board the plane.

It demanded Jiang Qing, former Vice Premier Zhang Chunqiao and other Cultural Revolution leaders be released immediately.

The letter quoted prediction by the late Mao Zedong as saying that the rightists would pull a coup in China after his death but would not last long, according to the newspaper. The present situation conforms to the prediction, and the act was just the beginning of a series of revolutionary acts, the letter also said.

YAO YILIN REPORT ON ECONOMIC, SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

OW060504 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0202 GMT 5 May 82

[Text] Beijing, 5 May (XINHUA) -- Report on the draft of the 1982 plan for economic and social development by State Council Vice Premier and concurrent Minister in Charge of the State Planning Commission Yao Yilin at the 23d Session of the 5th NPC Standing Committee on 28 April 1982:

Deputies, the Fourth Session of the Fifth NPC has approved, in principle, the essential points of the draft of the 1982 plan for economic and social development put forward by the State Council, and authorized the NPC Standing Committee to examine and ratify it after tackling some specific problems in the draft of the plan. After the closing of the Fourth Session of the Fifth NPC, the State Council has, on the one hand, made the essential points of the draft of the 1982 plan for economic and social development known to the various departments and localities at the lower level so that they can make early preparations for this year's work on the basis of the draft plan. On the other hand, it has studied and tackled the existing problems in the draft of the plan. After a certain period some of the unsolved problems that existed in the draft plan at that time have been basically smoothed out. Now, I have been entrusted by the State Council to report on how the 1981 plan was implemented and on the draft of the 1982 plan.

I The Situation in Implementing the 1981 Plan

The 1981 national economic plan has been victoriusly implemented, thanks to the joint efforts of the people of all nationalities throughout the country. The plan has been fulfilled better than expected.

1. On the basis of the fixed prices of 1970, it was originally estimated that the gross value of agricultural output would reach 169 billion yuan as specified in the plan and mark an increase of 4 percent over the previous year. Actually, the gross value of agricultural putput reached 172 billion yuan (note 1), an increase of 5.7 percent over the previous year. Among the various major farm products, the grain output was basically the same as what we estimated. The output of the majority of industrial crops exceeded the original estimates. In 1981, the nation's grain output reached 325.02 million dun, an increase of 4.5 million dun or 1.4 percent over the previous year; the output of cotton reached 2.968 million dun, an increase of 260,000 dun or 9.6 percent over the previous year; the output of oil-bearing crops reached 10.2 million dun, an increase of 2.51 million dun or 32.7 percent over the previous year; and the output of sugar-bearing crops reached 36.02 million dun, an increase of 6.91 million or 23.7 percent over the previous year. The production plans for pork, beef and mutton as well as aquatic products were overfulfilled. Fairly large developments were made in sideline occupations in rural areas. Further improvements were made in the internal structure of agriculture and in the patterning of crops in production. The entire situation in agriculture is inspiring.

2. On the basis of the fixed prices in 1970, it was originally estimated that the total industrial output value would reach 511 billion yuan as specified by the plan or even slightly more, and show an increase of about 3 percent over the previous year. Actually, it reached 519.9 billion yuan (note 2), marking an increase of 4.1 percent over the previous year. In the whole industry, the output value of light industry was increased by 14.1 percent and that of heavy industry decreased by 4.7 percent. The percentage of the light industrial output value in the gross industrial output value rose from 46.9 percent of the pevious year to last year's 51.4 percent. The production targets of 87 of the 100 types of industrial products were fulfilled or overfulfilled. Fairly large increases were registered in the production of products such as cotton yarn and fabrics, woolen and silk fabrics, sugar, beet, synthetic detergents, bicycles, sewing machines, wristwatches, plate glass, cement and others. The output of coal and crude oil was basically the same as that of the previous year.

The output of electricity rose by 2.9 percent and that of steel dropped by 4.1 percent as compared with those of the previous year. However, the percentage of usable steel was somewhat raised.

Targets in railway, water transport, highway, civil aviation and postal and communications departments were also well fulfilled. This had basically ensured the flow of all types of important supplies and passengers.

3. The total investment in capital construction was 42.8 billion yuan, a decrease of 11.1 billion yuan or 20.6 percent over the previous year. At the end of 1981, 663 large and medium-sized projects were under construction, a decrease of 241 as compared with the previous year. The use of capital construction investment was continuously better oriented. The ratio of such investment in the light and textile industries rose from 9.1 percent in the previous year to last year's 10 percent of the gross investment in capital construction. The ratio of the investment in nonproductive construction projects aimed at improving the people's material and cultural well-being rose from 33.7 percent in the previous year to last year's 41.1 percent of the gross inventory. The percentage of fixed assets in use was higher than the previous year. The production targets of 24 of the 27 major products listed in the state plan were fulfilled and overfulfilled. The production capacity of those products was recently expanded.

4. As for revenue and expenditures, preliminary statistics show that the total revenue reached 106.43 billion yuan with a total expenditure of 108.97 billion yuan (including foreign loans and the revenue and expenditure abroad). The result showed a deficit of 2.54 billion yuan, slightly less than the estimated deficit of 2.72 billion yuan.

5. The total volume of retail sales reached 235 billion yuan, an increase of 9.8 percent over the previous year. (The actual rate of growth was 7.2 percent if factors in allowing commodity price increases in retail are not considered.) The general level of retail commodity prices for the entire year (with due consideration given to the weighted average between the list prices and negotiated prices of state-run enterprises and the prices at the trade fair) rose by 2.4 percent over the previous year. Except for the fairly large price increases for vegetables, tobacco, wine and other commodities, the prices for most of the daily necessities were basically stable.

The total amount of export and import trade in the whole nation reached 73.53 billion yuan, marking an increase of 29 percent over the previous year with the total amount of export trade increased by 35.5 percent and that of import trade increased by 23.1 percent over figures for the previous year. If changes in prices and in the rate of exchange are not taken into consideration, the total amount of export and import trade in the whole nation rose by 11 percent with the total amount of export business increased by 18 percent and that of import business increased by 5 percent.

6. New developments were scored in science, education, culture, public health and other fields. The whole nation scored significant achievements in 3,100 scientific, technical and research projects including 120 creations and inventions approved by the state. The fine strains of hybrid paddy rice were being popularized on a large scale, playing a remarkable role in increasing agricultural production. The industrial departments trial-produced and introduced nearly 10,000 new products and techniques. Half of the new products are on the production lines.

The ordinary institutions of higher learning admitted 275,000 students, exceeding the targets as specified by the state plan. As many as 1.28 million students enrolled in various schools, an increase of 12 percent over the number of students enrolled in the previous year. Progress was also made in readjusting the specialties and major fields of study in the institutions of higher learning. Weaknesses in the departments of finance and economics, political and judicial affairs and light industry and others were strengthened. Preliminary achievements were scored in the restructuring of secondary schools. A total of 424,000 students enrolled in vocational and agricultural middle schools, an increase of 38 percent over the previous year. The hospitals in the country expanded the number of beds by 35,000. There were continuous developments in film-making, television, broadcasting, publication, journalism and other fields. The front of physical education and sports scored fine and stirring achievements.

7. People's livelihood in the urban and rural areas has continued to improve to a certain extent. According to the data acquired by samples taken by the State Statistical Bureau, the average annual per-capita income of peasants amounted to 223 yuan as compared with 191 yuan for the previous year, or an increase of 16.8 percent. The total amount of wages for workers and the staff in units under the ownership by the whole people increased by 5.2 percent over the previous year. A total of 8.2 million people in cities and towns throughout the country have been given jobs. The wages of middle and primary school teachers, physical culture workers and some medical workers have been raised.

Judging from the implementation of the plan, our country's industrial and agricultural development still advances at a set speed in the midst of large-scale economic readjustment with the ratio relationships in various areas gradually coming into line; the economic situation throughout the country is basically stable, the most difficult period is over and all undertakings have begun to move ahead steadily.

This proves that the policy of making further readjustment on the national economy decided by the central work conference of the CCP Central Committee in December 1980 together with important measures adopted and the "resolution on approving the State Council report on readjusting this year's national economic plan and the state revenue and expenditure" adopted at the 17th meeting of the NPC Standing Committee on 6 March 1981 are fully correct and timely. At the beginning of last year we put forth a goal of achieving a basic balance of state revenue and expenditure by working hard for 1 year in spite of the enormous financial deficit that appeared in the previous 2 years. At that time some comrades were worried that goal could not be realized. Thanks to our reliance on the superiority of the socialist planned economy and to the concerted efforts of various localities and departments working in complete harmony, by taking the interest of the whole into account we have not only achieved a basic balance of the state revenue and expenditure but also tremendously cut down expenditures and brought about a growth of more than 5 percent in agriculture and more than 4 percent in industry. This fully demonstrates that the socialist system possesses the power to overcome difficulties.

Of course, we must also clearly realize that some problems still exist in the present national economy that deserve our attention. The main problems are: The basic balance of the 1981 state revenue and expenditure was realized chiefly by large-scale reduction of expenditure and such an accomplishment is therefore not solid enough. The balance of energy production and needs as well as the relatively tense communications and transport situation are, to a large extent, restricting the growth of industrial production as a whole. As long as the increase of certain consumer goods still lags behind the growing needs of the people, it remains an arduous task for us to maintain a basic stabilization of commodity prices in the market. Poor economic results in various areas have remained more or less unchanged and this situation has even worsened in some areas.

The total labor productivity of industrial enterprises under the ownership by the whole people in 1981 dropped 1.8 percent compared with the previous year and the total production cost of constant products rose 1 percent over the year before; the quality of some products also dropped somewhat whereas material consumption rose to some extent. Some enterprises, going after output value unrealistically, have not paid much attention to the marketability of their products, thereby resulting in overstocking of certain products and the growth rate of their industrial output contained a little "padding" [shui fen 3055 0433]. This state of affairs shows that while the potential danger in the national economy has eased markedly, it has not been basically eradicated and we should not remain unrealistically optimistic and lower our guard.

II The Tacks and Major Targets of the 1982 Plan

The State Council decided that the major tasks of economic and social development in 1982 are to further implement the principle of readjustment, restructuring, reorganization and upgrading, to consolidate and develop the achievements made in 1981 in stabilizing the economy, to continuously maintain a basic balance of the state revenue and expenditure and a basic stabilization of prices and to strive to improve economic results so as to improve the growth rate of the national economy over that of 1981.

The various specific tasks and major targets are arranged as follows:

1. Efforts should be made to achieve a better harvest in agriculture so as to bring about an all-round development in agriculture, forestry, animal husbandry, sideline production and fishery.

The 1982 agricultural output value target is 4 percent over 1981. The grain output target is 333.5 million dun, 8.5 million dun more than 1981 and an increase of 2.6 percent. Output of cotton and sugar bearing crops should continue to be higher than 1981. New progress is planned for forestry, animal husbandry, sideline production and fishery. In order to realize the above demands, efforts will be made to stabilize and improve various forms of responsibility systems for production to fire the enthusiasm of the peasants for production.

The policy of developing diversified undertakings according to local conditions will be implemented more effectively. Grain production will be grasped firmly and not be slckened in the slightest degree; and the grain sown acreage will be stabilized and will not be reduced any more. Economic crops will be developed by primarily raising the unit-area and output and the sown acreage will be controlled. Effective experience of increasing production and advanced techniques in agricultural production will be popularized in earnest and efforts will be made to improve agricultural productivity and economic results. Active steps will be taken to develop forestry, to launch the all-people obligatory tree-planting movement, to protect the forest resources, to control the loss of water and soil and to pay attention to the ecological balance. This must be carried on persistently as a long-term strategic task.

2. Continue expansion of light industry at a relatively faster speed to continue readjustment of the service orientation of heavy industry.

The 1982 light industrial output value is 7 percent over 1981 and the heavy industrial output value is to increase 1 percent. The total industrial output value is to increase by 4 percent and efforts will be made to surpass this figure. The output target for yarn is 3.24 million dun, a 3.4 percent increase over 1981; the output target for sugar is 3.2 million dun, an increase of 6.7 percent; a big increase is expected in the output of durable consumer goods including bicycles, sewing machines and wristwatches. The coal target is 625 million dun, 345 million dun of which is controlled by the state, representing a 3.9 percent increase over 1981; the oil output will be 100 million dun, the same production level as 1981; the electricity output is set for 313 billion kilowatts, an increase of 2.6 percent. To reduce the pressure of energy resources, efforts will be made to improve the quality of steel and steel products, which are in short supply. The steel output target will be 34 million dun or 4 percent less than 1981.

Improvement of economic performance will be given prime importance as the basis for a feasible growth rate free of "padding." Economic results require primarily that the products manufactured meet the needs of society. Steps will be taken to improve quality and increase variety, to take note of the marketability of products and to resolutely prevent and correct the erroneous way of doing things in disregard of the needs of society and by going one-sidedly after output value. Efforts will be made to improve market forecasting so as to understand, in a timely manner, the changes in the needs of society and the trends for guiding production and circulation of goods. Special attention will be paid to understanding the change and demands in the vast rural market at present and to provide more and more consumer goods and the means of production in keeping with the needs of the peasants. To improve economic results, it is also necessary to conserve both labor energy and raw material consumption by all means and to produce more products to meet the needs of society by consuming less energy and raw materials whenever possible so as to markedly improve economic results in industrial production as a whole. Nationally speaking, the 1982 energy consumption will reduce by 3 percent, the production cost of enterprises will be reduced from 2 to 3 percent; the quality of products and labor productivity will be raised and tax and profit delivery to the state will be relatively larger than 1981.

In transport, the 1982 railway freight volume is set at 1.44 billion dun, an increase of 1 percent over 1981. Efforts should be made to ease congestion in the busy railway sections and to increase the handling capacity of key harbors. Attention should be paid to developing the role of water transport, highways and roads. Efforts should be made to develop posts and telecommunications.

3. Efforts will be made to maintain a basic balance of revenue and expenditure by increasing income and reducing expenditure.

Total revenue for 1982 under the state plan is 110.45 billion yuan, and total expenditure is 113.45 billion yuan (including external loans). This will result in a deficit of 3 billion yuan. Economic results must be improved to increase state revenue, in order to reduce the deficit to a minimum and maintain a basic balance of state revenue and expenditure. At the same time, appropriations for capital construction are to be controlled and expenditure reduced as much as possible. Appropriate increases in expenditure for national defense, science and culture have been made.

In the new situation, after the initial transformation of the economic system, the banks will be made to play their role of raising funds and putting them to good use. Various measures should be adopted to increase urban and rural savings deposits, and efforts should be made to pool funds, scattered throughout society, for use in support of needed national construction. At the same time, when extending loans, the banks must strictly adhere to currency circulation and credit targets fixed by the state plan. The raising of funds for construction by various areas and departments should be handled through banks, in accordance with the regulations of the State Council, and should also be included in the state plan in order to maintain a basic balance between credit, revenue and expenditure.

4. The scope of capital construction will be controlled and investment arranged rationally.

Total investment for capital construction in 1982 is set at 38 billion yuan, and funds for renewing and transforming industrial enterprises are to be around 25 billion yuan. Total investment for fixed assets for these 2 items is 63 billion yuan.

Of the total capital construction investment under the 1982 state plan, investment directly arranged within the state budget is set at 18.63 billion yuan, and that raised by departments, localities and enterprises themselves will be 8.1 billion yuan. Because there will be a financial deficit in 1982 and there is still imbalance between timber, cement and other materials, the total investment for captial construction will not be increased in the state plan. In the course of implementing the state plan, it can be appropriately and systematically increased in the second half of this year with the approval of the State Council, provided it is financially and materially possible. A big achievement in readjusting the economy last year was the curtailment of the scope of capital construction. As the situation has improved a little, it is necessary to properly expand the scope of capital construction.

Investment for capital construction should be used mainly for continuing the construction of projects under construction. New projects must be strictly controlled. Investment within the state budget should be used mainly for transportation and communications, energy and other basic construction. In transport construction, the emphasis should be placed on raising the capacity of transporting coal from Shanxi to other areas. Funds raised by localities, departments and enterprises should be used as much as possible for the construction of other projects. Regarding projects to be built with self-raised funds and bank loans, the planning departments should cooperate with departments concerned to achieve an overall balance between financial and material resources and to provide guidance, so that what is urgently needed by the state will be built first. Efforts should be continued to boost economic and cultural development in the border areas and in national minority areas.

The transformation and renewal of enterprises will be carried out by relying mainly on enterprise funds and on bank loans. Enterprises should spend a higher percentage of their own funds on technical transformation and equipment renewal. The present percentage in most enterprises is about 20 to 30 percent. This should be raised to about 30 to 40 percent in 1982 and should be gradually raised further in the future.

The planning departments at all levels will from now on control and plan overall the investment for fixed assets, and will be responsible for their rational use to prevent enterprises from carrying out blind construction without good planning.

5. Efforts will be made to strike a balance between market supply and demand, maintain basic stabilization of prices and expand foreign trade.

The 1982 purchasing power of society as a whole is set at 244 billion yuan, 8 percent more than 1981; the supply of commodities is set at 238 billion yuan, about 6 billion yuan less than the purchasing power.

In order to narrow this gap and strike a balance between market supply and demand, production of readily marketable goods must be increased in the course of implementing the state plan, in addition to using part of the inventory to increase the supply of goods to the market. At the same time, increase in the purchasing power of society must be properly controlled. New regulations governing bonuses and other subsidies for staff members and workers must be established, and earnest efforts must be made to stop the practice of handing out bonuses indiscriminately or in a disguised manner. Enterprises must adhere to state regulations governing the amount of profits they are authorized to retain and the percentage of profits and losses under their contractual responsibility. Those who retain profits in excess of the limit set by the regulation must be rectified. Profits retained by enterprises according to the regulations should be used to develop production and necessary welfare facilities for staff members and workers. Individual distribution should not exceed the limit. This year, the purchasing price for agricultural products will not be raised; state purchasing quotas must be fulfilled without fail and must not be lowered at will; the scope and limit for overfulfilling the purchasing quota by increasing prices and negotiating prices must strictly adhere to state regulations. Excessive subsidies in the price of a particular product should be properly readjusted. Continued control should be imposed on the purchasing power of various organizations in society.

The Ministry of Commerce should strive to do a good job in buying and selling commodities, reducing circulation links, accelerating commodity circulation, improving service attitudes and raising the quality of service. At the same time, it must have a good grasp of market demands and changes in consumption. Thus it can assist production departments in readjusting the product mix and produce readily marketable products.

It is necessary to continue to strengthen the control of the market and prices. To raise prices arbitrarily or in disguised forms is strictly prohibited. It is necessary to crack down on speculation, smuggling and tax evasion in order to maintain the basic stability of the market and prices. State commercial establishments as well as cooperative commercial establishments should both play a role of keeping prices from rising.

The total volume of foreign trade will show a further increase. The growth of the export trade will be somewhat restricted, as some commodities will have to first satisfy domestic needs. However, the import of materials and commodities must be increased to promote domestic production and construction. Thus, this will give rise to a deficit in foreign trade. Efforts should be made to increase export remittances and to reduce the costs involved in exchanging remittances. It is necessary to strictly control imports, use our foreign exchange economically and reduce losses. It is also necessary to make good use of foreign capital and import foreign technology suitable for China.

6. Scientific and technological research will be strengthened and cultural, educational and health work will expand.

The more than 400 projects listed in the 1982 national plan for scientific and technological growth include development of new products, pilot experiments, major scientific research projects and industrial experiments. Scientific and technological personnel should be organized to tackle urgent key problems in technical transformation and production. Scientific results should be actively popularized to promote economic development.

It is necessary to further consolidate and improve the existing schools of higher learning and speed up the structural reform of secondary education. We should actively develop correspondence, sparetime, television and day universities in order to educate more people for our country. In 1982, various ordinary schools of higher learning plan to enroll 300,000 students, an increase of 25,000 over 1981.

We should extensively promote the patriotic health campaign, strive to raise the quality of medical care, strengthen disease prevention and medical treatment work and increase hospital beds for departments of gynecology, obstetrics and pediatrics and certain diseases which need special treatment and beds.

It is necessary to promote the creation of literary and art works and develop movies, television, publication and news work in a planned manner. We should continue to develop mass sport activities and strengthen the building of sports teams.

7. We should make efforts to ensure the stability of people's life and continue to improve the people's living conditions on what has already been achieved in promoting production.

We should firmly control population growth. In the light of the present new situation of the rise in the natural growth rate, we must adopt effective measures and pay close attention to family planning work.

We should continue to carry out appropriate plans for the urban unemployed and help them find jobs. In 1982, the state plans to provide employment for 5.6 million people mainly through developing collective enterprises and individual economy in cities and towns.

We will continue to adjust the wages for staff members and workers of various state organizations and scientific, cultural, educational and health departments which have no bonus system.

We should make efforts to increase agricultural production and reduce production costs so that the peasants' income may continue to increase.

We should further improve housing condition for urban residents and make greater efforts to provide building materials for the countryside.

We should also pay attention to doing a good job in environmental protection, reducing pollution caused by the "three wastes," strengthening labor protection and ensuring safety in production.

The aforementioned production targets were drawn up in November last year on the basis of the estimation on the implementation of the 1981 economic plan. The actual results of the implementation of the 1981 economic plan differed somewhat from the estimate. Production targets were overfulfilled in many fields and only certain targets were not fulfilled. We have already entered the second quarter of 1982. It is not necessary, and is also impossible, to make an overall adjustment in this year's economic plan. In implementing various plans, efforts should be made to overfulfill production quotas of those items which are actually needed by society if conditions permit. As for those items where supply has exceeded demand, it is imperative that production must strictly follow quotas set by the production plans and they must not be overproduced.

III We Should Heighten Our Spirit, Do Our Work Well and Fulfill or Overfulfill the 1982 Production Plan

More than 3 months of this year have passed. Judging from the situation of the first quarter, we can see that the general trend of the development of the national economy is quite good. The total industrial output value was 129.3 billion yuan in the first quarter, accounting for 24.2 percent of the annual plan and showing an increase of 11.6 percent over the same period in 1981. Output of light industrial products increased by 14.6 percent and that of heavy industrial products maintained the good trend of the last quarter of 1981, with an increase of 8.5 percent over the same period last year. The output of chemical products, construction materials and some machinery products all exceeded that of the same period last year. The situation in coal production was particularly good. The output of coal of various state-administered mines increased by 10 percent over the same period last year. The various mines overfulfilled the first quarter's production quota by 3.25 million dun this year. The quality of many industrial products has been stable, or improved, and the rate of consumption of raw materials for a number of products has been reduced.

The total retail value of commodities sold in society reached 62.35 billion yuan, showing an increase of 8.8 percent over the same period in 1981. The situation in state revenue and expenditure was also relatively good. The main current problems include an increase in the stock of certain products which are in full or excessive supply, some difficulties in energy supply and transportation, the lowering of quality in certain products and the increase of consumption in the production of certain products. The total profit turned to the state by various state industrial enterprises during the first quarter was 8.8 billion yuan, showing an increase of 3.6 percent over the same period in 1981. However, it was much smaller than the rate of increase of production.

This situation shows that the major question now is not whether the growth rate set in the plan can be attained or not, but that close attention must be paid to economic results. The key to solving this question is to conscientiously implement the 10 principles put forward by Premier Zhao in his report on the work of the government to the Fourth Session of the Fifth NPC and to take effective measures to achieve better economic results in all fields. For this purpose, close attention should be paid to the following several things:

First, concentrate our efforts on the all-round consolidation and necessary restructuring of enterprises.

The State Council has pointed out that it is necessary to carry out a planned, all-round consolidation of existing enterprises in 2 or 3 years. This is an important measure needed to tap the potential of enterprises, to achieve better economic results and to increase financial revenues. The party Central Committee and the State Council have already laid down the clear objectives, requirements, principles and policies for enterprise consolidation. All departments and localities should make concrete arrangements for their conscientious implementation. This year we should first select for consolidation those key, medium and large enterprises with more problems but greater potential and which urgently need to be consolidated. In the course of consolidation, stress should be placed on staffing enterprise leading bodies with competent cadres; reforming the system of leadership; fixing the number of staff members and production quotas and training workers and staff members in rotation in a planned way; strengthening the basic work in enterprise management; and stepping up financial and accounting work in enterprises. Through consolidation, enterprises should be enabled to achieve far better economic results and take on a new look.

In connection with consolidation, it is also necessary to continue to do a good job in readjusting enterprises. This is an important way to achieve better economic results in industry as a whole and to rationally structure enterprises step by step. In readjusting enterprises this year, we should first close down or suspend the operation of a number of factories where the consumption of energy is too high, where economic results are very poor and where products are of very poor quality. This includes some county- and commune-run industries. At the same time, all departments should organize personnel to properly plan enterprise readjustment according to their trades in order to prepare for the further carrying out of this task in a planned way.

Second, carry out the updating of equipment and technical transformation in key enterprises.

On this basis of a successful enterprise consolidation and readjustment, efforts should be made to carry out the updating of equipment and technical transformation in enterprises as a major task. It is necessary to first transform several important products such as boilers, motor vehicles, transformers, water pumps and blowers, as well as some basic parts, with a view to saving energy. A good job should be done in carrying out technical transformation in a few key enterprises in order to gain experience and then to popularize this experience step by step. Enterprises should make their plans for the updating of equipment and technical transformation according to their needs and possibilities, and these plans should be carried out after being examined and approved by higher authorities so they will not be carried out all at once without regard for their priority.

All departments should make correct technical policies according to their trades. They should select a number of major scientific and technological achievements producing a marked effect for popularization. A better job should be done in introducing science and technology from laboratories to production, from military use only to both military and civilian use, from coastal areas to the interior and from foreign countries to our country in order to promote the development of production and construction. It is necessary to further implement the party's policy toward intellectuals and to give full play to the role of scientific research institutions and scientific researches in technical transformation.

Third, improve returns on investments.

An outstanding problem in our national economy now is long construction periods and high constuction costs in capital construction. From this year on, vigorous efforts should be made to shorten construction periods, reduce building costs for projects and achieve actual results in this regard.

Continuous efforts should be made to check up on projects under construction. A reexamination should be made of these projects to redetermine the construction periods and the amounts of investment needed. Adequate investments and materials should be provided for the building of a number of selected key projects according to schedule, and a strict system of responsibility for completing projects on schedule should be instituted. The departments concerned should make concerted efforts to ensure the practice of this system. All construction projects, especially large ones, should as much as possible be built and put into operation by stages, and they should make a profit as early as possible. All projects that are not urgently needed, that have unreliable building conditions or that will not be able to be put into normal production after being completed should be resolutely stopped, and the investments and materials for them should be used for other purposes. Projects that should be wound up must be wound up as soon as possible and made available to the users, and they must not be prolonged indefinitely so some people can be prevented from "living on capital construction."

Full preconstruction preparations should be made for new projects, and they should not be started in haste.

It is necessary to further use the method of replacing financial allocations for capital construction projects by bank loans in order to impel construction units to strengthen their business accounting and improve their returns on investments. Departments should collect fees from construction units according to established standards, and irrational standards should be changed.

It is necessary to carry out reforms in designing, to improve design quality and lower irrationally high standards for design. Efforts should be made to strengthen construction discipline and improve construction efficiency.

Fourth, reduce circulating funds.

An important manifestation of backward economic management in our country is the existence of too many levels of management in the circulation of commodities, the overstocking of products and a slow fund turnover. If we do our work well and cut down 2 or 3 percent of the circulating funds, we will be able to save 7-10 billion yuan of funds. In connection with enterprise consolidation, we should reduce enterprises' circulating funds to a rational level step by step. From now on, the bank interest rate should be raised on the portion of circulating funds exceeding the level approved by the state. As for enterprises that use such a great amount of circulating funds as to be extremely irrational, banks should grant them no more loans. It is necessary to make an inventory of warehouses; some of the overstocked products that can be used or remade should be used or remade while others should be recorded as useless items.

In the past 2 years we have carried out some initial reforms in our economic system which have played a remarkable role in revitalizing the economy. However, these reforms have also brought some new problems to us. This calls for us to conscientiously sum up our experiences in this regard and take corresponding measures to solve these problems in order to continue these reforms in a healthy way.

An outstanding problem in the economic field now is that illegal and criminal activities such as smuggling, trading in smuggled goods, speculation, swindling, corruption and accepting bribes have become rampant in some areas and units since the policies of opening to the world and revitalizing the domestic economy were put into practice. Such illegal and criminal activities in the economic field have not only done serious damage to the socialist economy but have eroded the body of our party and poisoned the party's work style and the people's general mood. This is an important manifestation of class struggle in the economic field in our socialist society under new historical conditions. If no resolute struggle were carried out against such illegal and criminal activities, it would be impossible to ensure the sound development of our economy along the socialist road and to correctly and healthily implement the policies of opening to the world and revitalizing the domestic economy. After the 22d Session of the 5th NPC Standing Committee adopted the "resolution on severe punishment of criminals who do serious damage to the economy," the party Central Committee and the State Council recently made a "decision on the struggle against serious criminal activities in the economic field." All localities and departments must conscientiously implement the resolution and the decision and be determined to carry the struggle through to the end. While carrying out the struggle, we should establish or improve various rules and regulations and plug loopholes in connection with enterprise consolidation and the streamlining of the administrative structure so the struggle will give a powerful impetus to improving management and achieving better economic results.

Another problem in the economic field meriting our attention is that departmental egotism, decentralism and the trend of liberalization have developed. Failing to proceed from the overall interests of the state to observe and handle problems, some localities and units have not followed the unified state plan, have shifted their troubles onto others, have sought self-interest at public expense and have blindly carried out production and construction. This situation has weakened the unified state plan and interfered with and divided the unified socialist market. This must be corrected.

Ours is a socialist planned economy. In economic work we must uphold the principles of planned economy being the leading factor, of market regulation being supplementary and of coordinating all the activities of the nation as pieces in a chess game. While enlivening the economy, we must strengthen the guidance of the state plan, strive to improve our planning work, uphold the solemnity of the state plan and push forward all work in specific management and economic supervision. All departments, localities and enterprises should adopt an overall point of view and strive to fulfill their production tasks set in the state plan and their tasks of transferring funds or materials to higher levels. Under no pretext must they push the state plan aside, nor must they try to break away from the state plan or affect it in any way.

Sixth, all units in all fields should practice strict economy and oppose waste.

At present, various units in all fields have the problems of inadequate funds and supply of materials. However, we also see the existence of improper use and serious waste of state appropriated funds and supplies. The waste in industrial and agricultural production, circulation of commercial goods and capital construction is quite apparent. Waste also exists in scientific research, cultural, educational and health work and in the administrative work of various governmental offices, mass organizations and military units. When we examine various units closely, we can see that many expenditures have not obtained good economic results and some disbursements have been made without going through economic accounting. In order to fundamentally improve the financial and economic situation of our country, we must advocate careful calculation and strict budgeting in various fields. We must first manage well the available funds and materials and use them effectively. We must not let waste go unchecked while asking for money and materials from the state.

We should gradually establish a system of supervising and checking on the use of money and materials as well as an appropriate system of reward and punishment. The principle of building up our country through thrift and hard work and being industrious and thrifty in all our work is still an important principle to observe.

Seventh, we should strengthen ideological and political work in our economic work.

Strengthening ideological and political work and raising the people's ideological consciousness are important factors in building a socialist material civilization. If we do not heighten the people's revolutionary spirit, we cannot do our work well even if we have good material conditions and measures.

We should conduct ideological and political work in close coordination with our economic work. We should conduct ideological and political work with a well-defined objective in mind so as to really solve various problems. We should educate the people to adhere to the four basic principles; correctly understand the relationship among the individual, the collective and the state; have a correct attitude toward the fundamental guiding principle of "first, the people must have sufficient food; second, socialist construction must be carried out;" correctly deal with the relationship between the immediate interest and all long-range interests; establish an overall point of view that considers the whole situation; and work with concerted efforts to actively promote the development of the national economy.

At present, it is necessary to extensively conduct education on the economic situation in a vivid manner. We should use facts and figures to explain the excellent situation of economic development in our country and the efforts made by the state to improve the people's living conditions over the past 3 years. We should guide the masses to fully understand the condition of our country and further foster the thinking of building up our country through thrift, hard work and arduous struggle. The leading cadres at various levels should improve their style of work, overcome bureaucratism, set good examples for others and take the lead in restoring and carrying forward the fine tradition of sharing the comforts and hardships of the masses.

As long as we do a good job in conducting ideological and political work and implementing various specific economic and technical measures, we can certainly fulfill or exceed the various tasks set in the 1982 economic plan.

Members of the NPC Standing Committee: There are still many problems in our country's production and construction and some difficulties in national finance. In the final analysis, those problems and difficulties are caused by low economic results in production, construction, circulation and other fields. Therefore, the fundamental way to overcome those difficulties is to find our ways and means to raise economic results. This is the basic starting point for all economic activities and also a core issue in following a new economic construction road. Following a new economic construction road has placed a new demand on our planning, economic and other work. We should not only greatly change our guiding principle but also center all our work on increasing economic results. As long as we can truly increase economic results, after several years of hard work we will certainly improve our financial and economic situation in a fundamental way and provide necessary conditions for the healthy development of the national economy in the period of the seventh 5-year plan.

The above report is for your examination and approval.

Note 1: The total value of agricultural products in 1981 should be 231.2 billion yuan in 1980's constant yuan value.

Note 2: The total value of industrial products in 1981 should be 517.8 billion yuan in 1980's constant yuan value.

RENMIN RIBAO ON MIDDLE-AGED, YOUNG CADRES

Commentator's Article

[Commentator's article: "Our Hopes in Middle-Aged and Young Cadres Who Are Taking Up Leadership Posts"]

[Text] Progress in reforming the central organs has been very rapid. The work of organizing and building the structure of the State Council ministries and commissions is now complete, and the new leading members have been decided on. The staffing of the new leadership groups in the CCP Central Committee departments is also basically complete. Large numbers of outstanding middle-aged and young cadres have been promoted to leadership posts at the levels of ministries and commissions and of sections and bureaus. As a result the leadership groups at these two levels have taken a gratifying step forward toward a lower average age and greater knowledge and professionalism. People can see from this that our party and state indeed possess a tremendous store of talent and that there are successors and great prospects for our socialist cause.

The close unity of long-tested old cadres and vigorous middle-aged and young cadres and their formation into strong and effective cores of leadership in the various departments constitute a major guarantee for maintaining the continuity and stability of the correct leadership of the party and government. The party and people welcome outstanding middle-aged and young cadres to shoulder the heavy burden of carrying forward the cause and forging ahead into the future at their various posts, and have earnest hopes in them. We too put forward some hopes to these comrades as we warmly congratulate them.

First, we hope that they will not accept flattery. The first thing a cadre encounters on promotion is that certain people come forward to flatter him, praise him to the skies and carry his sedan chair. This sort of activity still has a considerable market in our country; there is a type of person who is not the least interested in providing timely help but is extremely enthusiastic about making perfection still more perfect. Middle-aged and young cadres taking up leadership posts must keep clear heads and shun flattery. Comrade Deng Yingchao has put it well: Don't feel very pleased with yourself or get dizzy when someone heaps praises on you; how can he carry the sedan chair if you do not get into it when he brings it? The key to the problem lies in whether we should travel in sedan chairs. Actually, it is important to know one's limitations. One newly-appointed minister declared, he feels that he is very far from meeting the demands of his job in ideological level work ability, knowledge and experience. Hence it is necessary for him to study assiduously, to study the party's principles and policies, economic management, and scientific knowledge, and rely on collective leadership, on old cadres who have retired from the first line, and on the cadres, experts and masses to fulfill the tasks assigned by the party and state. This humble and prudent attitude is praiseworthy. We believe that the middle-aged and young cadres will all have this feeling -- that their burdens are not light and their tasks arduous -- and will not fall into blindness because of the flattery of certain people.

Second, we hope that they will stick to principles and will not practice favoritism. When a cadre is promoted, certain relatives and friends will come along to seek his help in solving this or that problem. There are still many unhealthy trends in the party and in society, and phenomena such as striking up illicit relationships and going in by the back door are very common. We have only the obligation to wholeheartedly seek the interests of the broad masses, and we certainly do not have the right to use our powers to pursue our own interests or that of small cliques. We must therefore stick to principles and avoid practicing favoritism; we must tell the truth and avoid stressing face. Unreasonable and illegal demands from our relatives, friends, fellow townsmen or students, old commanders or their sons and daughters must be sternly refused or be put off by gentle persuasion. In short, they must be resisted.

Some people say that it is fairly easy to deal with one's relatives and difficult to avoid "human feelings." There is some truth in that. However, leading cadres can only act according to principles and certainly cannot sacrifice those principles for the sake of human feelings. This has a bearing not only on the prestige of the leaders but also on what kind of atmosphere is built in the units and departments for which they are responsible. It is particularly important not to practice favoritism now, when we are launching the struggle to hit at criminal activities in the economic field.

Third, we hope they will boldly shoulder heavy burdens, carry out more investigations, and work hard to improve their proficiency. They have been selected and promoted amid this revolution of far-reaching significance, the reform of the administrative structure. The fundamental aim of this reform is to oppose bureaucratism and improve work efficiency. They should be fully imbued with this revolutionary spirit. They must be bold to lift their burdens and open up new prospects in work. This first requires that they brace their spirits, work with boldness and possess drive and pioneering zeal. At the same time it requires that they expend a lot of energy and effort in carrying out investigation and study. In many respects there is too much generalized leadership and old convention, and this is precisely because not enough investigation and study has been done. Reviewing our work of recent years, we find that the opening up of new prospects and the gaining of outstanding success were all the result of the principles and policies advanced and the specific measures taken conforming to reality; and the failure to open up new prospects in certain aspects resulted from failure to get an accurate picture of the situation and the truth of the matter. Therefore, in order to open up new prospects in work we must get a firm grasp of the key points and truly carry out an investigation to clarify some issues. At present there are many new problems to be solved in agriculture, industry, finance and trade, and communications, and also in economics, political and legal work, culture and education and so on, and we cannot gain real knowledge and deep insight without conducting deepgoing investigation and study. The majority of the middle-aged and young cadres possess relatively good specialized knowledge and a certain amount of practical experience. However, nobody in the face of new situations and problems can say that his knowledge and experience are fully sufficient. We must work hard to improve our proficiency, study assiduously, and continually improve our standard of leadership.

The hopes of the party and the people in the new leadership groups are very high following the reform of the administrative structure. For the middle-aged and young cadres taking up leadership posts, the tasks are heavy and the road long. We must show by our practical deeds that we are worthy of the heavy commission placed on us by the party and people. Comrade Hu Yaobang said this not long ago: "Our posterity will come up with a certain evaluation of how we have performed, after a number of years, say after 20 years. I think there are three possible evaluations: 1) affirming that we are firm and clear-headed people who get things done; 2) saying that we are bumbling mediocrities; 3) saying that we are stupid rotten fatheads." The middle-aged and young cadres taking up leadership posts today will of course also be tested in the same way, that is, they will be evaluated by those who come after. We believe that under the correct leadership of the Central Committee the middle-aged and young cadres will work conscientiously and hard, study with humility, constantly keep close ties with the masses, and turn into people who get a lot done!

'Ideological Comments'

["Ideological Comments" column by Liu Gewen [0491 7245 2429]: "Several Questions of Cognition on Selecting and Promoting Middle-Aged and Young Cadres"]

[Text] Selecting and promoting large numbers of middle-aged and young cadres and properly carrying out the replacement of old cadres with younger ones are the current issues which our party must immediately start settling. If we fail to settle these issues, it will be hard to keep up our cause, and the four modernizations drive will not proceed smoothly.

However, the party has not reached unanimity of views on the issues. Some comrades invariably hold that it seems conditions are not ripe for selecting and promoting large numbers of middle-aged and young cadres to leading posts at all levels under the present circumstances. Some people have the feeling that although there is a need for selecting and promoting middle-aged and young cadres, it will be very difficult to make everybody happy if we actually select and promote such cadres. Some comrades are anxious about whether middle-aged and young cadres holding leading posts are capable of exercising control over their subordinates. Some other comrades have these misgivings: If the selected middle-aged and young cadres have been proved through practice to be incompetent and if they cannot be demoted after receiving a promotion, what is to be done? It is necessary to reach a common understanding on all these things.

In fact, only the needs and the possibility of attainment determine whether the conditions are ripe. The revolutionary cause urgently requires that large numbers of middle-aged and young cadres gradually and successfully take over from old cadres. There is no doubt about this point. At present, the question is this: Is it possible to meet this requirement? Our answer should be in the affirmative. After making fruitful efforts since the third plenary session, the party has fulfilled the task of bringing order out of chaos in the field of guiding ideology, the party's ideological, political and organizational conditions have been greatly improved, and the political situation of stability and unity has been greatly consolidated, thus providing us with good conditions for carrying out the replacement of old cadres by younger ones. At the same time, we can also see that as a result of the work and struggle carried out and waged since the founding of the PRC more than 30 years ago, a number of middle-aged and young cadres who have both ability and political integrity are mature or are maturing. They have been tempered and have experienced trials and tribulations. They are politically strong, have relatively rich professional knowledge, are quite capable of exercising leadership and are very energetic in carrying out work. They are fully qualified to hold various types of leading posts for promoting the continuous development of our socialist construction cause.

By the "difficulty in making everybody happy" they simply mean that in selecting and promoting middle-aged and young cadres, owing to the fact that some comrades are similar to one another in political quality, ideological standard, working ability, qualifications, record of service and age, selecting one of them is liable to cause some contradictions.

Of course this kind of situation does exist. However, in selecting and promoting cadres, we must not promote egalitarianism. In some people's opinion, with regard to people of the same generation, uniformity must be sought regardless of real conditions. According to them, if there is an opportunity for receiving promotion, people of the same generation must be promoted together; otherwise, none of them should be promoted. It seems to them that only by doing so can one "make everybody happy." It is quite evident that this kind of understanding does not conform to the law of the development of objective things, nor does it take into consideration the needs of the development of the revolutionary cause. The development of things is uneven. Among people of the same generation, there will always be some outstanding people. We should select and promote such outstanding people and allow them to shoulder leadership responsibility. Among people of the same generation, there are both superiors and subordinates; and there are cases of people of the younger generation leading people of the older generation. These things are unavoidable at any time. Every comrade should be pleased to see that a number of outstanding comrades have been promoted to leading positions. This is because their promotions show that there is no lack of successors to carry on our revolutionary cause and that our younger generation is full of promise and is able to develop its ability to the full. Understanding this point and warmly and sincerely supporting work carried out by new leaders are precisely the expressions of a high level of political consciousness. Of course, among those middle-aged and young comrades who have been selected and promoted to leading posts, some may have this or that kind of shortcoming or insufficiency. There is no need to make a fuss about these perfectly normal things. "No gold is pure and no man is perfect." We must not be overcritical.

What counts here is taking the whole situation into account and treasuring the interests of the revolutionary cause. If this question is settled, it will be easy to dispel the opinion on the so-called "difficulty in making everybody happy."

It is not utterly unjustifiable to be anxious about whether middle-aged and young cadres holding leading posts are capable of exercising control over their subordinates. For various reasons, there are always middle-aged and young cadres at newly appointed leading posts failing temporarily to exercise control over their subordinates. Here there can be two situations: One is that these comrades who have just been appointed to leading posts have not familiarized themselves with the conditions and their jobs and also have not established their prestige among the masses; second is that that a few people still have some doubts and misgivings which unavoidably create problems for these comrades. The key to the settlement of the question of failing to exercise control over subordinates lies primarily in these comrades' own practice. This means that they must use their achievements in work and their good work style to dispel some people's doubts and misgivings and to gradually establish their prestige among the masses. At the same time, old comrades are also needed to assist these comrades in execising control over subordinates. Old comrades should assist these comrades in knowing the conditions well and in promoting work as quickly as possible. Old comrades should also do some ideological work and assist people in adopting a correct attitude toward newly promoted cadres. Both old comrades at their posts and old comrades who have withdrawn to the second line should regard these tasks as their sacred duty.

In selecting and promoting middle-aged and young cadres, we should adopt a serious and prudent attitude, solicit people's opinions from all sides and try in every possible way to correctly select and promote good ones. However, due to the influence of both subjective and objective factors, some comrades at leading posts have been proved through practice to be incompetent and some of them have even been proved through practice to be completely erroneously selected. These conditions are rather unavoidable. However unavoidable the conditions, there is nothing to be afraid of. To exercise better leadership over our socialist construction cause, we have already started and will continue implementing a series of measures for reforming our cadre system. Such measures include checking on cadres, rewarding and punishing cadres, supervising cadres, appointing and removing cadres, abolishing the system of lifelong tenure for leading cadres, and fixing the term of office for leading cadres. All these measures are aimed at guaranteeing that our leading groups at all levels are composed of outstanding and competent cadres. These measures will change the irrational situation in which leading cadres will forever be leading cadres who cannot be demoted. We should try in every possible way to correctly select and promote cadres. However, when we discover that we have erroneously selected and promoted some cadres, we may promptly dismiss such incompetent cadres from their leading posts through proper channels in order to avoid adversely affecting our work.

With the development of our revolutionary cause, we must make unceasing efforts to select and promote middle-aged and young cadres. Every comrade should carefully consider adopting a proper attitude toward this question. Comrade Hu Yaobang said as early as 1956: "Our old comrades should have this awareness: People should always rely on young people to get things done. This principle may not be very clear at present. It will be very clear in 10 to 20 years time. It may take only 20 years for some Young Pioneers to be in charge of some relatively important work. One should not take offense. There is no need to do so because we have fulfilled our historical tasks and entered our new stage — the stage of old age. If we understand this point, we can be called enlightened people. We must train young people to know the way to respect venerable elders. However, old people should also understand the way to take good care of young people... This is not a personal question. Understanding this point may be described as a kind of awareness. It is a socialist awareness." ("Be a Bugle Call and the Mouthpiece of Battle") Although these words were uttered more than 20 years ago, reading them today is still of benefit to us. If we can say that this demand set on old comrades more than 20 years ago was not an excessive one, our present stress on this point appears to be more realistic and necessary. We really know without a doubt that our vast numbers of old cadres have this kind of consciousness.

RENMIN RIBAO CITES LENIN, MAO ON CORRUPTION

[Report: "Some Expositions of Lenin and Comrade Mao Zedong on Opposing the Moral Corruption and Degeneration of Communist Party Members" -- capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Text] Editor's note: The "decision of the CCP Central Committee and the State Council on struggle against criminal activities in the economic field" pointed out that "cadres of our party, especially middle-ranking and senior cadres, should all restudy relevant expositions by Lenin and Comrade Mao Zedong, seriously and firmly maintain our party's character as the vanguard of the working class, and maintain the complete integrity of Communist Party members. The ideological level and political consciousness of Communist Party members should never be allowed to slip, let alone permit communists to become corrupt and degenerated." To coordinate the study by comrades of the whole party, we have selected and compiled "some expositions of Lenin and Comrade Mao Zedong opposing the moral corruption and degeneration of Communist Party members."

The expositions by Lenin were mainly selected from his works during the period when the Soviet Union was pursuing its new economic policies; while those by Mao Zedong were selected mainly from his work shortly before and after the founding of the PRC. The circumstances we are now in are quite different from those of the Soviet Union at that time and are also different from those of our country then. But, all the basic principles and sentiments contained in their expositions are entirely applicable today. In other words, no matter what social and economic policies are pursued and whatever conditions we are in, communists must always uphold the proletarian stand, maintain communist purity and never permit corruption or moral laxity. Restudying these expositions will help us, under the new historical conditions, to maintain our equilibrium, to truly "resist corruption and to always refrain from being contaminated," to serve the people wholeheartedly and strive for communism all of one's life. [end editor's note]

UPHOLDING THE PRINCIPLE OF THE PROLETARIAN POLITICAL PARTIES

To preserve the ideological and political independence of the party of the proletariat is the constant, immutable and absolute duty of socialists. Whoever fails to fulfill this duty, IN FACT, ceases to be a socialist, however sincere his "socialist" (verbal socialist) convictions may be. ("Socialist Political Party and Nonparty Revolutionism," "Complete Works of Lenin" vol 10, p 60)

The great work of uniting and consolidating the fighting army of the revolutionary proletariat cannot be carried out unless a line of demarcation is drawn and ruthless struggle is waged against those who serve to spread bourgeois influence among the proletariat. ("Resolution Adopted by the Second Paris Group of the R.S.D.L.P. on the State of Affairs in the Party," "Complete Works of Lenin," vol 17, p 205)

And when we changed our economic policy, the danger became still greater, because, consisting as it does of a vast number of economic, workday trifles, which one usually becomes accustomed to and fails to be aware of, economics calls for special attention and effort and more peremptorily demands that we learn the proper methods of overcoming this danger. The restoration of capitalism, the development of the bourgeoisie, the development of bourgeois relations in the sphere of trade, and so on -- this constitutes the danger that is peculiar to our present period of economic development, to our present gradual approach to the solution of problems that are far more difficult than previous problems have been. There must not be the slightest misunderstanding about this. ("Seventh Moscow Gubernia Conference of the Russian Communist Party," "Complete Works of Lenin" vol 33, pp 76-77)

We should admit that some Communist Party members are not useful at all, because they do not realize that their task is to restrict, prohibit, control and crack, then and there, those who commit crimes and severely deal with ANY CAPITALISM WHICH GOES BEYOND THE SCOPE OF THE STATE CAPITALISM (THE STATE MENTIONED HERE REFERS TO OUR UNDERSTANDING OF THE CONCEPT AND TASK OF THE STATE). (Lenin: "On the Tasks of the Judicial People's Committee Under the New Economic Policy," 20 February 1922)

A communist should have largeness of mind and he should be staunch and active, looking upon the interests of the revolution as his very life and subordinating his personal interests to those of the revolution; always and everywhere he should adhere to principle and wage a tireless struggle against all incorrect ideas and actions, so as to consolidate the collective life of the party and strengthen the ties between the party and the masses; he should be more concerned about the party and the masses than about any individual, and more concerned about others than about himself. Only thus can he be considered a communist. ("Combat Liberalism" 7 September 1937, "Selected Works of Mao Zedong," vol 2, p 332)

COMMUNIST PARTY MEMBERS SHOULD SERVE THE PEOPLE WHOLEHEARTEDLY

At no time and in under no circumstance should a communist place his personal interests first; he should subordinate them to the interests of the nation and of the masses. Hence, selfishness, slackness, corruption, seeking the limelight and so on, are most contemptible, while selflessness, working with all one's energy, wholehearted devotion to public duty, and quiet hard work will command respect. ("The Role of the Chinese Communist Party in the National War," ibid, vol 2, p 488)

Through rectification we must strive to carry forward our party's tradition of plain living and hard struggle. Since our victory in the revolution, the revolutionary will of some of our comrades has been waning, their revolutionary enthusiasm has been ebbing, their spirit of wholehearted service to the people has been flagging, and so has the death-defying spirit they displayed in the days of fighting against our enemies; at the same time, they are clamoring for position and for the limelight, becoming particular about what they eat and wear, competing for salary and scrambling for fame and gain -- all these tendencies are growing.... A communist is supposed to work hard and to serve the people with his whole heart, not with half or two-thirds of it. Those whose revolutionary will has been waning should have their spirits revived through rectification. ("Persevere in Plain Living and Hard Struggle, Maintain Close Ties With the Masses," ibid, vol 5, pp 419-420)

We should maintain the same vigor, the same revolutionary enthusiasm and the same death-defying spirit we displayed in the years of the revolutionary war and carry our revolutionary work through to the end.... Some comrades are lacking in this enthusiasm and spirit and have stopped making progress. This is not a wholesome phenomenon, and education should be conducted among them. ("Persevere in Plain Living and Hard Struggle, Maintain Close Ties With the Masses, ibid, vol 5 pp 420-421)

USING COMMUNIST IDEAS TO RESIST THE CORROSION OF CAPITALIST IDEAS

We shall obtain tremendous economic gains from concessions. Of course, when their dwelling areas are created they will bring capitalist customs along with them and they will corrupt the peasantry. We must be on the alert and exercise our communist counterinfluence at every step. This too is a kind of war, a duel between two methods, two political and economic systems -- the communist and the capitalist. We shall prove that we are the stronger. ("Speech Delivered at a Meeting of Activists of the Moscow Organization of the R.C.P.(B), 6 December 1920," "Collected Works of Lenin," vol 31, p 416)

We must not forget for a moment that the bourgeois and petit bourgeois element is fighting against the Soviet system in two ways; on the one hand, it is operating from without...on the other hand, this element operates from within and takes advantage of every manifestation of disintegration, of every weakness, in order to bribe, to increase in discipline, laxity and chaos. ("The Immediate Tasks of the Soviet Government," "Collected Works of Lenin," vol 27, p 243)

We know perfectly well that the economic basis of profiteering is both the same proprietors, who are exceptionally widespread in Russia, and private capitalism, of which every member of the petit bourgeois is an agent. We know that the million tentacles of this petit bourgeois octopus time and again encircle various sections of the workers and that, instead of state monopoly, profiteering forces its way into every pore of our social and economic organism. ("The Tax in Kind," "Collected Works of Lenin," vol 32, p 322)

We must firmly reject and criticize all the decadent bourgeois systems, ideologies and ways of life of foreign countries. But this should in no way prevent us from learning the advanced sciences and technologies of capitalist countries and whatever is scientific in the management of their enterprises. In the developed industrial countries they run their enterprises with fewer people and greater efficiency and they know how to do business. All this should be learned well in accordance with our own principles in order to improve our work.... Neither the indiscriminate rejection of everything foreign, whether scientific, technological or cultural, nor the indiscriminate imitation of everything foreign as noted above, has anything in common with the Marxist attitude, and neither in any way benefits our cause. ("On the Ten Major Relationships," 25 April 1956, "Selected Works of Mao Zedong," vol 5, p 287)

In the past China was a colonial and semicolonial country, not an imperialist power, and was always bullied by others. Its industry and agriculture are not developed and its scientific and technological level is low, and except for its vast territory, rich resources, large population, long history, the "Dream of the Red Chamber" in literature, and so on, China is inferior to other countries in many respects, and so has no reason to feel conceited. However, there are people who, having been slaves too long, feel inferior in everything and don't stand up straight in the presence of foreigners. They are just like Chia Kuei in the opera the "Famen Temple" who, when asked to take a seat, refuses to do so, giving the excuse that he is used to standing in attendance. Here we need to arouse ourselves, enhance our national confidence and encourage the spirit typified by "scorn U.S. imperialism," which was fostered during the movement to resist U.S. aggression and aid Korea. ("On the Ten Major Relationships," "Selected Works of Mao Zedong" vol 5, p 287)

Scrupulously and resolutely preserving the communist purity of party members, and protecting the useful part of the capitalist sector of the socialist economy to enable it to develop appropriately, are both indispensable tasks for us in the period of resisting Japan and building a democratic republic. In this period it is possible that some communists may be corrupted by the bourgeoisie and that capitalist ideas may emerge among members of the party, and we must fight against these decadent ideas. However, we should not mistakenly carry over the struggle against capitalist ideas within the party to the field of social economy and oppose the capitalist sector of the economy. We must draw a clear line of demarcation between the two. ("Preface and Postscript to 'Rural Surveys'," 19 April 1941, "Selected Works of Mao Zedong," vol 3, p 751)

With victory, certain sentiments may grow within the party -- arrogance, the airs of a self-styled hero, inertia and unwillingness to make progress, love of pleasure and distaste for continued hard living. With victory, the people will be grateful to us and the bourgeoisie will come forward to flatter us. It has been proved that the enemy cannot conquer us by force of arms. However, the flattery of the bourgeoisie may conquer the weak-willed in our ranks. There may be some communists, who were not conquered by enemies with guns and were worthy of the name of heroes for standing up to these enemies, but who cannot withstand sugar-coated bullets; they will be defeated by sugar-coated bullets. We must guard against such a situation. Achieving nationwide victory is only the first step in the Long March of 10,000 li. Even if this step is worthy of pride, it is a comparatively tiny step; that which will be more worthy of pride is yet to come. After several decades, the victory of the Chinese people's democratic revolution, viewed in retrospect, will seem like only a brief prologue to a long drama. A drama begins with a prologue, but the prologue is not the climax. The Chinese revolution is great, but the road after the revolution will be longer and the work greater and more arduous.

This must now be made clear in the party. The comrades must be taught to remain modest, prudent and free from arrogance and rashness in their style of work. The comrades must be taught to preserve the style of plain living and hard struggle, We have the Marxist-Leninist weapon of criticism and self-criticism. We can get rid of a bad style and keep the good. We can learn what we do not know. We are not only good at destroying the old world, we are also good at building the new. Not only can the Chinese people live without begging alms from the imperialists, they will live a better life than that in the imperialist countries. ("Report to the Second Plenary Session of the Seventh CCP Central Committee," 5 March 1949, "Selected Works of Mao Zedong," vol 4, pp 1376-1377)

SEVERELY PUNISH ELEMENTS WHO ARE GUILTY OF CORRUPTION AND WHO VIOLATE LAW AND DISCIPLINE

The nature of the achievements of the revolution inevitably changes in conformity with the transition from the war front to the economic front, the transition to the new economic policy, and the conditions that primarily demand higher productivity of labor, greater labor discipline. At such a time improvements at home are the major achievements of the revolution; a neither salient, striking, nor immediately perceptible improvement in labor, in its organization and results; and an improvement from the viewpoint of the fight against the influence of the petit bourgeois and petit bourgeois-anarchist element, which corrupts both the proletariat and the party. To achieve such an improvement, the party must be purged of those who have lost touch with the masses (let alone, of course, those who discredit the party in the eyes of the masses). ("Purging the Party," "Collected Works of Lenin," vol 33, p 20)

We need to have a good cleanup of the whole party, which will thoroughly uncover all cases of corruption, whether major, medium or minor, and aim the main blows at the most corrupt, while following the policy of educating and remolding the medium and minor embezzlers so that they will not relapse. Only thus can we check the grave danger of many party members being corroded by the bourgeoisie, put an end to a situation already foreseen at the second plenary session of the seventh Central Committee and carry out the principle of combating corrosion then laid down. Be sure to give this all your attention. ("On the Struggle Against the 'Three Evils' and the 'Five Evils,'" 30 November 1951, "Selected Works of Mao Zedong" vol 5, p 53)

Particular attention must be paid to the fact that the corrosion of cadres by the bourgeoisie results in serious cases of corruption. Be sure to detect, expose and punish those involved and to take this as a major struggle. ("On the Struggle Against the 'Three Evils' and the 'Five Evils,'" 30 November 1951, ibid, vol 5, p 53)

Party committees at all levels should make a determined effort to punish and clear out of party and government organizations those violators of law and discipline who are bitterly hated by the masses, and the worst among them should be executed so as to assuage the people's anger and help educate the cadres and the masses. ("Combat Bureaucracy, Commandism and Violation of Law and Discipline," 5 January 1953, "Selected Works of Mao Zedong," vol 5, p 53)

COMMUNIST PARTY MEMBERS SHOULD BE DEALT WITH IN ACCORDANCE WITH MORE SEVERE LAW AND DISCIPLINE

The court should inflict heavier punishment on Communist Party members (Lenin: "On the Mutual Relations Between the Party Organs of the Judicial and Reconnaissance Organs," 19 November 1921)

Is there any place which has discussed the DEMONSTRATION TRIALS for punishing those villains who abuse the new economic policies? The answer is no, because no such trial has been conducted. The People's Commissariat for Justice has "forgotten" that this is a matter which it should deal with. It has failed to grasp, supervise and consolidate the work of the people's courts and failed to teach them to RUTHLESSLY AND EXPEDITIOUSLY PUNISH (EVEN EXECUTION BY SHOOTING) those who abuse the new economic policies. This is exactly the duties of the People's Commissariat for Justice. It should be responsible for this. However, the People's Commissariat for Justice has not worked energetically in this respect, because it has not yet started this work.

The educational significance of trials is great. Have we paid attention to this matter? Have we considered the actual results? No, we have not. However, this is fundamental in judicial work.

It is also fundamental that punishment meted out to Communist Party members should be three times heavier than that to nonparty persons. The People's Commissariat for Justice has also neglected this matter. (Lenin: "The Tasks of the People's Commissariat for Justice Under the Conditions of the New Economic Policies," 20 February 1922)

We should reiterate to all provincial party committees that those who have, even to the slightest extent, "influenced" the court so as to mitigate the offense of a Communist Party member will be EXPELLED FROM THE PARTY by the central authorities.

A general order should be issued to the People's Commissariat for Justice (to be transmitted to various provincial party committees) that courts should inflict HEAVIER PUNISHMENT on Communist Party members than nonparty persons.

Any people's judicial officers and members of the People's Commissariat for Justice who fail to implement the above stipulation will be DISMISSED FROM THEIR POSTS. (Lenin: "A Letter to the Politburo of the Central Committee of the Russian Communist Party (B)," 18 March 1922)

FORUM ON DECORUM, COURTESY MONTH HELD IN BEIJING

OW071007 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1206 GMT 5 May 82

[Text] Beijing, 5 May (XINHUA) -- To promote activities of the "five stresses and four beauties" to become deep and lasting in building socialist spiritual civilization is an important strategic task during the new historical period, and party committees at various levels must include this task as a top agenda item and pay keen attention to leading and promoting the activities systematically down to the grassroots level. This was the central theme at the forum held in the capital to sum up the "all-people decorum and courtesy month" activities. The forum, which was held 26 April-4 May, was called by the CCP Central Committee's Propaganda Department and the CYL Central Committee in accordance with the instructions of the party Central Committee.

Wang Zhen, Wan Li, Xi Zhongxun, Wang Renzhong, Bo Yibo and other leading comrades met with and talked to all participating comrades on the morning of 4 May.

During the forum, Deng Liqun, director of the party Central Committee's Propaganda Department relayed central leading comrades' suggestions on the building of spiritual civilization and other work related to party building, thus enabling all participants to penetratingly understand that doing a successful job in building spiritual civilization is one of the fundamental guarantees for persisting in the socialist path and accomplishing the four modernizations and that promoting activities of the "five stresses and four beauties" in a deep-going and lasting way is inseparable from the accomplishment of the party's long-range historical task.

The forum summed up the achievements and experience in China's first "all-people decorum and courtesy month" and discussed in particular how to promote activities of the "five stresses and four beauties" on a regular and lasting basis. The forum pointed out that the first "all-people decorum and courtesy month" was held after the mass activities of the "five stresses and four beauties" had been carried out for over 1 year. The scale and momentum of the month-long activities, their good social effect and deep influence on the masses were rarely seen in recent years. During the month, hundreds of millions of people voluntarily and enthusiastically took part, in an organized manner, in activities to change bad habits and customs and transform social traditions, thereby providing useful experience for us to rely on and mobilize the masses in building socialist spiritual civilization. Through the month-long activities, gratifying changes have taken place in the environment and the appearance of most large and medium-sized cities and some counties, townships and villages throughout the country.

Relations between people have improved to a certain extent. Especially, the month-long activities have heightened the revolutionary spirit of the masses of party members, cadres and people and enhanced their confidence in rectifying party style and improving social practice and public order.

The forum held that the primary reason for being able to mobilize hundreds of millions of the masses in such a short time and to achieve better than anticipated results during the first "all-people decorum and courtesy month" was that the call by the party Central Committee and State Council correctly reflected the aspirations and demands of the people. Leading party, governmnet and army cadres at various levels took a personal hand in leading and doing solid work, thereby bringing into full play the party's central role, the government's organizational and commanding role, the army's exemplary role, CYL organizations' subsidiary role and the model role of Communist Party and CYL members. All units, departments and localities proceeded from reality and fully mobilized, organized and relied on the masses in tackling the "public hazards" and carrying out the month-long activities in a solid and lively manner.

The forum pointed out that, while assessing the achievement and experience and fully affirming the masses' initiative and pioneering spirit, we must also note the shortcomings of our work in organizing and leading the activities. Primarily, some comrades failed to understand the great significance of the activities, to conduct in-depth and meticulous ideological education, and to combine the activities with the actual situation in their respective localities, causing a failure in making the activities take deep root. In view of the masses' demand to broaden the results and experience of the "all-people decorum and courtesy month" and frequently apply them to the activities of the "five stresses and four beauties" to score more concrete achievements in transforming social traditions and building spiritual civilization, we should make the best use of the situation and effectively carry out the activities enduringly.

The forum emphatically pointed out that the key to making the "five stresses and four beauties" become regular practice lies in leadership at all levels' firmly being guided by the principle of "paying attention to both civilizations." The idea and habitual practice of setting material against spiritual civilization, grasping only economic construction while ignoring the building of spiritual civilization, must be corrected. The activities of the "five stresses and four beauties" are valuable because they are created for the masses by the party's ideological and political work under current specific conditions. Using simple, explicit and popular language, the "five stresses and four beauties" combine the communist basic demand for changing bad habits and customs and transforming social traditions with solving the practical problems in current social life and practice in our country, offering us a good way to educate and train a new generation of socialist-minded people.

The forum held that the central link in carrying out in-depth activities of the "five stresses and four beauties" is to persist in educating the people with communist ideology and ethics. The "five stresses and four beauties" is based on the current moral standard of the Chinese people and, at the same time, is guided by the principle of communist ethics. It is necessary to conduct education on the working class' historical mission and fine traditions among the workers in order to enhance their sense of responsibility of being their own masters. It is necessary to educate the peasants to consider the interests of the state, collective and individual simultaneously and promote among the peasants the practices of working hard to become rich, giving priority to public needs, and finding it a pleasure to help others. It is necessary to teach young people and children to love the motherland, the party and the socialist system and help them gradually form a correct outlook on life and the world. In regions inhabited by national minorities, it is necessary to further strengthen education in unity among nationalities. In handling relations among the people, it is necessary to advocate the principles of weighing the interests of the whole above all, respecting, helping and trusting each other, and serving and being responsible to the people.

It is necessary to concretely apply the principle of communist ethics in social mores and professional, marriage and family morality. Newspapers, radio and TV broadcasts and literary and artistic works should frequently depict new people, things and practices reflecting communist ideology and ethics. Unfolding activities of the "five stresses and four beauties" is also an important aspect in the struggle against corrosion. It is necessary to teach party members and cadres to uphold the purity of communist ideology and educate the people, especially the youngsters, to raise our national pride and confidence, so that the people of all nationalities in our country, men and women, young and old, party members and nonparty members, can become people who have ideals, moral sense and culture and abide by the law.

The forum held that, in making the "five stresses and four beauties" take deep root, leading cadres at various levels must go down to the grassroots and, concentrating efforts on key areas and typical examples, personally conduct investigation and study and strengthen inspection and supervision in leading the grassroots. On the basis of effective ideological education, it is necessary to set up and improve various rules and regulations and let them become a regular practice and system. Elimination of dirtiness, disorderliness and poor service must be included in municipal construction plans in all localities. All large and medium-sized cities must adopt legislation to strengthen city management and maintain social morality. Industrial, transport, finance and trade enterprises, schools, literary and art, sports and public health institutions must formulate or revise their own work regulations and service pledges. Rural villages must also formulate village rules in light of the actual situation. It is necessary to continuously expand the backbone members of the "five stresses and four beauties." In enforcing rules and regulations, it is necessary to rely on both professional personnel and mass supervision. All-level party committees and governments must formulate unified plans, persist in tackling problems comprehensively, effectively strengthen leadership over the activities and carry them out in a down-to-earth but flexible way. Leading cadres at various levels must carry forward the party's fine traditions and play an exemplary role in the activities of the "five stresses and four beauties."

The forum participants visited the Capital Iron and Steel Company on the morning of 5 May. They were greatly inspired by the experience and results achieved by the company in unfolding the activities of the "five stresses and four beauties" and building socialist spiritual civilization.

Attending the forum were party committee secretaries in charge of the activities; directors of the party committee's propaganda department; CYL secretaries from all provinces, municipalities, and autonomous regions and the 17 cities including Nanjing, Hangzhou, Qingdao, Fuzhou, Sanming, Shenyang, Dalian, Harbin, Taiyuan, Xian, Wuhan, Luoyang, Guangzhou, Guilin, Chengdu, Chongqing and Kunming; as well as responsible comrades of departments concerned under the party Central Committee; totalling some 130.

XINHUA Commentator

[XINHUA commentator's article: "Pluck Up the Spirit and Create a New Phase of Five Stresses and Four Beauties Activities"]

[Text] In accordance with instructions issued by the CCP Central Committee, the CCP Central Committee Propaganda Department and the CYL Central Committee jointly held a forum recently to summarize the activities of the "all-people decorum and courtesy month." It also summed up the achievements and experiences of our country's first "all-people decorum and courtesy month" activities.

The five stresses and four beauties campaign, which is regarded as an important component of the building of socialist spiritual civilization, has been carried out in our country's urban and rural areas for more than 1 year.

The reason why the campaign was welcomed immediately by the broad masses of people is because it conforms to the needs of our country's socialist modernization and reflects the interests and aspirations of the people of our country. The broad masses of people have hated the decline in the moral standard in society which resulted from 10 years of chaos and have eagerly demanded a change in the situation of "dirt, disorder and discourtesy" which has existed widely. Therefore, when the CCP Central Committee and the State Council issued the call to carry out the activities of "all-people decorum and courtesy month," the broad masses of people immediately and consciously went into action to bring their high level of socialist initiative and creativity as well as their communist spirit into full play. As a result, we have achieved better results in these activities than expected. This fact shows that as long as we persist in doing things which are supported by the people, our efforts are bound to be crowned with success.

The CCP Central Committee has stressed many times that in order to build a modern and powerful socialist country, we must on the one hand pay attention to constructing socialist material civilization, and, on the other hand, take care of constructing socialist spiritual civilization. The construction efforts in these two fields complement and promote each other. Neither can be given one-sided attention or be neglected. Experience in the past year or so shows that the five stresses and four beauties campaign is not only an important part of the construction of socialist spiritual civilization but is also an important requirement for the building of socialist material civilization. It plays a very important role in guaranteeing the socialist direction of economic development and in stimulating the building of material civilization. Good social order, good working conditions, harmonious and comradely relations, lofty communist ideals and high moral principles are factors that can arouse enthusiasm in people for labor or work, raise their ideological level, and turn spiritual and moral strength into a tremendous source of material strength in practice. From this it can be seen that to firmly uphold the guiding idea of "tackling two civilizations at the same time" is the key to the proper promotion of the five stresses and four beauties campaign.

The first "all-people decorum and courtesy month" activity started in our country in March this year was launched on the basis of a five stresses and four beauties campaign of over a year ago. It was a large-scale, spectacular event. The social results achieved were satisfactory. The impact on the masses was profound -- an impact seldom witnessed. The achievements scored in the "all-people decorum and courtesy month" activities and the five stresses and four beauties campaign of over a year ago are, fundamentally speaking, attributable to the fact that we have raised a clear-cut banner and conducted education in communist thinking and communist morality in a realistic manner among the people.

Persistently conducting education in communist thinking among the people is our party's glorious tradition and is also an important guarantee for continuous victories in our party's cause. In the period of new democratic revolution, Comrade Mao Zedong stressed the need to give more publicity to communist thinking. During the time when the Red Army was being founded and during the Yanan period, despite extremely great difficulties encountered because of material shortages, we persisted in conducting education in communist thinking and upheld the party style. This enabled us to maintain a fighting spirit and to defeat the powerful enemy. After the founding of the PRC, the material foundation of the 1950's was far less sound than that of today. But due to persistence in conducting education in communist thinking, our party's fine traditions were continuously carried forward. The healthy social style then prevailing is now still talked about with relish. Today we have launched a five stresses and four beauties campaign. This is a good way that our party has found -- under new historical conditions by pooling mass wisdom -- to use communist thinking to educate, cultivate and train a generation of new-type socialist people. Here it must be pointed out that giving publicity to communist thinking and carrying out the general and specific policies at their current stages are matters which are marked with both differences and similarities and which complement each other.

The view that in the socialist period we can only promote distribution according to work and that the conducting of education in communist thinking goes "beyond the historical stage" is wrong. Certain people have advocated pursuing so-called "individual values" in a departure from the values of society and the collective. They have, without analysis or criticism, blindly promoted certain ideas of the Western bourgeoisie. This will only weaken and negate propaganda and education about communist thinking, lead to ideological confusion and result in a state of passivity. This must be resolutely overcome and guarded against. We should also clearly note that though our exploiting class has been eliminated, class struggle within a given scope will remain for a long time. The struggle being waged at present to crack down on serious criminal activities in the economic field is a prominent manifestation. Persisting in waging a lasting struggle against corruption by capitalist thinking is an important aspect of the effort to build socialist spiritual civilization and the launching of the five stresses and four beauties campaign. We must educate party members and party cadres so that they will maintain the purity of their communist thinking. We must educate the people, and young people in particular, so that they will raise their national self-respect and self-confidence and strive to "refrain from being corrupted and always remain untainted." Thus our people will become persons who have ideals, moral principles, cultural knowledge and a sense of discipline.

Now, with the first "all-people decorum and courtesy month" over, our task is to immediately divert the enthusiasm generated in this month to conducting a penetrating and sustained five stresses and four beauties campaign, which should be successfully carried out at lower levels, so that a new situation can be created. To achieve this aim depends, to a large degree, on whether the level of awareness of leading cadres is high, whether their spirits are aroused and whether they can personally the take the lead in practice and set personal examples, taking full advantage of a favorable situation. The leading comrades of the CCP Central Committee recently stressed that ideological and political work is first of all a matter of educating and convincing cadres. With the thinking of cadres rectified and their level of awareness raised, the masses then can be easily taken care of. The basic aim of ideological and political education is to educate and convince people. Educators must first receive education themselves and then set examples. In the recent "all-people decorum and courtesy month" activities, the people noticed that leading cadres at all levels personally got involved and took the lead in practice. They have thus become greatly inspired and further strengthened their confidence in launching the five stresses and four beauties campaign and in building spiritual civilization. The masses happily say: If things continue this way there surely will be a great change in our country in 3 or 5 years! Our leading cadres at all levels must not betray the expectations of the people. They must seriously carry out the duties with which we are charged by history and conduct the five stresses and four beauties campaign in a penetrating and sustained manner.

He also urged them to carry out the instructions and decisions recently issued by the central authorities on striking at serious crimes in the economic sector, to continue to unfold activities to promote spiritual civilization in a deepgoing way, to strengthen military, professional, technical and management training and to straighten out organization and discipline. The leading organizations of the fleet must set an example in modernization and regularization and make contributions toward enhancing the armed forces' fighting capability, he stressed.

[Text] The 10 May JIEFANGJUN BAO prominently displays on page one a report saying that the leading organ of the PLA naval units on the Xisha Islands showed warm concern for sentries guarding the remote Zhongjian Islet on the South China Sea front. In the past 4 years a total of 27 cadres have taken turns in staying on this islet at selected grassroots units to help improve work and gain firsthand experience. They lived and ate together with the fighters, pulled guard and patrol duties and studied and engaged in recreational activities together with them. They earnestly passed on experiences, provided help and set examples in training cadres. They did not remain inactive as guests or run things by themselves without consulting others. They were warmly praised by the cadres and fighters stationed on this islet.

In this connection, JIEFANGJUN BAO carries a commentary entitled "It Is Necessary To Work at the Grassroots Units With a Sense of Responsibility."

[Excerpts] Since the 3d plenary session of the 11th party Central Committee, party committees at all levels in our province have paid attention to training cadres on rotation in order to raise cadres' ideological, political, professional and technical levels and to quickly turn out a cadre corps that is revolutionized, younger, more educated and more professional. Preliminary results have been achieved. In the past several years, nearly 400,000 cadres at various levels and of different lines have been trained. After undergoing training, the large number of cadres, in particular the party's leading cadres at all levels, have enhanced their consciousness of implementing the party's line, principles and policies. They have also revitalized their revolutionary spirit and strengthened their revolutionary unity. At the same time, they also learned something about management, science and culture, thereby greatly improving their professional level and managerial ability.

To accelerate the building of the cadres corps and meet the needs of the four modernizations, the cadre training task in our province has entered a new stage after several years of efforts. Now a basic network for cadre education exists. Over 90 party schools throughout the province have been revived, and quite a few are in fairly good operational status. The total capacity of cadre schools, including regular training classes, is 5,000. Some colleges and secondary technical schools have set up cadre study classes. There are also cadre study classes run by evening, sparetime and television universities. In the meantime, the contingent of teachers has also been strengthened. Party and cadre schools throughout the province have 1,000 teachers plus 500 part-time instructors and teachers. A number of party and cadre schools have edited new sets of teaching materials or reedited original ones in accordance with their respective needs.

Party committees at all levels and many departments are now reviewing the performance of schools which have trained cadres in the recent past and are revising the training plan with a view to streamlining the administrative structure for training cadres.

Military District Discussions

OW081441 Nanjing Jiangsu Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 6 May 82

[Text] Since the publication of the draft of the revised Constitution of the PRC, the leading comrades of the Jiangsu Provincial Military District have earnestly studied and discussed the draft and freely expressed their views. Most of the leading comrades of the provincial military district are veteran revolutionaries of the war years. After reading the draft of the revised constitution and the explanations, they sighed with emotion. They said that the draft of the revised constitution has been bought with the lives and blood of the Chinese people. It is a summing-up of the experience of socialist revolution and construction in China over the past 32 years, they added.

During the discussions, the leading comrades of the provincial military district unanimously held that the inclusion of the four basic principles in the preamble of the draft gives expression to the common wishes of all the people and the commanders and fighters of the armed forces.

Peng Bo, political commissar of the provincial military district, said: The stress on adherence to the four basic principles in the draft is a reliable guarantee for China's prosperity. Practice since the party's third plenary session amply shows that only by upholding the party's leadership can we expect to advance in national construction.

The leading comrades also seriously discussed the fundamental rights and duties of citizens and the articles concerning the military. They maintained that one of the major tasks of the provincial military district is to do militia work well. The draft has created favorable conditions for doing militia work well by regarding participation in militia organizations as an obligation for the citizens. The comrades pledged to carry forward the revolutionary spirit of hard work and to make efforts for thorough implementation of organizational, political and military work among the militia.

Nanjing PLA Units on Draft

OW071351 Shanghai JIEFANG RIBAO in Chinese 1 May 82 p 2

[Text] Recently, the leading comrades of the Nanjing PLA units and the responsible persons of its headquarters, political and logistics departments earnestly studied the draft of the revised constitution and Comrade Peng Zhen's explanations on the draft of the revised constitution. Commander Nie Fengzhi and First Political Commissar Guo Linxiang took part in discussions. They put forward directives and made arrangements. During the discussions, everyone was of the opinion that publication of the draft of revised constitution for discussion by the people throughout the country indicates China's excellent political situation and embodies our high level of socialist democracy. First Political Commissar Guo Linxiang said that inclusion of the four basic principles in the constitution is of important immediate and far-reaching historical significance.

Deputy Commander Xiang Shouzhi said: The current draft of the revised constitution is more comprehensive, substantial and precise than previous constitutions. He pointed out the following characteristics: 1) Stress on the four basic principles has provided an effective guarantee for the progress of the four modernizations. 2) Elimination of the "leftist" ideology conforms to China's situation. 3) Substantive contents added to the constitution makes it more perfect. 4) Omission of empty clauses makes the constitution more concrete and precise. They held that the establishment of the Central Military Council, as stipulated in the draft of the revised consitution, to lead the nation's armed forces makes clear the status of the armed forces in the state system and will facilitate military revolutionization, modernization and regularization.

Deputy Commander Zhan Danan said: The article in the draft of the revised constitution which reads: "It is the honorable obligation of the citizens of the People's Republic of China to perform military service and to join militia organizations according to the law" enhances the morale of the military and educates them to perform military service contentedly. Commander Nie Fengzhi called on the Nanjing PLA units to concentrate on the study and discussion of the draft of the revised constitution, article by article and sentence by sentence.

CHINA DAILY REPORTS TRIBULATIONS OF MODEL WORKER

HK090033 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 9 May 82 p 3

[Report: "Worker Given Hard Time for Invention"]

[Text] A worker whose invention brought him only trouble and abuse for seven years has been named a "model worker" by the Jiangxi provincial government, the JIANGXI DAILY reports.

The paper said Zhang Jiefeng, 43, developed a precise cutting technique for manufacturing watch mechanisms. It reduced six production procedures to one, reduced the waste rate from 50 to 20 percent and saved 1,586 working hours for every 100,000 mechanisms produced. Zhang's case is an example of how exemplary workers are mistreated by jealous leaders. Zhang started working on the invention in 1975, when he was assigned to the Nanchang watch factory. He drew 60 blue-prints for appraisal by the factory heads, but no one took notice of them. Despite this, he continued his research. His workshop director created difficulties for him, giving him extra tasks and forbidding others to help. When Zhang appealed to the vice-director of the factory, he in turn charged Zhang with having bad motives and wanting to show off.

In November 1979, Zhang completed his investigation with the help of colleagues, but the factory officials refused to acknowledge it, or report it to higher levels. When officials from the Jiangxi scientific information institute of machinery went to investigate the new technique's use in production, factory officials lied to them, asserting the factory had not adopted the technique. In fact, it had already manufactured more than 500,000 mechanisms this way.

Zhang continued to be criticized at meetings even after his invention had proved sound. Last December, the Nanchang scientific committee in Jiangxi awarded him a first prize for scientific innovation. But the factory still refused to recognize him. The Jiangxi machinery engineering society wanted to make him a member of the organization, but the factory refused to approve. After the matter became known to the central and provincial governments, the case got attention. At a recent conference of model workers, Bai Dongcai, first secretary of the Communist Party Committee of Jiangxi Province, referred to it and called all party organizations, government departments and trade unions to back up model workers and their work.

SHANGHAI'S WANG ZHEN ON MODERN HISTORY STUDY

OW051055 Shanghai City Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 4 May 82

[Text] According to the college journal published by the Jiaotong University in Shanghai, Comrade Wang Zhen recently called on faculty member, students, staff members and workers of Jiaotong University to conscientiously study contemporary Chinese history and to vigorously carry forward the patriotic spirit of the Chinese people in working hard for the country's prosperity. Comrade Wang Zhen is concurrently chairman of the committee of administrative affairs of Jiaotong University. In his recent remarks on work at the university, he pointed out that not only students but also youths, workers, cadres and teachers should study contemporary Chinese history. Without studying contemporary history, we will know nothing about the history of the period from the opium war to the May 4th movement, and without any knowledge about China's past or without any understanding of the humiliation suffered by semifeudal and semicolonial old China, how can we understand the well-being enjoyed by the people of new China and how can we understand that such well-being has not been easily attained? In this connection, it is of great importance that make-up lessons in contemporary history be given to youths.

The party committee of Jiaotong University has decided to organize all faculty members, students, staff members and workers to study (Pu Shen's) "From the Opium War to the May 4th Movement."

GUANGDONG ON RECTIFYING BASIC-LEVEL ORGANIZATIONS

HK071310 Guangzhou Guangdong Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 6 May 82

[Station commentary: "Conscientiously Consolidate and Rectify Rural Basic-Level Organizations"]

[Summary] The Central Committee has emphatically pointed out that some rural basic-level leading groups recently have become lax or even paralyzed. As a result, many things have been neglected and many unhealthy practices have become widespread. This is a problem we must conscientiously solve.

One of the reasons for this situation is the fact that the leadership was poorly prepared in carrying out economic reform in the rural areas, and therefore when new problems cropped up, it was at a loss as to what to do. Now that we have set up the production responsibility system throughout our rural areas, it becomes even more imperative to consolidate and rectify the rural basic-level leading groups in order to ensure implementation of the rural policies of the party and the state. Party committees at all levels must pay great attention to this work. In order to solve this problem before the autumn harvest, the leading groups of our counties and communes should make vigorous plans and organize strong work teams and send them to the brigades and production teams where the leading groups are seriously lax or paralyzed.

The commentary says that in consolidating and rectifying the leading groups, "we should help our cadres to solve the problems in their actual work. We should first of all strengthen ideological education in order to raise the understanding of our cadres and make them firmly believe that the party's rural policies which have been formulated since its third plenary session are correct. Thus their various misunderstandings about the implementation of the responsibility system will be cleared up and they will clearly understand the present situation and pluck up their spirit to do their work well."

The commentary says: "Second, we should do a good job of reorganizing the personnel of these leading groups and afixing responsibility and remuneration for the cadres. We should clearly and definitely assign responsibility to each cadre and link his remuneration to his performance and to the economic effect of his management and administration. At present, we should help our basic-level organizations to form strong and firm leading groups that the masses will have confidence in. We should support the cadres and encourage them to be courageous in exercising their leadership and in cracking down on unhealthy trends." "Of course, we should not indulge them or ignore their shortcomings and errors. We should dismiss a few cadres who most of the masses oppose in strict accordance with policies and on the basis of adequate ideological work. Their dismissals should be carried out and the resulting vacancies filled through democratic elections." The commentary concludes that by solving this problem, the situation in the province's rural areas will become even more satisfactory.

PAPER ON 'NEUROSIS' FROM ANTICORRUPTION STRUGGLE

[Article by Lao Lie [5071 3525]: "An Informal Chat on 'Neurosis'"]

[Text] I have heard that there are people in some units who become very nervous as soon as they have any contact with "people from the outside." They try to either delay or postpone all normal activities, and when it becomes impossible to avoid them any longer, they make a few perfunctory gestures in the company of at least two or three colleagues. Even during the "all-people decorum and courtesy month" they tried desperately to avoid receiving or seeing off guests and paying official calls. Why is this? They hope to avoid any possible suspicion of graft, corruption or bribery. This is probably a form of "neurosis." What would happen if someone dared to take responsibility? Perhaps people would start gossiping behind their backs. This, of course, is another form of neurosis. However, no one would dare suggest this situation does not exist. Even in writing this article, the author did not say "there are a good number of people in many units," but said instead "some people in some units" and used such phrases as "perhaps," "if" "it seems" and "maybe." The same neurosis is the cause for this.

The illness of "neurosis" has been with us for a long time and although many cures have been attempted, little seems to have changed. For some people the illness worsens with each passing day. The cases mentioned above are not particularly serious ones. But the condition of some older patients is far more serious. For example, in the case of opposition to corruption, only the phrases "south gate of the motherland," "neighboring Hong Kong and Macao," "situated in a forward position," "pernicious influence" and so on have been widely used and few effective preventive actions have been taken against such corrosive influence. The masses have voiced their discontent about smuggling, corrupt activities and decadent music, which have become noticeable during the past few years, and the leaders have already taken notice of this and have taken certain actions against them. However, no resolute actions have been taken so far. Why is this? It is because those who act in a diametrically opposed manner will inevitably be accused of boycotting the open-door policy. They dare not vigorously promote opposition until the higher levels have made decisions and passed on "orders" to them. Of course, this is also a good sign. It is not too late to mend the fence even after some sheep have been lost. But the so-called leaders should be farsighted. They should have mended the fence before the sheep were lost. What accounts for their attitude of fearing this and that and being reluctant to solve problems if not "neurosis." This is not a minor thing, but is related to the mood of the entire nation. This is obviously a more serious symptom than avoiding "people from the outside" as mentioned above.

It is clear that corruption, bribery, decadent music and other sinister things were connected with the exploiting class in ancient society. The rulers certainly "turned a blind eye and a deaf ear" to problems and then secretly instigated these things. However, in a new society like ours, even small children who are 3 feet tall, not to mention adults, know these are illegal, immoral and uncivilized things. The reason the new society can remain new is because it mercilessly clears away the muddy water. Such actions need not wait for decisions by higher levels, or for repeated inspections and exploitation and meticulous planning, as in construction of the Gezhouba power station and the opening of the South Sea oilfield. They have nothing to do with the open-door policy and emancipation of the mind. Even if the open-door policy is implemented to a further extent, our country will not tolerate corruption or bribery; even if the people's minds are further emancipated, our people will not tolerate decadent music. This is common sense, and everybody knows it. It is because we implement the open-door policy and emancipate our minds that we can maintain sharp vigilance and oppose corruption. If we say we must wait for instructions at the earliest possible time? It is right and proper for people to take such actions on their own initiative. Everyone should take action against corruption in the same way one gets rid of rats. However, for a prolonged period, some people had not taken resolute actions against rats! The illness of "neurosis" was causing mischief during this period. When there is an attack of this sickness, all revolutionary principles such as "everything proceeding from reality," "party spirit," "sense of responsibility," "act of initiative" and so on will be lost.

We can imagine that if the situation drags on, a fatal pattern will be gradually formed -- everyone is currying favor with senior officials, section members are currying favor with section heads, section heads are currying favor with department heads and department heads are currying favor with ministers. In other words, it means everyone seeks approval from each higher level. People refuse to take action without relevant instructions, and only work according to instructions, faithfully doing what they are told to do. They simply ignore the actual situation. In a big country like ours, with a total area of 9 million square km and a population of 1 billion, with so many tasks to perform and numerous tasks remaining to be undertaken, even our competent leaders can hardly plan for each type of production, issue instructions and make decisions around the clock. It is necessary for leaders at all levels to proceed from reality, master the party's principles and push forward and solve problems. If all areas, units and departments suffer from the illness of "neuroses," only "currying favor" and "waiting for approval," how can we achieve the building of the four modernizations! What we need now is the revolutionary spirit and determination to take responsibility for and shoulder heavy tasks on one's own initiative.

WUHAN PLA LEADER DISCUSSES OPPOSING DEGENERACY

HK090621 Wuhan Hubei Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 8 May 82

[Text] Political Commissar Yan Zheng of the Wuhan PLA units made an important speech on 8 May at the units' symposium on building socialist spiritual civilization. He dwelt on getting a good grasp of the struggle to oppose corruption and degeneracy and maintain purity. Comrade Yan Zheng pointed out in his speech: The struggle to combat serious criminal activities in the economic field has already been launched in an all-round way. We must have a clear understanding of the essence of this struggle. We must have a resolute attitude and provide effective leadership. At the same time, we must attach great importance to grasping the anticorruption struggle in the ideological field, constantly eliminate the influence of capitalist poison in ideology and apply communist ideology to overcome capitalist ideology. We must get a good grasp of education in communist ideals and patriotism, and ensure that our PLA units become a revolutionary force with ideals, morality, culture and discipline. Comrade Yan Zheng also pointed out: In the struggle to oppose corruption and degeneracy, the leading cadres must stick to the truth and stress the principles of party spirit, not face. They must overcome bureaucratism, carry out rectification of the ideology and work style of the leadership stratum and strengthen education and control of their sons and daughters, to enhance political awareness and standards of ideology and policy.

In conclusion, Comrade Yan Zheng demanded that all units pay attention to studying the new situations and problems in the drive to build spiritual civilization, grasp typical examples, promptly sum up and popularize progressive experiences and carry out this drive in depth. He expressed the hope that the progressive representatives attending the meeting would act with humility and prudence, refrain from arrogance and impetuosity, play a model and leading role in the struggle to oppose corruption and degeneracy and make new contributions to speeding up the army's modernization and regulation.

GUANGDONG CAPITAL CONSTRUCTION -- The Guangdong Provincial People's Government has recently made a decision on strengthening the planning and management of capital construction and strictly controlling the scale of capital construction. The decision pointed out that the province has now relaxed the management of capital construction and has too many capital construction projects. This has caused a shortage of capital construction materials and raised the costs of the projects. This has also resulted in the province investing a large amount of money in these projects and caused commodity prices to rise. This is not beneficial to the readjustment and healthy development of the economy. It is therefore essential to strictly control the size of capital construction in accordance with the plan of the state and the province. No one is allowed to expand the size of capital construction without the approval of the province. [Guangzhou Guangdong Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 4 May 82 HK]

SICHUAN RIBAO ON STRUGGLE AGAINST ECONOMIC CRIME

HK080318 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 7 May 82

[Report on 8 May SICHUAN RIBAO contributing commentator's article: "Heighten Understanding, Strengthen Leadership and Carry Through to the End the Struggle Against Serious Criminal Activities in the Economic Field"]

[Excerpts] At present, a struggle to combat serious illegal and criminal activities in the economic field is unfolding in depth throughout the province. Initial results have been achieved. The masses are in high spirits and applaud this drive. Viewing the province as a whole, however, conditions vary somewhat from place to place. In a few areas and units action and progress are slow, and the effort has not gotten underway well. Certain units have not even made a move. The main reason for this is that certain leading departments and cadres still have all kinds of erroneous and muddled notions on this struggle. They therefore fail to lead it effectively. Hence, further solving the problems of understanding of these leading cadres is a key to whether this struggle can be carried through to the end.

The article says: Why is it that certain people still lack the proper viewpoint and attitude in this struggle even though the central authorities have repeatedly pointed out the gravity, harmfulness and danger of illegal and criminal activities in the economic field and declared that it is necessary to be firm and clear-headed Marxists who get things done in this struggle to oppose corruption by capitalist ideology? In the final analysis, the fundamental problem is one of standpoint and viewpoint. First, these people always view problems from their individual standpoint and are afraid of this and that; what they are really afraid of is that the individual will suffer. Second, they always view problems from the angle of the partial interests of their own areas, units and small cliques. Seeing that certain criminals who smuggle and peddle contraband and engage in profiteering have made money for their units, their vision becomes blurred and they are unable to visualize that these criminal activities undermine socialism, seriously pollute and corrupt party work style and popular practices and do tremendous harm to the state and the entire society.

These comrades must break out of their circles of individualism and departmentalism as quickly as possible, take the stand of the party and people and insist on putting the interests of the party and state above everything. Only thus will they be able to clearly understand the gravity, harmfulness and danger of criminal activities in the economic field and the necessity and urgency of unfolding this struggle, maintain political unity with the Central Committee and thus boldly lead this struggle.

The article says: In order to strengthen leadership and launch this struggle more effectively, comrades who have made ordinary mistakes and been involved in criminal activities in varying degrees must take the initiative to clean themselves up and advance to the battle with clear conscience. Comrades who have been involved must proceed from the overall situation of benefiting the launching of this struggle, take the initiative to clean themselves up and make a clean breast of their problems.

The article says in conclusion: The struggle to combat serious illegal and criminal activities in the economic field is one of the most practical and effective measures for rectifying the party and its work style in current conditions. Every party member, and especially the leading cadres, must take a firm and clear-cut stand. All party members and party cadres must maintain the party's nature as the vanguard force of the working class and the communist purity of party members, and always remember that the party's aim is to serve the people wholeheartedly and that its ultimate goal is to realize the great ideal of communism. They must resolutely carry through to the end the struggle to hit at illegal and criminal activities in the economic field.

The main projects are: construction of the Beijing-Qinhuangdao railroad, expected to be opened to traffice in 1984; the expansion of the coal wharf at Qinhuangdao harbor; and the electrification of the Beijing-Datong railroad. All three projects are aimed at improving coal export facilities for Shanxi Province. Other projects include: the double-tracking of 57 km of the Shijiazhuang-Dezhou railroad, expected to be completed this year, and the construction of the Handan-Changzhi railroad. These two projects are also aimed at improving Shanxi coal export facilities.

Hebei is currently building a number of large and medium coal mine shafts. These include the (Qianjiaying) and (Fanggezhuang) mines, each producing 4 million tons a year; (Dongpang) mine, producing 1.8 million tons a year; and (Linnantang) and (Jiulongkou) mines, each producing 1.2 million tons a year. Also under construction are the (Fanggezhuang) coal-washing plant, with an annual capacity of 1.8 million tons. Construction of new generators sets is underway at the (Douhe) and (Matou) power plants. The capacity of these two plants will be 1.55 million kw and 850,000 kw respectively. A 100,000 kw generator at the (Xiaohuayuan) power plant will go into operation this year. New wells will be drilled at the Huabei oilfield this year. The plan is to increase annual crude oil output by 800,000 tons.

SHANXI LEADERS REPORT ON ECONOMIC PROGRESS

[Report: "Provincial People's Government Report to Provincial People's Congress Standing Committee Points Out the Shanxi Economic Situation Is Improving Every Year"]

[Text] Vice Governor and provincial planning committee Chairman Jia Chongzhi and deputy director of the provincial financial department Yan Yuansuo have reported to the 14th meeting of the provincial people's congress standing committee on the province's implementation of the 1981 national economic plan and the results of the year's final accounts. The facts show that our province's economic situation is improving year by year and that the future is bright.

Last year, most of our province experienced serious drought. Due to our relaxation of policy and implementation of various forms of agricultural production responsibility system, total agricultural output value in our province as a whole still managed to reach 4.06 billion yuan, an increase of 4.9 percent over the previous year. Total grain output reached 14.5 billion jin, an increase of 5.7 percent over the previous year. Apart from cotton, increases over 1980 were recorded in rape, beet, tobacco, pork and beef. Total industrial output value for the whole province reached 10.9 billion yuan, of which light industrial output value accounted for 3.79 billion yuan, an increase of 10.01 percent over the previous year. The power industry showed steady development. Crude coal output reached 132 million tons, an increase of 11.51 million tons over the previous year. Electricity output increased by 3.6 percent over the previous year. Markets in both the urban and rural areas became increasingly livelier. Our province has carried out a preliminary reform of the commercial system and, with state-run commerce as the main component, has restored and developed some 20,000 collective and individual commercial units, catering units and service trade networks and points. The number of urban and rural trade markets has expanded to 668. There has been a relatively great increase in the sources of high- and middle-grade commodities and certain commodities necessary in the everyday lives of the people throughout the province over the previous year. Among these, bicycles and sewing machines rose by 280 percent and 28.2 percent respectively.

Retail sales of social commodities rose by 9.2 percent compared with the previous year, while the volume of business in the trade markets increased by 45 percent over the previous years. By cutting down on capital construction and other types of expenditure and organizing revenue, a balance was achieved in our province's revenue and expenditure. In the course of readjustment, new developments have been scored in science and technology, culture and education, public health, physical culture and so on. There were 100 important results of scientific research throughout the province, which have been rewarded by the provincial people's government. With the development of economic construction, there were increases last year in the income of peasants and staff workers throughout the province. Average per capita income among the peasnats reached about 133 yuan, over 15 yuan more than the previous year. Total wages of the staff and workers throughout the province increased by 6 percent over the previous year. From 1979 to 1981, as far as per household income of a staff member or worker was concerned, after deducting expenses incurred as a result of a rise in commodity prices of 9.9 percent, actual monthly per capita income rose by 29.2 percent. Last year, jobs were found for 170,000 people awaiting employment throughout the province. The floor area of newly constructed residences amounted to 6.49 million square meters, and over 800,000 commune member households in the rural areas built new houses.

Jia Chongzhi and Yan Yuansuo also reported on certain problems inherent in our province's economic construction and financial work, and on the arrangements for the 1982 national economic plan and budget.

ENERGY PLANNING CENTER ESTABLISHED IN TIANJIN

OW072036 Beijing XINHUA in English 1534 GMT 7 May 82

[Text] Tianjin, May 7 (XINHUA) -- The Tianjin Energy Planning and Training Center was established today at Tianjin University under an agreement signed by the Chinese State Scientific and Technological Commission and the commission of the European communities. The center will help China establish a modern energy planning and management system.

Last year, the communities decided to help China set up the Beijing Energy Management and Training Center, the Nanjing Energy Conservation Training Center and the Tianjin Center. The decision was made when Deputy Director General Michel Carpentier of the Directorate (energy) of the European communities, visited China late last year.

The Tianjin center is run by the research institute of the systems engineering of Tianjin University. Both Chinese experts and experts from the communities will give lectures. Studying in the center will be teachers and researchers specializing in energy systems engineering from Chinese colleges and research institutes. They will study theories and technology dealing with energy exploration, development, production, processing, storage, conversion, transportation and environmental protection.

HEILONGJIANG'S YANG YICHEN ON INTELLECTUALS

SK090254 Harbin Heilongjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 8 May 82

[Excerpt] At the second plenary meeting of the second committee of the provincial association for science and technology today, Yang Yichen, first secretary of the provincial CCP committee, said: Our province is determined to make good arrangements for working and living conditions of scientific and technolgical personnel and intellectuals in the next 2 or 3 years.

Comrade Yang Yichen said: The number of scientific and technological personnel in our province fails short of the province's rich natural resources and economic development. Besides, the scientific and technological personnel are unevenly distributed. Associations for science and technology must play a part in the work of reassigning intellectuals who are not practicing what they have been trained for or those things in which they excel. Efforts should be made to discover and cultivate people of talent. The various trades and professions may also recruit or engage skillful craftsman to make up for the shortage of scientific and technological personnel.

(Wang Ximing) and (Li Yafei), respectively chairman and vice chairman of the provincial association for science and technology, reported this morning to leading comrades of the provincial CCP committee including Yang Yichen and Li Jianbai on the situation of the association since its second congress. Leading comrades of the provincial CCP committee including Yang Yichen and Li Jianbai heard the report, attended the plenary meeting and spoke.

LIAONING ON COLLECTIVE EFFORTS FOR PROSPERITY

SK060845 Shenyang Liaoning Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 5 May 82

[Short station commentary: "Correctly Handle Relations Between Prospering Through Collective and Individual Efforts"]

[Excerpt] The experience gained by the Haicheng County CCP Committee in assigning a work force to redress urrestrained production in some communes and brigades furnishes us important enlightenment. How to correctly handle relations between prospering through collective effort and prospering through individual efforts is an important problem requiring solution in our efforts to develop the agricultural economy.

People often quote the adage that "the small streams rise when the main stream is high" to describe relations between the collective and the individual. Many facts have shown that to encourage and help commune members develop domestic sideline production while consolidating and developing the collective economy will make both the main stream and small streams rise and both the collective and individual prosper. If commune members are absorbed in making profits for themselves, drop out of the collective and abandon the plow in favor of unrestraine private production, it will eventually cause confusion for rural work and even shake agriculture as the foundation, doing damage to the collective economy and commune members.

There must a difference of importance between prospering by way of developing the collective economy and prospering through running domestic sideline production that should never be reversed. Every rural commune member must foster the idea of prospering through collective efforts and concentrate his energy on developing collective production. Prospering through individual efforts without the help of the collective economy is impossible. Even if a few people do prosper, their prosperity is impossible to sustain.

This, of course, does not mean that domestic sideline production is banned. On the contrary, domestic sideline production should be vigorously developed as long as it does not involve exploitation and speculation, damage the state's and collective's resources or hamper commune members in participating in collective production.

SOFTBALL TEAM NOT TO PARTICIPATE IN TAIWAN GAMES

OW081432 Beijing XINHUA in English 1351 GMT 8 May 82

[Text] Beijing, May 8 (XINHUA) -- The Chinese Softball Association will not send its team to Taipei to take part in the fifth world women's softball championships.

This is because Don Porter, secretary-general of the International Softball Federation (I.S.F.), has so far not removed the political obstacle arising from the "two Chinas" plot concocted by him together with the Chinese Taipei Softball Association regarding the upcoming championships. These remarks were made by a responsible member of the Chinese Softball Association in an interview with XINHUA here today.

He said that in a message to Porter on April 22, the Chinese Softball association urged Porter to instantly request [Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese at 1131 GMT on 8 May in its version reads: "immediately instruct"] the Chinese Taipei Softball Association to make public its guarantee that it will refrain from the use of the name, flag and anthem of the so-called "Republic of China" on any occasion during the championship. So far, Porter has failed to make any reply, and the Chinese Taipei Softball Association has refused to make any guarantee publicly. "Since there is an agreement, why can't it be made known? Why can't the Chinese Taipei Softball Association make any guarantee?" he asked, noting, "it is obvious that there is something fishy about it."

He refuted the statement made by Porter at a press conference on April 29 that all of China's worries or objections had been eased. A "memorandum" signed by Porter on April 7 to all I.S.F. member associations points out that the Chinese Taipei Softball Association had given up its right to hoist flag and play anthem which was accorded to the association in accordance with an I.S.F. resolution. As Porter's words are still ringing in one's ears, some of the responsible members of the Chinese Taipei Softball Association and the Chinese Taipei Olympic Committee declared unambiguously: "Our country enjoys the right to hoist flag and play anthem at the championships. Everything is left in our hands. "We have not given up the right to raise flag and play anthem," they said. In the talks with Porter, "no one has made any compromise and no one has made any concession" and so on and so forth. Their talks fully negated Porter's statement in the "memorandum" and Porter has made no clarification or refutation. On the contrary, he tried his best to defend and absolve them.

Obviously, Porter and the Chinese Taipei Softball Association have virtually made no guarantee against the use of the so-called "national flag" and "national anthem" during the championships. In fact, they aim to inveigle more member associations into sending their teams to participate in the forthcoming championships and thus falling into the political trap of "two Chinas."

He continued that in Porter's "memorandum" on April 7 and his subsequent messages to the Chinese Softball Association, he talked ambiguously in quite a few places in order to set traps. For example, the "memorandum" only mentioned the agreement made by the Chinese Taipei Softball ASsociation not to exercise its right to hoist flag and play anthem at the opening ceremony. But it avoided mentioning the closing ceremony and the fact that during the whole course of the championships, the flag of the so-called "Republic of China" would not be raised and its anthem played. Porter said in his message on April 8 that the Chinese Taipei Softball Association agreed that it would observe the rules of the International Olympic Committee governing the use of flag, anthem, logo and emblem with the exception of the I.S.F.'s protocol procedures. Obviously, Porter has an axe to grind by saying "with the exception of the I.S.F.'s protocol procedures." By misinterpreting the I.S.F.'s protocol procedures, the Chinese Taipei Softball Association demanded that its flag be hoisted and anthem played.

He pointed out that in view of the attitudes of Don Porter and some of the responsible members of the Chinese Taipei Softball Association, the Chinese Softball Association demanded that the I.S.F. immediately adopt a resolution that the world championships be moved out of Taipei. Porter has not made any reply to this request. In these circumstances, the Chinese Softball Association will not send its team to participate in the fifth world women's softball championships slated for Taipei.

He concluded by saying that the I.S.F. and the Chinese Taipei Softball Association worked hand in glove to obstruct the Chinese Softball Association from sending its team to participate in the forthcoming championships, and deprive players from the Chinese mainland of their opportunity to meet their compatriots in Taiwan and watch the performance of players from other countries and regions and promote friendship with them. The I.S.F. should be held responsible for all the consequnces arising therefrom.

PRC Team 'Indignant' With ISF

OW081254 Beijing XINHUA in English 1232 GMT 8 May 82

[Excerpt] Beijing, May 8 (XINHUA) -- The players of the Chinese national women's softball team told XINHUA today that "we are indignant about some leading members of the International Softball Federation obstructing our participation in the fifth world women's softball championships in Taibei."

They said: "The arrangement with the 'national flag' and 'national anthem' made by I.S.F. Secretary General Don Porter and the Chinese Taibei Softball Association shows how he deliberately created a 'two-China' situation, and thus sabotaged the get-together between the sportsmen of the two sides of the Straits and obstructed exchanges in skill between the Chinese sportsmen and the sportsmen of various countries."

RENMIN RIBAO Commentary

HK090412 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0320 GMT 9 May 82

[Text] Beijing, 9 May (XINHUA) -- The 9 May RENMIN RIBAO carries a commentator's article entitled "It Is Impermissible To Use International Sports Contests To Concoct 'Two Chinas'." The text of the article follows:

On 22 April, a responsible person of the Chinese Softball Association cabled ISF Secretary General Porter demanding that he instruct the Chinese Taibei Softball Association to publicly guarantee that the Taiwan authorities' "national flag" and "national anthem" will not be used at the forthcoming world women's softball championships. However, even now Porter has still not replied. Why has he not replied? There is evidently something fishy about it. This shows that Porter's stuff about "all the political problems have been solved," and "the Chinese Taibei Softball Association agrees not to hoist the Taiwan 'national flag' or play the Taiwan 'national anthem' at the opening ceremony or at any time during the championships," is nothing but a pack of lies to deceive people. As a result, the resolutions of the IOC and ISF regarding the Chinese Taibei Softball Association observed and there can be no guarantee that Taiwan will not hoist its "national flag" or play its "national anthem" during the world women's softball championships. A responsible person of the Chinese Softball Association announced on 8 May that under these circumstances, the Chinese Softball Association will not be sending a team to Taibei to take part in the fifth world women's softball championships. This is the consequence of Porter's and company's willfully flouting the relevant resolutions of the IOC and ISF and indulging in political plots in the field of international sports.

It must be pointed out the Porter has consistently been playing tricks concerning the issues of "hoisting the flag" and "playing the anthem" in order to deceive the ISF member organizations and world opinion. Porter visited Taibei from 4 to 6 April. On arrival back in the United States, he declared that all the political problems had been solved, babbling that the Chinese Taibei Softball Association had agreed not to hoist Taiwan's "national flag" or play Taiwan's National anthem" at the women's softball championships. He also stated this in his cable to the ISF's member organizations on 7 April. However, Porter had no sooner spoken than responsible persons of the Chinese Taibei Softball Association and the Chinese Taibei Olympic Committee openly threatened that they would not give up the right to hoist the flag and play the anthem, and also stated that they had not made any concessions on this point in their talks with Porter. By saying this, they actually negated Porter's words. Yet Porter neither publicly clarified this nor did he rebut it. It is easy to see from this that Porter and the Taiwan side actually colluded to set a political trap. It is worth noting that the joint statement issued after Porter's talks in Taibei with the Chinese Taibei Softball Association went so far as to describe that association as "a national organization in charge of softball." The Chinese Taibei Softball Association is a local organization of the Chinese Softball Association, yet Porter actually described China's Taiwan Province as a state. Porter's absurd arguments not only totally violate the resolutions of the IOC and the ISF Executive Council, but also represent a big exposure of how these championships have been openly used to concoct a "two Chinas" plot.

Porter's plot to concoct "two Chinas" in the world women's softball championships is by no means an isolated incident. Recently there have indeed been certain people in international circles making trouble and sparking a small adverse current. However, the 1 billion Chinese people will absolutely not tolerate anyone engaging in any "two Chinas" or "one China and one Taiwan" plot, and that applies in diplomatic relations, economic relations and cultural and sports exchanges. Anyone who miscalculates the Chinese people's unshakable resolve on this issue will be lifting a rock to drop it on his own feet.

PAPERS DISCUSS BUSH TRIP, U.S. ARMS SALES

HSIN WAN PAO Article

HK090730 Hong Kong HSIN WAN PAO in Chinese 9 May 82 p 1

["New Talk" column: "The Talks Were Beneficial, the Obstacle Remains"]

[Text] U.S. Vice President Bush has concluded his visit to Beijing. Some discussions were held on the question of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan, but no agreement was reached. Chinese and U.S. representatives will continue the discussions. In other words, certain dark shadows and clouds between the two countries have not been dispelled.

As an old friend of China, Bush received a warm welcome in Beijing, but to him as the U.S. vice president, Beijing naturally could make no concessions on a matter of principle.

Deng Xiaoping said: I hope that as a result of your visit to Beijing, you will be able to dispel the dark shadows and clouds hanging over our relations. Zhao Ziyang said: I believe that these talks help you to understand our stand. I hope they will also help to solve the difficult problems existing between us. Wan Li said: The frank and candid discussions of the past 2 days have been beneficial. People can see more clearly the importance and urgency of clearing away the serious obstacles in Sino-U.S. relations. Although these three used different words, their meaning was the same.

Certain premises are very clear. First, both China and the United States attach importance to normal and good relations. Bush also pointed out: "We feel that U.S.-China relations are extremely important. President Reagan has strongly asserted this. I hope we will be able to understand more deeply the fundamental essence of this relationship." Second, both sides hold that the talks were beneficial, and so they agreed to continue them. Third, both sides know that the present crux in the differences between them is the question of "U.S. arms sales to Taiwan."

The U.S. Government has repeatedly declared that it recognizes China's stand, that is, there is only one China and Taiwan is part of China. This is the principle for the establishment of Sino-U.S. diplomatic relations and was affirmed by the "Shanghai communique." However, on many issues the Reagan administration has in fact gone against the principle that "Taiwan is part of China," and toyed with the trick of "abstract affirmation, concrete negation." On the one hand, they say Taiwan is part of China, and on the other, they deny that "selling arms to Taiwan" is interference in China's internal affairs. There is an obvious contradiction here.

The social systems of China and America are dissimilar, and there are differences between them in many aspects. However, the main obstacle to their relationship is caused by the Reagan administration's continued armed sales to Taiwan. If this problem is solved, the other differences could be described as relatively minor. Since the United States attaches importance to U.S.-China relations, it should carry out a one-China policy in its actual dealings.

WEN WEI PO Article

[Article by Kuan Chien-tzu [4619 6015 1311]: "Bush's Tune Has Ended, But the Echoes Linger"]

[Text] The talks between U.S. Vice President Bush and Chinese leaders have ended, but the echoes are lingering. The issue of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan, which was the main subject of the talks, was not solved, but both sides agreed to continue the talks for a solution. Bush declared at the airport before he departed China that he believes the issue will be solved.

During Mr Bush's visit, he traveled to Hangzhou to see the country south of the Chang Jiang. At this time of year, in late spring, peaches and plums contend in beauty at the West Lake. "Peaches and plums do not profess to be beautiful, but so many people flock to see them that paths have been formed under the trees." When our American friend came, we had swept the flower lanes for him.

In receiving Mr Bush, the Chinese leaders abided by international etiquette and accorded him a friendly and warm welcome. The Chinese leaders were stern regarding the Taiwan issue, but spoke frankly and sincerely. Deng Xiaoping called Bush an old friend of China who has a fairly good understanding of China, and hoped, therefore, that his visit to China on this occasion would sweep away the dark shadowy cloud that has enveloped the relationship between the two countries. This integrates a friendly attitude with a stern stand.

The dark shadowy cloud naturally refers to the U.S. arms sales to Taiwan and the practice of "two Chinas." After his arrival, Bush repeatedly claimed in public and during private talks that the United States attaches importance to Sino-American relations and abides by the principles which established diplomatic relations between the two countries, which recognize that there is only one China and that Taiwan is a part of China. The United States will never practice "two Chinas" or "one China, one Taiwan." Bush also presented President Reagan's letter to Chairman Hu Yaobang as further proof.

Deng Xiaoping, however, still urged him to dispel the dark shadowy cloud, that is to say, in dispelling the dark shadowy cloud, it is necessary to accomplish the deed, namely, the solution of the issue of arms sales to Taiwan. China's stand for a negotiated deadline for arms sales to Taiwan between Washington and Beijing is its final compromise. China is not forcing the United States to stop its arms sales immediately, but grants it a grace period before they must be stopped.

If the United States does not agree to this point, how can it say that it attaches importance to Sino-American relations and recognizes that there is only one China and that Taiwan is a part of China? If the United States eventually does not agree to a deadline, the dark shadowy cloud will eventually engulf Sino-American relations. That is why Premier Wan Li told Bush that it is helpful to have frank and sincere discussions, for they enable people to see more clearly the importance and urgency of removing the serious stumbling block that exists in the relations between China and the United States. In other words, the issue can no longer be left without a solution, or else Sino-American relations will retrogress.

It is said Bush has brought back a reply to President Reagan's letter from the Chinese leaders in which they stress the importance China attaches to preserving Sino-American relations, but they remain firm on the Taiwan issue.

Bush was very pleased to gain a better understanding of China's stand and limitations. What merits our attention is that Bush said that on the basis of his understanding he believes the issue can be solved and Sino-American relations will improve in the next few weeks or months. Does he mean that the United States will take some action?

Bush acted on his own at a press conference: He made public not only President Reagan's letter to Hu Yaobang, but also Reagan's letters to Deng Xiaoping and Zhao Ziyang in early April. It was likely that he had obtained the recipients' approval before he made them public.

There is a common ground in the three letters. They reaffirm that the United States abides by the principle establishing Sino-American relations, which recognizes that there is only one China and that Taiwan is a part of China; that, as a basic principle of U.S. foreign policy, Sino-American relations are favorable to the cause of opposing Soviet expansion and defending world peace; and that it recognizes that as the most difficult and divergent issue in Sino-American relations, the Taiwan issue must be solved.

There is yet another very specific point. Reagan claimed that the United States supports and welcomes China's decision on solving the Taiwan issue peacefully and that the United States recognizes the importance of China's "nine-point proposal" and the 1979 "New Year Message," and he revealed that the United States conveyed its decision and stand on this question to China long ago. Reagan indicated that the differences between the United States and China will be solved under this guideline.

If Reagan's keynote is exactly that, Bush has based his beliefs on a solid foundation. However, it is still necessary to wait for President Reagan to back his words with actions. Let us recall a sentence from RENMIN RIBAO: "Let him who tied the bell on the tiger take it off!"

GUANGDONG OIL DELEGATION PAYS VISIT TO HONG KONG

[By Julie Auyeung]

[Text] A delegation of 11 senior officials and oil engineers from Guangdong Province is currently in Hong Kong to explore possible areas of cooperation between Hong Kong companies and the province. Pinpointed as a major area is the development of its offshore oil supporting industry -- the supporting activity vital to the oil/gas exploration off the south China coast, BUSINESS NEWS [SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST] learned from sources in Guangzhou. The delegation will later leave for Singapore to study the country's oil supply base development. Headed by the chairman of the just-formed South China Sea Petroleum Servicing Corp, Mr Yang Guoqing, this is the first study mission to Hong Kong and Singapore since China invited foreign oil companies to tender for concessions in its territorial waters.

Much effort had previously been put in by the Chinese to prepare for offshore oil drilling, highlighted by the drafting of oil exploration regulations act arrangements to bid for the 43 blocks. "The time is ripe for us to develop our support activities which include catering to the drilling crews, helicopter and marine transport, telecommunications and other services,"sources said. "One of the objectives of the group's visit is to find out what abilities China-owned Hong Kong companies have to help us set up the offshore support services."

Hong Kong companies the delegates will visit include China Resources, Bank of China, China Merchants Steam Navigation Co Ltd, Yau Luen Shipyard, CCIC Finance Co, Guangdong Enterprises and the newly formed China Offshore Oil Servicing (Hong Kong) Ltd, Jardine Matheson, as well as the energy committee of the American Chamber of Commerce. The five-day visit, however, does not include meetings with the Hong Kong Government and foreign oil companies. The South China Sea Petroleum Servicing Corp (of Guangzhou) was formed on Saturday with its major activities being to develop supply bases in China and to provide supporting services for oil exploration. According to a report by China news service, the company had held discussions with many foreign companies on supply bases and supporting services in Guangdong prior to its official formation. Chaired by Mr Yang, the vice-chairman and general manager is Mr Chen Lichung and the vice-chairman is Mr Zhang Zhiyou. The directors are Mr Wei Zhendong, Mr Chen Jun, Mr Ye Xiuqing and Mr Xian Wu.

Meanwhile, a conference on supply base and related supporting activities will be held on May 27 and 28 in Guangzhou, during which foreign experts on the subject will present papers. The conference is organised by the energy committee of the American Chamber of Commerce and it is expected that about 30 Western and 100 Chinese experts will attend. Foreign companies which will present papers are Mobil, Amoco, National Supplies Co, City Bank, Morgan Guaranty and a Norwegian oil company.

JI PENGFEI REITERATES PRC NUCLEAR POLICY

[Text] Beijing, May 10 (XINHUA) -- State Councillor Ji Pengfei today told a delegation from the multi-faith peace mission of the World Conference for Religion and Peace [WCRP] that China advocates prohibition and destruction of all nuclear weapons. The 22-member mission is led by Japan's Niwano Nikkyo.

Ji Pengfei said: "It is very important to defend world peace. The world today is far from tranquil. The superpowers have been talking about disarmament and nuclear balance, but actually they have never put it into practice. The more they have talked, the more nuclear weapons they have produced and the greater the power of those weapons has become." "The development of nuclear weapons by China is entirely for defense, for breaking the nuclear monopoly of the superpowers and for the ultimate abolition of nuclear weapons," he said. "When China exploded its first atomic bomb in 1964, we said at no time and in no circumstances will China be the first to use nuclear weapons, and we will never use nuclear weapons to blackmail nuclear-free countries and zones." "China so far is the only nuclear country which has undertaken such obligations," he said. The councillor also said it is not an easy matter to destroy all nuclear weapons at one time. But we should uphold the principle of not being the first to use such weapons." [quotation mark as received]

Niwano said: "Japan is the only country in the world to have been attacked by atomic bombs. I hope it will be the last country in the world with such an experience."

Archbiship Angelo Fernandes, chairman of the W.C.R.P., said his meetings with Chinese Government and religious leaders made the cause of world peace more hopeful.

The first session of the W.C.R.P. was held in Japan in 1970. The W.C.R.P. council meeting last year in New Delhi decided to send a delegation to five nuclear countries before the second special U.N. session on disarmament opens in June. The peace mission, which arrived May 7, is the guest of the Chinese Buddhist Associaiton, the Chinese Islamic Associaiton and the Chinese Christian Associaiton. The mission comprises representatives of five religious traditions from Japan, India, Pakistan, Singapore, the United States and Britain.

While in Beijing, Kang Maozhao, deputy head of the Chinese delegation to the second speical U.N. session on disarmement, exchanged views on disarmament and prohibition of nuclear tests with the guests. The guests also visited churches and Chinese religious leaders.

KHAMSENGKEO ARTICLE DENIGRATES LAO PARTY CONGRESS

BK101112 Beijing in Lao to Laos 1230 GMT 30 Apr 82

[Article by Khamsengkeo Sengsathit, Lao defector to the PRC, entitled: "The Congress Without Significance"]

[Text] According to a Vientiane radio report, the Lao People's Revolutionary Party [LPRP] will convene its congress 27-30 April 1982. It is apparent that this news has evoked considerable interest among the Lao people in general. This is because the convention of the congress has been rumored among the people for a long time. It has finally been officially announced that the congress will be held in late April, exactly 1 month after the Vietnamese Communist Party [VCP] closed its fifth congress. Public opinion has noted that the date and timing of the congress are not actually significant, because it is known to all that the LPRP is an offshoot of the former Indochinese Communist Party of the present VCP with Le Duan as general secretary.

As everyone is also aware, LPRP cadres at all levels, ranging from the Political Bureau and the Secretariat of the party Central Committee down to the party secretaries of various provinces and lower levels or, in some cases, even down to the level of formal members, in particular intellectual members, as well as all orientations and policies in the political, military, economic, cultural and foreign affairs domains, have been elected or adopted by the Le Duan Vietnamese clique. This is why it has been known to the Lao people and people elsewhere in the world that since the year of the so-called liberation of the whole country, neither the appointment of the party leaders nor the various orientations and policies pursued by the LPRP have conformed with the actual conditions in Laos.

The Lao people of all classes have had to suffer starvation and hardships. The so-called rights to ownership of the country as claimed to be maintained by the Lao people are merely a theory which has never been realized -- a dream which has never come true. In reality, tens of thousands of Lao people, including state employees and party members themselves, have been arrested and detained or killed without reason.

These criminal acts of the Le Duan clique are the root cause of why so many pitiful Lao people of all strata flee the country and become refugees abroad. Such criminal acts have also compelled the truly patriotic Lao people across the country to take up arms, rise up and fight in order to safeguard their national independence and ensure the survival of the Lao race.

Actually, everyone knows that the Lao people belong to a nation which maintains a tradition of heroic struggle and have sufficient ability, initiative, knowledge and intelligence to be the owners of their country and the masters of their own destinies. Therefore, there is no need to bring as many as 50,000-60,000 Vietnamese troops to occupy Laos and oppress, intimidate and bully the Lao people. It is not necessary to bring thousands of so-called Vietnamese experts and advisers to Laos to act as masters controlling the Lao cadres and the LPRP at all levels -- from the highest down to the grassroots level. Such acts by the Le Duan clique will only make the Lao people and people who cherish national independence and justice throughout the world come to understand its ambitious nature and policy of regional hegemonism more clearly. This can be applied to a Lao saying: He who tries to hide reveals himself.

In short, it can be said that it is easy to answer the question as to whether the Third LPRP Congress is significant or not. For it is clear that the LPRP has been under the direct and complete control of the Le Duan Vietnamese clique since its birth. The correct and proper answer is that the Third LPRP Congress is a congress without significance. It is merely an event of which the Le Duan clique will take advantage in order to adopt various measures to force the LPRP to implement the so-called strategic line of special relations between Laos and Vietnam even more strictly. It will do this with a view to speeding up the realization of the Indochina federation under the control of the Le Duan Vietnamese clique, which is ambitious in extending its hegemonism in South Asia and which is absurdly carrying out a program of groundless slander by alleging that the PRC is carrying out a policy of hegemonism. This can be applied to the saying: A thief crying "Stop thief!"

MORE ON VISIT OF THAI FOREIGN MINISTER SITTHI

Sitthi, Huang Hua Hold Talks

OW101306 Beijing XINHUA in English 1251 GMT 10 May 82

[Text] Beijing, May 10 (XINHUA) -- Huang Hua, state councillor and minister of foreign affairs, held talks with Sitthi Sawetsila, foreign minister of Thailand, at the Great Hall of the People here today. Sources said they had sincere and friendly discussions on the situation in the Southeast Asian region, especially the Kampuchean issue. They also discussed other international issues of common concern.

Taking part in the talks were Han Nianlong, advisor to the Chinese Ministry of Foreign Affairs; Kasem S. Kasemsi, under-secretary of state of the Thai Ministry of Foreign Affairs; and Koson Sinthuwanon, Thai ambassador to China.

Sitthi, Huang Address Banquet

OW101648 Beijing XINHUA in English 1627 GMT 10 May 82

[Text] Beijing, May 10 (XINHUA) -- Huang Hua, Chinese state councillor and foreign minister, pledged China's efforts to promote cooperation with ASEAN countries at a banquet for Thai Foreign Minister Sitthi Sawetsila this evening. "The Chinese Government desires to increase its consultation and cooperation with Thailand and other ASEAN countries to safeguard peace in Southeast Asia, check aggression and expansion, and ensure development of our own economies. We want to see living standards and cultural levels of our peoples raised," he said. Huang Hua said people spoke highly of Thailand's important contributions to safeguarding peace and security in Southeast Asia and attached great importance to the efforts made by Thailand and other ASEAN countries in defending the principle of the U.N. Charter and implementing U.N. resolutions on Kampuchea. "The tense situation in Southeast Asia has been aggravated by the continuous aggression against Kampuchea and the repeated armed provocations against Thailand by Vietnam. Vietnamese authorities have consistently ignored U.N. resolutions and have not shown the slightest inclination to give up their aggression and withdraw their armed forces from Kampuchea," he said. Huang Hua said current developments require all justice-upholding countries to adhere to principles and continue their efforts to have Vietnam obey U.N. resolutions and withdraw their armed forces from Kampuchea. This will create conditions for a fair and reasonable settlement of the Kampuchean question. At the same time, he said, justice-upholding nations should work to promote the alliance of all patriotic forces in Kampuchea [at this point, Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese at 1548 GMT on 10 May adds the following words: "... through negotiations..."] as early as possible. This will reinforce the just struggle of the Kampuchean people against Vietnamese aggression.

He said the continuous improvement of Sino-Thai friendship is of great importance to peace in Southeast Asia. The Chinese Government will continue to promote that friendship.

Sitthi said both Thailand and China feel the Kampuchean question is the major disturbance to peace and stability in Southeast Asia. "Although the road leading to the peaceful solution of this issue is tortuous," he said, "we ardently hope the international community will affirm their unity and work for a political solution to the question. They should demand Vietnam withdraw all its troops from Kampuchea and let the Kampuchean people decide their destiny by themselves." "I'm convinced if we can solve the Kampuchean question satisfactorily on the basis of safeguarding the just rights of all Kampuchean people, we will be able to build peace and stability in Asia and in the Southeast Asian region as a whole. This will benefit all countries in these regions. With peace and stability, our two countries, and others in the region, will be able to invest our wealth in the construction and prosperity of our own countries and the well-being of our people. This is a strong desire of Thailand and other ASEAN countries. We hope all countries directly involved in the Kampuchean question, particularly Vietnam, will agree with the international community and work together for the peaceful and just solution of the question in accordance with the U.N. resolutions and the declaration of the International Conference on Kampuchea," Sitthi said. "If Vietnam proves obstinate, refusing to withdraw its troops from Kampuchea and trying to make the present situation a fait accompli by making its puppet regime a legal government, then the Kampuchean question can not be solved," he said.

Thai Paper Reports Meeting

BK100854 Bangkok SIAM RAT in Thai 8 May 82 pp 1, 12

[Text] Ji Pengfei, Chinese Government adviser and a former vice premier, spoke to a visiting Thai media delegation yesterday afternoon when he received the delegation, which included Chet Sutcharitkun, the Foreign Ministry Information Department director general, at the Great Hall of the People in Beijing. Chet and the delegation were accompanied by Thailand's ambassador to Beijing, Koson Sinthuwanon.

Ji Pengfei, asked if China might reach Vietnam a second lesson if the latter should invade Thailand, said the fear that Vietnam might invade Thailand is legitimate, because Vietnam has a plan to occupy all of Indochina, including a part of Thai territory. China will fully back Thailand if that should happen. Whether or not China teaches Vietnam another lesson will depend on the situation at that time.

Ji Pengfei said the Soviet Union is now very active and the thinking of some ASEAN circles is pro-Soviet. He also said one should not view a communist party in a totally negative way. According to Ji Pengfei, China has not denied its connection with the Communist Party of Thailand. He said, however, that a revolution cannot be exported; it is a domestic affair of the country concerned. He said the issue is not one which can be discussed in a few minutes and that it has historical implications. He said China now maintains only moral connections [dan chit chai] with the Communist Party of Thailand. It has not provided other forms of assistance. The Communist Party of Thailand is Thailand's internal affair in which China will not interfere.

According to Ji Pengfei, it is up to Thailand to decide if it wants to destroy the Communist Party of Thailand. The number of Thai Communists who have come to China is not great. China told the Thai prime minister during his visit to China that it is true Thai students have come to China and that China has since sent them back to Thailand in compliance with the Thai Government's request. He said China has never provided weapons to the Thai Communists. It is Thailand's business to decide if it wants to destroy the Thai Communists or negotiate with them. China will not become involved in the issue.

Ji Pengfei, noting that Thailand has a trade deficit with China, said the matter is the concern of the trade attache. China wants to buy such products as rice, sugar and bara rubber from Thailand. Meanwhile, China will try not to aggravate the trade deficit problem further. He said that China is aware of Thailand's burden in providing assistance to refugees along the border and that China will provide whatever assistance it can to Thailand.

IRAQ REDEPLOYS TROOPS ON SOUTHERN IRANIAN FRONT

OW101358 Beijing XINHUA in English 1239 GMT 10 May 82

[Text] Basrah, May 9 (XINHUA) -- Correspondent Ding Wen reports: Iraq is busy redeploying its troops on the southern Iranian frontline, withdrawing its troops from Susangerd and stationing massive military forces on the border and at the Iranian port Khorramshahr in particular.

Interviewed by foreign reporters, Mohammad Zai, commander of the Iraqi troops stationed in Susangerd area, said that immediately after receiving the order from the General Command on May 7, his troops withdrew from Susangerd to Hoveyzeh, 30 kilometers southwest of Susangerd.

In an Iraqi border area, about 40 kilometers to the east of Nashwa, the correspondent saw many fortifications, tanks, armored vehicles and artillery. Further ahead near Hoveyzeh, the correspondent saw Iraqi troops, gun carriages and personnel and equipment carriers withdrawing from the town. He recalled that at the beginning of 1980 when the war entered its fifth month, there had been dozens of positions of tanks, guns and air defence missiles between the Iraqi border and Susangerd. Now, they have all been withdrawn. He was told that during their withdrawal, the Iraqi troops were not attacked by Iran.

In port Khorramshahr, the correspondent witnessed an utterly different situation. Large numbers of Iraqi infantrymen, tank and armored units have been deployed there. Military vehicles and gun carriages were going one after another to the front in Khorramshahr. An Iraqi officer told the correspondent that three divisions of Iranian troops in the area had been wiped out in the past seven days or more. "The Iraqi troops will never withdraw from Khorramshahr if Iran does not recognize Iraq's rights," the officer said.

RENMIN RIBAO COMMENTATOR ON CORRUPT PARTY CADRE

OW102333 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1512 GMT 10 May 82

[Text] Beijing, 10 May (XINHUA) -- Subject: "Party Discipline Must Be Strictly Enforced" by RENMIN RIBAO commentator:

Cheng Zhanbiao, as a veteran cadre, was actually blinded by greed and lost all human dignity. He supported and connived with his daughter to run away to Hong Kong and become the concubine of a capitalist. Although this is a very rare case, it shows that capitalist ideas have already corrupted some party member-cadres to a shocking degree. This kind of person, who has abandoned himself to vice, must be strictly punished according to party discipline. To strictly enforce party discipline and maintain our party's purity, it is absolutely necessary and correct for the Yunnan Provincial CCP Committee to decide to expel Cheng Zhanbiao from the party.

Although Cheng Zhanbiao has been a party member for nearly 50 years, for a long time he has paid no attention to ideological transformation, and has finally fallen captive to decadent capitalist ideas. Blinded by greed, he hankered for money and pursued a rotten bourgeois way of life by hook or by crook. In Cheng Zhanbiao's head, party discipline, moral concept, party spirit and principle are things that are long gone. What he did show was that he has degenerated totally and lost his qualifications as a Communist Party member.

A Communist Party member is an advanced element of the proletariat. He should be unconditionally faithful to the cause of proletarian revolution and should have lofty communist ideology, qualities and style. In personal growth and behavior, a Communist Party member should always and everywhere pay attention to maintaining his own communist purity. Any party member will lose the minimum qualifications as a party member if he wallows in the mire of the decadent ideas and behavior of the old society. In the revolutionary war years of the past or in the period of peaceful construction of today, this is what should be expected of every party member. This is determined by the proletarian character of our party. Therefore, every party member should strengthen the temper of his party spirit, strive to keep his own thinking and behavior within the stipulations of the party constitution and the "Guiding Principles for Inner-Party Political Life," wage resolute struggle against all unhealthy ideas and acts, and strive to be a qualified Communist Party member.

The "decision on dealing blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field" of the CCP Central Committee and the State Council points out: "Under the new historical conditions, in the protracted struggle to uphold the four fundamental principles and struggle against corruption and degeneration, many of our party members and cadres will be repeatedly subjected to rigorous tests." The large number of facts recently exposed show that indeed some Communist Party members (including some veteran party members and veteran cadres) failed to withstand the tests. They collaborated with the criminals in society, engaged in serious criminal activities such as smuggling and selling contraband, graft and accepting bribes, speculation and swindling, stealing public property and so forth; they wrecked themselves politically. Although the circumstances of Cheng Zhanbiao's mistakes are different from the above, both have resulted from a malignant swelling of individualsm, and both are characterized by politically betraying the proletarian revolutionary cause. Party organizations at all levels must make up their minds to wage a resolute struggle against this kind of degenerate behavior. The serious criminal and degenerate elements must all be cleared out of the party. In enforcing party discipline, all party members must be treated equally, and no exception must be made regardless of seniority and position. Veteran party members and veteran cadres have received longer education by the party, and many of them are holding important positions. The consequences caused by their mistakes will be more serious, and the influence will be worse. Therefore, stricter demands should be made on them. We must not destroy our own Great Wall, must not indulge the evildoers and must not allow our cadre ranks to be corrupted.

CCPCC SECRETARIAT REPORT ON EMULATING ADVANCED

[Excerpts] Beijing, 10 May (XINHUA) -- Recently the Secretariat of the CCP Central Committee distributed a "report on giving scope to the role of advanced individuals and promoting activities to emulate and catch up with the advanced" by the All-China Federation of Trade Unions, the CYL Central Committee and the All-China Women's Federation. The Secretariat of the CCP Central Committee believes that the state of affairs and problems revealed by the "report" are worthy of attention, and the opinions contained therein on how to give fuller scope to the role of advanced individuals and launch mass activities in the future to emulate and catch up with the advanced are correct. It calls on all localities and departments to study and put into practice these opinions in such a way as to suit their actual conditions.

The "report" states: Making it a general practice to emulate and catch up with the advanced and carrying that practice forward among the people throughout the country is an important aspect of our work to promote socialist material civilization and spiritual civilization, an effective measure to educate our cadres and masses to as to resist corruption by capitalist ideology and a major sign showing that our country and people are vigorously marching forward and making continuous advances.

The "report" sets forth the following opinions:

1. Cherish and support the advanced. Leading party and government departments at all levels and all mass organizations should show a sense of responsibility and take a clear-cut stand in suppoting the advanced. They should make all-out efforts to disseminate advanced thinking and experience, patiently lead the masses to gain the correct understanding that the advanced thinking and model conduct of advanced individuals represent the fundamental interests of the overwhelming majority of the masses and are an impetus to the development of our national economy and the progress of the whole society. They should criticize the erroneous ideas of being jealous of worthy and able persons, of refusing to advance and of hating to see others' progress. They should earnestly help those with these ideas to correct their mistakes and take a right attitude toward the advanced. As for the few people who have been proven to revengefully retaliate against, frame and strike at advanced individuals, it is imperative to deal with them seriously and to affix legal responsibility if the case if exceptionally severe.

2. Seriously select the advanced by evaluation and comparison. All trades and professions, localities, departments and units are requested to use the methods of periodical evaluation and comparison, and to give commendations whenever necessary according to their actual situation so that models and pace setters will be selected as examples for the masses to emulate and catch up with. However, in dealing with any advanced individual, it is necessary to uphold the viewpoint of dividing one into two instead of demanding perfection. Specifically excessive demands should not be put on advanced youths that will hamper their healthy maturation.

3. Strengthen propaganda work based on advanced examples. It is necessary to give publicity to the advanced thinking and communist spirit of the advanced individuals and collectives so as to use such thinking and spirit to influence and cultivate our people, especially the young generation, and turn them into individuals who have ideals, who are well cultured and who put stress on morality and abide by discipline.

4. Sum up and popularize advanced experience in a timely manner. Leading comrades of party and government departments at all levels and all people's organizations should go deep into the grassroots units and among the masses from time to time to conduct investigation and studies to promptly find and sum up the various advanced experiences gained by the masses.

They should also use various methods suited to their actual situation in a planned and well-organized way to popularize the advanced experiences among the masses of the same profession who do the same type of production work so that the advanced experiences will become the common property of society.

5. Pay attention to the training and education of advanced individuals. Training and education by the party and assistance from the masses constitute a basic guarantee for bringing up advanced individuals. It is necessary to educate advanced individuals to uphold firm and correct political orientation, stand the test of hardship and honor, keep on advancing by applying the method of dividing one into two and preserve their true advanced nature under all circumstances. It is also necessary to educate advanced individuals to take a correct attitude to the masses, remain modest and prudent, guard against arrogance and rashness, and be adept in learning from the masses' strong points to make up for their own shortcomings in order to advance ceaselessly.

The "report" points out: Currently in many localities and units, advanced individuals are beset with worries and difficulties in varying degrees. This is a rather general indication that "it is hard to be a pace setter or an advanced individual." Some among the leaders and masses fail to give sufficient attention to the activities to emulate and catch up with the advanced. The following are four striking problems in this regard:

1. Many advanced individuals are satirized and attacked, so that they suffer considerable mental pressure. Some advanced individuals are envied because they have made substantial contributions. Others are isolated because they keep to principles and are bold in shouldering responsibility. Still others are attacked because they have resisted unhealthy trends. There are also some who are satirized because of their willingness to help others and criticized because they have worked tirelessly to invest and create.

2. Advanced individuals hold too many posts concurrently, they are required to attend too many meetings and take part in too many social activities, and so there is no guaranteed time for them to engage in production or other work as they should. As a result, many of them have been divorced from their work posts for a long time. They have become unfamiliar with their field of work and have had less contacts with the masses. Under such circumstances, they are unable to play a good role as advanced individuals.

3. Advanced individuals are required to work long hours, sapping their physical strength. Their work load is too heavy for them to bear. To make up for production time lost due to meetings and social activities, most advanced individuals volunteer to work overtime and give up days off. In some units, the leaders often ask advanced individuals to take the lead in doing everything and even put impractical demands on them in disregard of objective conditions. Because of excessive fatigue, some advanced models are in poor health or have even been sick for a long time. Thus, they cannot persist in carrying out normal production and other work.

4. There is no guarantee of further study, and some real problems exist regarding their daily lives. Some advanced individuals complain that when an individual has been cited as a "pace setter" or "model," not only is it hard for him to go to school to further his study, but also there is no guarantee that he will have leisure for spare-time study. For many advanced individuals, the actual difficulties concerning their marriage, housing and everyday life have remained unsolved.

The "report" suggests that all localities, departments and grassroots units make an appropriate time schedule this year, based on their actual conditions, to carry out a serious examination of how well they have given scope to the role of their advanced individuals. They should make a conscientious effort to solve the existing problems and to promote mass activities to emulate and catch up with the advanced in greater breadth and depth.

OFFICIAL SAYS OPEN-DOOR POLICY IS PERMANENT

[Text] WESTERN BUSINESSMEN HAVE BEEN GIVEN ANOTHER ASSURANCE THAT CHINA WILL NOT CLOSE THE DOOR ON FOREIGN INVESTMENT, BUT RATHER SEEK IT OUT AND INITIATE PROJECTS INVOLVING FOREIGN CAPITAL. [capitalized passage published in boldface]

Ji Chongwei, a senior official in charge of foreign investment, said in Beijing that the use of foreign capital had been incorporated in China's state plan. He told questioners: "We will definitely hold on to the policy. If we change the policy the only change will be for China to be more active and take the initiative in seeking foreign investment." He said this would be done in the light of China's economic adjustment and the reform of the economic administrative system.

Ji said joint ventures and other key projects employing foreign capital were part of the state plan and priority would be given to cooperation in the power, raw materials and transport industries.

"The Chinese Government is formulating laws and regulations concerning activities with foreign businessmen," he said. Twelve laws have already been made public and some others such as the implementation regulations on management of joint ventures and laws on economic activities involving foreigners will come out very soon.

A standard contract covering joint exploration of offshore oil will be sent to the companies concerned.

Asked whether China would change its open door policy on foreign investments Ji said the policy was permanent. "Judging from the execution of the policy in the past three years, it is beneficial both to the economic readjustment and modernisations in China," he said. "There have been some errors, but they are overshadowed by the benefits and can be overcome after we improve our work." "We will definitely hold on to the policy."

He then made his remark that the only possible change would be for China to be more aggressive in seeking foreign capital.

On the functions of the foreign investment administration committee, Ji said the newly established Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade had set up a foreign investment administration department to deal with what was done by the foreign investment committee.

Ji said the new body would handle loans from foreign governments, borrow funds from international financial organisations, examine and approve joint ventures, co-operation enterprises and compensation trade with foreign companies doing business in China.

HONGQI DISCUSSES FOREIGN ECONOMIC TIES

HK051326 Beijing HONGQI in Chinese No 8, 16 Apr 82 pp 2-10

[Article by HONGQI editorial department: "On Questions Regarding Our Country's Economic Relations With Foreign Countries"]

[Text] In order to open up new prospects for developing China's foreign economic relations in an all-round manner, we should sum up both the positive and the negative of our past and present experiences on a series of basic problems related to our foreign economic relations and thus more clearly understand and more satisfactorily carry out the CCP Central Committee's correct principles and policies.

I What Exactly Is the Nature of Foreign Economic Relations?

A few years ago, Comrade Deng Xiaoping pointed out that the external economic work is a strategic issue that has a bearing on the success and failure of our four modernizations. This is absolutely true.

In the "introduction" to Marx's well-known "Manuscripts on Economics (1857 to 1858)," he pointed out the necessity of studying "the international relations in production" after he had expounded on the various sectors in social production and their relations. He was also of the opinion that we had to treat international relations in production as a special subject of study in economics. This subject had to include "international division of labor," "international exchange," " import and export," "exchange rates" and other themes. This is a view of great significance. By raising this view, Marx pointed out, briefly and succinctly, that in the modern world, economic problems are by no means phenomena that are related only to domestic factors; on the contrary they must be studied in the context of international relations and should not be studied in isolation from international relations. We should never neglect this important view of Marx's in discussing China's foreign economic relations.

Almost all the countries in the present world, with perhaps very few exceptions, attach great importance to the problem of external economic relations. Many countries and areas, such as Japan, Singapore and Hong Kong, even regard it as a vital one. As far back as more than 100 years ago, Marx and Engels pointed out that along with the emergence of the international market, the nations of the world have become increasingly economically related and dependent on one another and the closed-door and self-sufficient situation are gradually becoming things of the past. During the past decades, especially since World War II, this situation has been further developed in an unprecedented manner. This is a fundamental historical fact as well as an inevitable trend of social development. We should never be ignorant of this fact in regarding China's foreign economic relations today. Since the founding of the PRC, we have undergone many twists and turns in developing our foreign economic relations and have failed to make any substantial progress in this respect. Of course, we are not to blame for this on the grounds that we preferred a policy of closing our country to international exchanges. At that time there were other reasons: First, the major capitalist countries in the world headed by the United States adopted an antagonistic attitude toward us and blockaded us for a long time. They put an embargo on many commodities. Second, since the beginning of the 1960's, when the Soviet Union tore up its economic contracts with us, our economic relations with the Soviet Union and a few other countries have been greatly reduced. Third, for a time, especially during the period of the "Great Cultural Revolution," our policy of self-reliance was greatly distorted. Self-reliance is an absolutely correct policy, but it is absolutely wrong to distort this policy and set it against the development of external economic relations.

Since the time around 1972, there has been a change in our foreign economic relations and we have gradually opened up some prospects. However, it was not until the smashing of the "gang of four" and especially not until the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee that it was made clear throughout the party that we should develop our foreign economic relations. This is indeed a very farsighted policy decision. Then, from 1978 to 1980 we actually brought about a great change to and made great progress in our foreign economic relations. At the same time, we also committed some errors in this respect. This has taught us that we should sum up our experience and make the pace of our progress steadier. However, we should not, for this reason, get the wrong idea and think that we should retreat and dare not continue to actively develop our foreign economic relations. Summing up experience is aimed at developing the foreign economic relations of this socialist country more satisfactorily. Otherwise, we will be going against the principle of the third plenary session of the Central Committee.

The party Central Committee recently noted that to promote our socialist modernization program, we must use two types of resources, that is, domestic resources and international resources; we must develop both our domestic market and our place in the world market; and we must master two skills, that of domestic construction management and that of developing foreign economic relations. This has further defined the strategic position of our foreign economic relations. According to this point of view we should continue to vigorously widen our field of vision and raise our understanding on the problem of developing our foreign economic relations.

After the October Revolution, Lenin advocated the implementation of the concession system. At that time, since the Soviet Union was in great difficulties, the enterprises under the concession system amounted to more than 200 and tens of millions of rubles of foreign capital was drawn into the Soviet Union. At that time, Lenin was of the opinion that associating the Soviet Union with international capital was necessary. At the same time, he thought that there was a serious struggle in the course of associating with international capital and associating with international capital was aimed at promoting the socialist economic construction of the Soviet state. Today, we are continuing to act in accordance with Lenin's viewpoint. It is wrong to close the country to international exchange, to fight in isolation or to refuse to be associated with international capital. On the other hand, it is also wrong to neglect or abandon struggles during the process of associating with international capital. To put it in a nutshell, we should struggle while associating. At present, we must pay attention to summing up experience, formulate a whole set of correct guiding principles, policies and measures by thinking over carefully and continuing to make great efforts, and open up a path for developing our country's foreign economic relations that is suited to both national and international conditions. Only by so doing can we really and effectively overcome all kinds of conservative ideas that uphold sticking to old ways and can we overcome blindness and spontaneity in our action. Only by so doing can we open up new possibilities and take the initiative in our own hands.

II Why Is It That the Development of Foreign Economic Relations Is an Important Strategic Question in Our Modernization Program?

In essence, this is a question of how to soberly understand the problem of in what historical conditions, what national conditions and what favorable and unfavorable conditions we are carrying out our modernization program.

We have the following four favorable conditions:

First, except in Taiwan, we have already soundly established the socialist political and economic system throughout our country. We have transformed the private ownership of the means of production into public ownership and the members of the exploited class into laborers who support themselves by their own labor. We have also placed the lifelines of our national economy in the hands of our state on behalf of the working class and on behalf of the whole laboring people.

Second, we have already corrected our guiding ideology and started to formulate a line and a complete set of principles and policies for carrying out the four modernizations program, and we have already formed a strong and resolute CCP Central Committee that is competent to correctly lead the four modernizations.

Third, with our strong national defense forces, we are strong enough to defend the peaceful construction of our people. At the same time, owing to our correct foreign policies, we enjoy high political prestige in the world.

Fourth, there are very favorable international conditions for our concentrating on carrying out our modernization program. Already, 174 states and areas have started trading and are developing their trade and economic relations with us.

We have the following four unfavorable conditions:

First, though we already have some technical strength which is already up to advanced world standards in some respects, on the whole, our equipment, technology, technical personnel, management and administrative standards are backward and lag behind the world advanced standards to a fairly large degree.

Second, although we already have a considerably sound material basis and are able to accumulate some funds every year, our sources of funds are, after all, limited. The amount of funds raised within our country falls short of the demands of construction.

Third, our rich natural resources are indeed a favorable condition, but many of these resources still remain unexploited underground. Therefore, this is only a latent favorable condition instead of a realized favorable condition.

Fourth, our excessive population is a heavy burden on our country. Though it constitutes a rich resource of manpower, we lack the means to utilize this. Of course, if our manpower is fully utilized, it will change from being a burden into being an advantage.

The above-mentioned favorable and unfavorable conditions are what we should proceed from in considering the problems concerning China's economy today, including those of foreign economic relations. It is precisely because we proceed from these historical conditions that we uphold the view that we must work hard and perseveringly, rely on our own strength, maintain independence and keep the initiative in our own hands while promoting our socialist modernizations program. We must not, in the slightest degree, deviate from these principles. The modernization cause of a big country with a population of 1 billion should and can only be carried out by relying on the country's own strength. However, on the other hand, it is also because we proceed from these historical conditions that we uphold that we should not distort self-reliance and regard closing our country to international exchange and fighting in isolation as self-reliance. We must expand our field of vision from our country to the world on the basis of self-reliance. We must not only go all out to make use of all positive factors within our country, but should also go all out to make use of all foreign factors that can be used by us. This means, in fact, using the strong points of all the countries in the world to offset our weakness. Using the phrase in the book "Guan Zi," this means "taking all the valuable things in the world for our use." Only in this way can we develop our national industries as quickly as possible through foreign economic relations and by drawing support from foreign capital and advanced technology. Only in this way can we more smoothly overcome the difficulties facing us and quicken the pace of promoting our socialist modernization program. Precisely in this sense lies the strategic significance that we attach to our foreign economic relations.

On the problem of foreign relations, we can draw quite a large number of experiences and lessons from the history of modern China. In our history, there were two kinds of people. One kind of people worshipped and had blind faith in foreign things and was subservient to foreigners. As a result these people humiliated the nation and forfeited its sovereignty. Whether the Empress Dowager Cixi, Yuan Shikai or Chiang Kai-shek, they were, without exception, cast aside by the people. The other kind of people upheld closing the country to international exchange and adopted an arrogant attitude toward other countries. Thus these people were satisfied to lag behind and finally became castaways in history. Were not the diehards at the end of the Qing Dynasty, who regarded China as the "Heavenly Kingdom" and treated all foreign countries as "uncivilized nations" that should be put under the suzerainty of China, this kind of people? Under the present new historical situations, the above-mentioned two tendencies are still to some extent reflected in the minds of some of our party members and cadres. This may perhaps be regarded as a kind of historical legacy. Some people feel ashamed before foreigners and think that everything is good in other countries, and bad in ours. Others are very apprehensive about opening up to the outside world and are of the opinion that there will not be peace and security if we open up and that if we must open up, we must open up as little as possible. The two tendencies have a common point and that is their lack of confidence in the fact that today we, as a developing great socialist country, are able to open up new prospects in developing our foreign relations.

Our comrades, especially all those who are engaging in external activities including external economic activities, must have a profound understanding of the strategic significance of our foreign relations, especially the strategic significance of our foreign economic relations. They must be both brave and adept in plunging into the vast world to open up new prospects.

At the same time, they must also carefully pay attention to understanding the extremely complex nature of the environment we face as a result of opening up to the outside world, be both brave and adept in learning new skills and abilities, prevent and overcome various kinds of negative practices, adhere to the principle of socialism and persistently safeguard the purity of communism. We must do all the above-mentioned things without the smallest omission. Otherwise we will be committing a great error which will cause great harm to our cause. This is an indispensably important factor in ensuring the healthy development of our external work and the victory of our construction cause.

III The Necessity of Having a Whole Set of Correct Guiding Principles and Policies on Foreign Relations

This means that we should not do our work at random or deal with only those problems that have cropped up. Instead, we should have a complete set of plans with scientific foresight. For this purpose, we should really have a good grasp of the major issues and characteristics of our foreign economic relations.

What are the characteristics of our foreign economic relations?

First, dealing with foreign businessmen is different from dealing with people in our country. In dealing with the people in our country we can enforce discipline and even force people to observe the discipline if necessary. However, in dealing with foreign businessmen, we cannot act in this manner, and should pay attention to maintaining our good reputation. In discussing contracts and agreements, we must deal with the foreign businessmen on the basis of equality, mutual benefits and voluntariness. In view of this, we should both be strict in enforcing discipline at home and be flexible externally.

Second, foreign economic relations often involve many departments and fields. Some of the problems they involve even affect the whole economy and social life of our country. In view of this, our localities, departments and units should not act independently in conducting their foreign economic activities and thus leave loopholes for foreign businessmen to exploit and enable them to make excessive profits at our expense. Instead, we should carry out our external economic activities under unified leadership and comprehensive planning. Only under such a premise can we give better play to the initiative of all the parties concerned.

Third, we should make a distinction between two kinds of foreign businessmen. With regard to those foreign businessmen who show their good faith in cooperation and do business in a proper way, we will take a welcoming and polite attitude, pay attention to maintaining a friendly relationship with them and implement the policy of equality and mutual benefit, no matter whether we will be able to do business and come to terms with them. As for those foreign businessmen who have ulterior motives, adopt improper measures, go so far as to adopt measures that violate our country's sovereignty, and go in for swindling, bribing, smuggling, infiltration or even espionage activities that impair the rights and interests of the Chinese people and corrupt our cadres and citizens, they will certainly meet with firm resistance from the Chinese people and some will be prosecuted in accordance with China's laws. All our party members, cadres and citizens who depart from the correct stand in these unlawful activities and who have been corrupted by such foreign businessmen must naturally be criticized and administratively, or even judicially, punished.

In short, the above-mentioned characteristics mean unified leadership, comprehensive planning, flexible response, strict discipline, making distinctions and adherence to principles. These things must be conscientiously observed as a general principle in our work.

However varied our foreign economic relations are, they can be summarized as exportation and importation. These two aspects interact and are dependent and conditional on one another. Therefore, the key issue in handling foreign economic relations is to correctly handle the relationships between these two aspects and dialectically harmonize them.

Focusing on this key issue, we have to study the following six problems: First, how to attract foreign capital; second, how to correctly introduce advanced science and technology from abroad; third, how to vigorously develop international cooperation in exploiting manpower; fourth, how to energetically market our products in the world; fifth, how to provide economic aid to other countries in accordance with our capability; and sixth, how to correctly handle the relationships between political and economic aspects in our external relations. As long as we have a clear understanding of these six problems and adopt correct policies and vigorous measures to solve them, we will surely be able to continuously make progress in developing our foreign economic relations year by year, and we will surely be able to give increasingly full play to the role of foreign economic relations in promoting our construction at home.

IV How Should We Attract Foreign Capital?

This is a prominent problem in handling our foreign economic relations at present. It is a problem which we urgently need to solve but which we have as yet failed to solve.

Attracting capital from capitalist countries and areas in accordance with the practical needs and capabilities of our country is a new task that we have never tackled before. That is why this problem is especially important today.

At present we usually adopt the following three methods in attracting foreign capital: First, attracting direct investment in joint ventures, joint management, joint exploitation, compensation trade, processing and assembling; second, striving to obtain long- or medium-term loans at medium or low interest rates from foreign governments and international financial organizations and all kinds of development funds and relief funds; and third, obtaining ordinary commercial loans. At present, attracting direct investment has become the most important method for China to utilize foreign capital. This method has two advantages, namely, that of granting the investor direct interest in what they invest in and that of enabling us to better learn from the advanced technology and management abroad. The successful experiences in many countries have proved that these kinds of joint venture and joint management enterprises themselves constitute economic and technical training courses.

In order to effectively attract direct investment, we should have a set of clear and definite correct policies. First, we must grasp all the large, medium-sized and small projects at once while regarding medium-sized and small ones as the main factor. This is the way to get quick results. Second, we should welcome all capitalists from abroad, including foreign and Overseas Chinese capitalists and those from Hong Kong, Macao and Taiwan. And third, we should to a certain extend relax our policy and allow these capitalists to make profits. If we do not allow them to make money, we will not be able to attract them and we will not be able to open up any possibilities. We will not be able to keep up with the times if we do not act bravely and wisely.

It is imperative to be prudent in using ordinary commercial loans. Since they are loans, we have to repay the principal and the interest. Moreover, the loans should be used in combination with domestic investment to form complete sets of investment. Thus there will inevitably be limitations in our utilization of foreign commercial loans. As for long- and medium-term loans at medium or low interest rates, though we can feel more at ease in utilizing them, their availability is limited. A capitalist is, after all, a capitalist. As long as he is a capitalist, he will always be pursuing excessive profits. We should be especially careful in drawing lessons from the countries that are heavily in debt.

In short, in order to emancipate people's minds, we should sum up our experiences in a timely way and carefully foster model units. The experience in a successful model unit will facilitate the progress in all similar units. Thus we will be able to open up broad prospects step-by-step.

V. How Are We To Correctly Import Advanced Science and Technology?

There are many ways to introduce advanced science and technology from abroad and we should not restrict ourselves to a few ways. We have five kinds of things to import in this respect: advanced equipment or components; new and fine-quality materials; new principles, data, and know-how; new skills and scientific rules of operations; and advanced management methods.

In importing equipment, we have committed some errors, but we have to make a realistic analysis of these errors. Importing a few complete sets of equipment was necessary not only in the past, but also is necessary now and will be necessary in the future. Our errors in the past were mainly in the following four respects: importing an excessive number of complete sets of equipment; importing the same equipment more than once; importing equipment without importing the technical information to operate the equipment; and failing to study the technology of the imported equipment so as to understand it and popularize it. Having learned lessons from the above-mentioned errors, we will be able to gradually improve our work in this respect in the future.

Regarding the problem of importing new and fine-quality materials, we should first of all make efforts to produce these materials ourselves. We should encourage our specialists and technicians and organize them into key task teams to plunge into production practice, grasp the new production technology, increase the varieties of our products and expand the scale of our production, and thus win glory for our country. However, we should also fully reckon on a long-term policy of importing various kinds of raw materials, especially new and fine-quality materials that are necessary for our construction. In order to grasp all kinds of new technology, all countries in the world have to do so, including the developed ones such as the United States, Japan and West Germany.

Regarding introducing advanced science, technology and management from abroad, we should admit that we have failed to make sufficiently great efforts to learn soundly and modestly from abroad. Now we should further encourage our broad ranks of cadres, intellectuals and workers to have the high aspirations of the Chinese people and turn the slogan of studying science to become more capable and learning from experts into action. We should strive to create a social mood of working and studying hard for the prosperity of our country among all our party members, among the broad ranks of our cadres, intellectuals and workers, and even among all the people throughout our society and nation. This is a task of vital importance.

In introducing advanced science and technology from abroad we should also pay attention to the following two problems:

The first problem is that from now on, we must no longer import consumer goods. Except under unified state arrangements, no departments or localities are allowed to import consumer goods without authorization. The practices of some departments and localities that are importing consumer goods without permission are, in fact, very harmful and shameful activities that impair our national industry. It is an important principle that we must pay close attention to protecting our national industry. We must make the widest possible use of those daily consumer goods that can be made and supplied by domestic units. We should vigorously encourage and develop the spirit of Comrade Zhou Enlai in refusing to wear any watches other than those that are made in China. Only by encouraging our broad masses of people, and above all our party members and cadres, to use Chinese-made consumer goods can we protect our national industry and ensure its smooth development.

The other problem is that we must do a good job in managing foreign exchange in all our central departments and in all the localities under the unified leadership of the state. We must use our foreign exchange where it is needed most. This means that we should use it for the technical reform and the renewal of our industrial equipment.

We should use it to import advanced equipment and components that are necessary to develop new lines of industrial production, new and fine-quality materials that are in short supply in our country and that are urgently needed for processing goods for export, certain agricultural means of production that our country cannot supply and that are urgently needed in developing agriculture, and certain kinds of consumer goods that our country indeed cannot supply and that are indeed indispensable in the life of our people. Are we not acting against the interests of our state and people if we waste the limited amount of our hard earned foreign exchange in importing unnecessary consumer goods instead of in importing equipment, technology and raw materials that we urgently need for expanded production and for earning a larger amount of foreign exchange?

VI How Are We To Energetically Promote Our Business of International Labor Cooperation

An excessive population is a great problem facing us. On the other hand, our abundant labor force is our country's greatest advantage. We not only have a large amount of surplus labor in our countryside, but also some surplus labor in our state-owned factories and mines. Moreover, every year a large number of people enters the labor force. Therefore the total amount of our surplus labor is very large. If we take the total number of surplus laborers as 100 million and suppose that every laborer is able to produce 500 yuan of products, the total value of their products will be 50 billion yuan a year. The problem now is not that these laborers lack initiative in their work but that they no opportunities to play their roles. In order to find a way out, we should strengthen our organizational work, open up as many possibilities as possible and be good at giving guidance. As far as we can foresee, in a fairly long period to come, we should first speed up the development of the diversified economy in our countryside and open up as many possibilities in the cities to provide more job opportunities. By so doing we will be able to employ a large amount of the labor force and can, moreover, organize it to produce goods for export. At the same time, we should find employment for them throughout the world and conscientiously develop international labor cooperation.

Our business of international labor cooperation has just begun. In 1981, we sent over 17,000 laborers abroad to work on contracts. This number was too small compared with our potential in this respect, compared with the demand for such labor abroad and compared with the numbers of laborers that other developing countries have sent abroad. Our construction undertakings have shown a sharp competitive edge in contracting for construction projects in the world market and these projects will in turn promote the export of our building materials. From the above we can see that there are bright prospects in developing international labor cooperation.

Labor cooperation is not restricted to contracting for construction projects abroad. It can also be developed in the following three ways: processing materials from foreign businessmen and processing in accordance with the samples or drawings from foreign businessmen; establishing all kinds of enterprises in foreign countries; and energetically developing tourism. It is said by some foreigners that the pottery figurines of soldiers and horses at Lintong are one of the eight wonders in the world and as a result 50,000 foreigners went there to see them last year. We have to improve our tourist facilities and nationally fix the prices of the goods that we sell to tourists in order to increase our sales by narrowing the profit margins. By so doing we will benefit by opening up of more job opportunities and earning more foreign exchange.

It seems that for a long time to come, our manpower will continue to be the most competitive thing we have in the world market. We should give guidance to the cities and provinces along our coastline in vigorously developing the processing of materials provided by foreign businessmen. But we must pay attention to exporting all the finished goods of our processing undertakings and should not allow them to enter the domestic market. Otherwise, the processing undertakings will facilitate the import of foreign goods.

VII How Are We To Bring Chinese Products Into the World Market on a Still Large

China's current export trade is conducted on a too narrow and small scale. We have nearly 1/4 of the world's population, but our share of the world market is less than 1 percent, 0.9 percent to be more exact, which ranks 28th in the world. Of course, in recent years we have to some extent improved our work and have made relatively great progress in this respect, but we should not exaggerate our successes.

There are both objective historical and subjective reasons why the scale of our exports has remained so small for more than 30 years. We should certainly not reproach ourselves too severely for our subjective errors, but we must soberly understand this fact and strive to achieve a relatively great development of our export trade within a short period of time.

Regarding the relationships between exports and imports, there is also the problem of breaking through the old conventions and opening up a new situation.

Generally speaking, exports are the basis of our foreign trade. It will never do if we conduct our foreign trade in the manner of importing only without exporting any goods. We have always been particular about striking some important balances, including the balance of international receipts and payments. However, does this mean that in arranging our export and import business that our imports should be restricted by the value of exports and should not exceed our exports every year? No, this is not a good way of putting it. Regarding this question, we should make all-round arrangements by considering the whole situation, and we should correctly understand and handle the dialectical relationships between exports and imports. That we can only import after we have exported some of our goods and obtained some foreign exchange to pay for our imports is only one aspect of the question. We should see another aspect of the question, namely, our imports can in turn promote our exports. For example, when we lack materials for producing goods for export, we have to import the materials and then process and turn them into goods for export. Only by so doing can we promote our exports. Another example is that by introducing equipment and technology to increase the output and improve the quality of our products, we will be able to make them more competitive in the world market. Thus imports will also promote our exports. These arguments have long been fully proved by the successful experiences in Japan and many other countries and areas. Could these countries and areas have survived if they had restricted the volume of their imports to that of their exports? Therefore, promoting imports by developing exports and promoting exports by developing imports is a kind of dialectical relationship. This relationship can only be rationally balanced and reasonably handled in the course of time, perhaps 1 or 2 years.

What policies should we adopt and in what direction should we strive to increase the export of our products? To answer this question, we have to sum up the experiences in our history. In the past, the export of some kinds of our products relied, to a great extent, on reducing their supply in our domestic market. This was a natural practice during the 1950's because we had very few things to export at that time and could not avoid doing this. However, it is wrong to continue to do so now. Certainly, we can reduce the supply of some high-grade goods and agricultural and sideline products at home in order to export these goods. But even in doing this we should not go too far and we should not base our hopes for increasing exports on this. Otherwise we will bring about an acute shortage of consumer goods in our domestic market, and thus we will not only force our people to reduce their consumption but also make it impossible for the processing undertakings in our country to develop smoothly. Moreover, a shortage of goods at home will impair our people's initiative and will encourage speculative activites in our domestic market. Perhaps some people will say that the United States is also exporting a large amount of agricultural products. This shows that these comrades do not understand the essence of the problem. Agricultural production in the United States has already been carried out in the manner of industrial production, and this is completely different from the agricultural production in the countries of the Third World.

The extensive export of agricultural products by the United States is in essence an action to dump its surplus industrial products. On the other hand, when the Third World countries sell agricultural products to developed capitalist countries in exchange for their industrial consumer goods, they suffer the exploitation of the rich countries because of the unequal exchange. We should not follow the path of these Third World countries or we will commit mistakes.

What should we do in accordance with a correct policy? According to our historical and current experiences, we should strive to make progress in the following four directions:

First, energetically increasing our export of mineral products and vigorously developing our export of nonferrous and rare metals. In the past, there was an argument that strategic materials should not be exported. This view has long been outdated. We should emancipate our minds in understanding this problem. Of course, we should arrange our export of these materials in a planned manner and strive to get the most favorable terms in trading them.

Second, conscientiously increasing our export of mechanical and electrical products. In the past few years, we have made relatively rapid progress in this respect, but there is still great potential to tap. We should mobilize the millions of staff and workers in our engineering industry and encourage them to raise the quality of their products and improve their technology in order to enable their products to enter the world market and win prestige for their motherland.

Third, further developing the export of light industrial products, textiles, various arts and crafts articles such as chinaware, cross-stitch work, Chinese medicines, clothes, embroidery products and carvings.

Fourth, developing the export of our special local products such as tea, Chinese medicinal materials, livestock products, natural products and preserved fruits.

Of course, if necessary, we will have to reduce, to an appropriate extent, the domestic supply of some daily consumer goods that are in short supply both at home and abroad and that are much needed in the livelihood of our people in order to increase their export.

We should adopt a series of policies and measures in order to develop our export trade. For example, we should adopt proper policies in support of the development of our export trade, including going out to establish marketing and servicing networks, making increased efforts to improve the prestige of our products, pay attention to product quality, pay attention to honoring agreements, solving transportation problems and port problems, and bringing into full play the initiative of all departments and areas.

VIII How Are We To Correctly Support the Third World?

Offering support to the peoples of all Third World countries in their just struggles to defend their national independence, develop their national economies and oppose imperialism, colonialism and hegemonism is China's international duty which it cannot shirk. Over the past 30 years and more, China has done a lot of work in such aspects and played an important active role in handling international affairs.

Most of the Third World countries are countries friendly with us and are enthusiastic in opposing imperialism, colonialism and hegemonism. However, their social and political systems and level of economic development differ widely. Regarding the level of economic development of these countries, most of them are poor or the poorest countries in the world and only a small number of them are rich. In terms of per capita average national product, the United Arab Emirates, Qatar and Kuwait rank as the top three in the world, but they are Third World countries. There are also quite a few Third World countries that are much richer than our country. Owing to the above-mentioned complicated situation, in carrying out our policies of supporting Third World countries including the policy of giving them economic aid and promoting our economic contacts with them, we should make a clear distinction of their different economic statuses and act accordingly.

One of the facts at present which cannot be ignored is that many of the Third World countries are carrying out their economic construction on a fairly large scale. This is the case in many countries in Latin America, Africa, the Middle and Near East, the Gulf area and Southeast Asia. There are bright prospects for our economic cooperation with them.

On the other hand, we should extend by every possible means material aid to those poverty-stricken countries which are in difficulty and which are subject to external aggression and threats.

Our comrades must understand that supporting the Third World countries is an issue of strategic significance and we should never neglect this issue. Now many Third World countries hope that we will help them in their development. They say that some of the First World and Second World countries have set up factories in their countries to bully them and some are even carrying out subversive activities there. These countries have also expressed their confidence in China. It is reported that in the past few years, India has achieved good results in setting up joint venture enterprises abroad -- mainly in other Third World countries. In 1981, the number of such joint venture enterprises was more than 400 and these enterprises were located in more than 40 countries in the world, of which more than 90 percent were in Southeast Asia, South Asia, the Middle East and Africa. We should also do our best to do something along these lines.

IX We Should Correctly Understand Political and Economic Relations

In order to develop our foreign economic activities well, we should break with some old conventions and set to right the relationships between politics and the economy.

For a long time, we upheld the argument that economics must be subordinated to politics. This argument is partly right but it fails to take every aspect of the problem into account. One of the basic viewpoints of Marxism-Leninism is that economics and politics influence and act on one another but in the final analysis, politics is decided by economics. This is also true in handling the issue of foreign relations. If foreign economic relations are developed in a satisfactory manner, it will facilitate the continuous development of political deplomatic relations. On the contrary, if we fail to open up the prospects for developing foreign economic relations, the development of political relations with foreign countries will inevitably be obstructed and will never be able to be vigorous. The reason why many countries carry out their economic transactions with one another despite bitter political antagonism lies in the demand resulting from their economic interests. Not only the capitalist countries but all countries have to take into account their major economic interests in deciding their political policies. This is a common phenomenon in the world.

In handling the relationships between politics and economics, we should stress that stringent efforts should be made to master advanced science, culture and management methods from other countries, but as for the influence of corrupt bourgeois ideas, we should resolutely oppose them. At present, some people are adopting a diametrically different attitude. They do not work hard to learn from the really advanced things abroad and even completely neglect the study. On the other hand, they treasure the most degenerate and the most evil things from capitalist countries and allow them to become all the rage. We have sharply pointed out this problem for a long time, to call the whole party and the people throughout our country to be on their guard and to pay attention to correctly handling this problem. We should strictly enforce the discipline that governs our external economic activities and tell everyone who is engaged in external economic activities his obligation to observe discipline. If anyone violates this discipline, he will be punished in accordance with party discipline, administrative discipline and the laws of the state. We should intensify our education in patriotism and internationalism and teach all our party members, cadres and citizens to understand that in our contacts with the outside world we should resolutely oppose the corruption of capitalist ideology, safeguard our national dignity and national interests and maintain the prestige of our party and state.

China is implementing special policies and flexible measures in Guangdong and Fujian Provinces, and has also established in the two provinces four special economic zones, namely, Shenzhen, Zhuhai, Shantou and Xiamen. We should intensify our education and make the cadres and masses in these provinces, especially those in the special economic zones, really understand the true implications of the special policies and the flexible measures. What is special is special only when it is compared with what is unified, and what is flexible is flexible only when it is compared with what is in accordance with principle. Both specialty and unity and both flexibility and principle are related with one another. The special policies are adopted under the guidance of the unified national policy. Deviating from the four basic principles and the socialist orientation is not a part of the special policies but is called degeneration. Our flexible measures can play flexible roles only on the basis of firmly adhering to a principled stand. Casting away the communist stand, the party spirit and the party principles is not called a flexible way of doing things but is called capitulationism. This fundamental demarcation line must not be obscured. Through the development of our foreign economic relations, the special policies and flexible measures are primarily aimed at enabling us to do a better job of boldly promoting construction on our own initiative and under better conditions, and to improve product quality, production techniques and management for the sake of making new progress in two fields, namely, the management of economic construction and the development of foreign economic relations.

X The Profound and Lasting Significance of Expanding Foreign Economic Relations

A major issue that our central leading comrades have been repeatedly mulling over is whether we will be able to achieve material successes in our socialist modernization within this century. We have confidence in this. However, taking our party as a whole, there are still some comrades who lack confidence and a small number of people even doubt it. Naturally, as yet no one can immediately foretell how great our material successes will be in our modernizations and one can only give a rough estimation. If we do our work well, we may achieve relatively great success, but if not, we will perhaps achieve only some small or medium successes. One of the critical issues here is whether we will be able to really open up bright prospects over the next few years.

It is not easy to open up bright prospects. During the initial period of the war of resistance [against Japan], Comrade Mao Zedong and Comrade Liu Shaoqi laid stress on opening up bright prospects. As Comrade Liu Shaoqi so rightly said, there is always a problem of opening up bright prospects during the period of a turning point. This is a historical truth. In the modern history of China, the Taiping Tianguo initially opened up bright prospects, but there was a change in the situation after it took Nanjing and the bright prospects were lost. When Doctor Sun Yat-sen led the revolution, the 1911 revolution opened up bright prospects, but this was brought to an end by his death. The tortuous course of our history tells us that all those who want to lead the historical trend and open up a bright prospect must first of all have a good insight and some courage and perseverance. Moreover they should also have a complete set of correct strategy and tactics. Otherwise, it will be impossible for them to open up bright prospects, and even once they have opened up some prospects, they will not be able to maintain the good situation and win final victory. On the contrary, they will often suffer defeats when victory is already in sight.

To open up bright prospects, our task in the economic field at present lies chiefly in the following four closely connected links:

First, bringing our agricultural potential into full play and particularly bringing about a great development of our diversified economy.

Second, bringing our industrial potential into full play and particularly achieving success in reorganizing enterprises at an early date.

Third, developing China's financial, monetary and commerical circulation in a more healthy way.

And fourth, relatively quickly developing our foreign economic relations.

If in the coming 20 years, we quadruple the scale of our foreign trade through developing our foreign economic activities, our total yearly trade volume will be 160 billion yuan. This fugure appears tremendous, but it constitutes only 4 percent of the total yearly trade volume in the world at present.

Lu Zhi, an outstanding statesman and a man well known for his abilities in conducting financial transactions in the Tang Dynasty, once said, "Losing a large amount of money because of begrudging a small expenditure, this is what a businessman will not do; and losing a bright future prospect because of pursuing immediate interests, this is what a man of common wisdom will not do." These words were well said. Our comrades who are engaged in economic work should be enlightened by these words. Businessmen who know how to do business, who are good at increasing sales by narrowing their profit margin and who really want to enliven their business will never act in the manner of losing a large amount of money because of begrudging a small expenditure. Even people of common wisdom can understand that it is wrong to give up one's future bright prospects in pursuing one's immediate interests. This means that we should be good at having a thorough understanding of the whole situation and at perceiving the future general direction of the development of things, thus we will have a strategic insight and will be free from shortsightedness.

Have we not always mentioned being of one heart and one mind? Being of one heart means that we should think the same way and being of one mind menas that we should struggle together. As long as we really unite our strategic thinking and really coordinate our tactical actions and thus think the same way and struggle together, we will surely open up bright prospects. Of course, this takes time. In the future, we should seek to be of one heart by means of exchanging opinions and conducting investigation and study and we should seek to be of one mind through the practice of fighting together. In short, let us be of one heart and one mind in striving to open up bright prospects so as to develop the cause of socialist modernization of our motherland.

FURTHER ON ESTABLISHING STATE AUDITING ORGANS

[Article by Wang Shuwen [3769 0647 2429], deputy director of the jurisprudence research center of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences: "Set up Auditing Organs, Strengthen Supervision and Control"]

[Text] Beijing, 10 May (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- The draft of the revised constitution stipulates the establishment of state auditing organs. This is a new stipulation. The draft also stipulates that the State Council will set up auditing organs to supervise and control the finances and financial revenue and expenditure of the governments at all levels and of their financial and monetary organs and other enterprises as well as institutions. In accordance with legal stipulations, auditing organs will independently exercise their auditing and supervisory power without the interference of other administrative organs, organizations or individuals. A chief auditing officer will be responsible for the auditing organs of the State Council. This officer will be decided by the NPC in accordance with a recommendation made by the premier of the State Council. Appointments and removals of the deputy chief auditing officers and auditing officers will be submitted by the chief auditing officer to the NPC Standing Committee for approval. In addition, local people's governments above county level will also set up auditing organs which will exercise their auditing and supervisory power according to the legal stipulations and will be responsible to the people's government at the same level and to the next higher auditing organs.

The main task of auditing organs is to enforce constant auditing supervision over the accumulation and use of state funds, the budgetary and final state accounts and the legality, rationality and effects of financial revenue and expenditure of governments at all levels and their financial departments so as to prevent shortcomings and illegal practices that may possibly occur in state financial and economic activities.

Auditing is closely connected with accounting. The main work of auditing is to examine the financial and accounting activities of the departments concerned in accordance with the financial and accounting data so as to supervise the financial and economic activities of those departments. By enforcing auditing supervision, we will be able to further amplify our accounting system and accounting work.

After the founding of new China, we did not set up independent auditing organs and the auditing and supervisory work was carried out by various financial departments. At that time, we set up some special organs to exercise auditing control over financial revenue. For example, we set up special supervisory organs in tax departments at all levels, which were responsible for the profits turned over to the state by the state enterprises. With regard to financial expenditure, we set up some special banks, such as the People's Construction Bank, the agricultural bank and so forth to supervise and control financial expenditure on capital construction, agricultural support and so forth. These organs did a lot of auditing and supervisory work and played a certain role in this respect.

At present, to meet the needs of the development of socialist modernization, plug various loopholes in the work of finance and financial affairs and to fight against violations of financial discipline and the wasting of state funds, it is imperative to set up special and independent auditing organs, establish and amplify the auditing system and strengthen supervision and control. Various principled stipulations in the draft of the revised constitution concerning the establishment of auditing organs and system have laid a legislative foundation for the establishment of auditing rules and regulations and the enforcement of auditing control.

NEW CONSTRUCTION MINISTRY'S WORK EXPLAINED

OW101226 Beijing XINHUA in English 1211 GMT 10 May 82

[Text] Beijing, May 10 (XINHUA) -- The newly-established Ministry of Urban and Rural Construction and Environmental Protection is committed to drawing up plans for expanding China's big, medium-sized and small cities, towns, rural townships and villages and improving environment, says today's PEOPLE'S DAILY, quoting a recent interview by a spokesman for the ministry.

The spokesman notes that the ministry will give guidance to planning China's urban and rural construction, while at the same time preventing environmental pollution, in an effort to help create good living and working conditions for the people in the country.

The ministry will approach urban and rural development, industrial expansion and environmental protection in a unified way, he said.

He went on to say that the ministry would step up its work to eliminate various sources of pollution and adopt effective measures to protect water, air and other natural resources, and maintain the ecological balance. Attention should be given particularly to protecting some famous historical and cultural sites, ancient gardens and architecture, and scenic spots, and to eliminating irritating and corrosive pollutants in these places.

The paper notes the great accomplishments in urban and rural construction in the 32 years following the founding of new China. China now has 230 major cities, 3,200 towns or county seats, along with a vast number of rural townships and villages. It has a contingent of several million construction workers.

Around 140 million square meters of housing were completed in its urban areas and additional 460 million square meters in its rural areas in each of the past several years, the paper says.

4. Seriously do well in the construction of small cities and towns and bring into full play the role of small cities and towns as ties linking the rural to the urban economy.

5. Continue to solve the question of dirt, disorder, poor utilities and crowding in cities and improve urban management in an overall way.

First Part of Report

OW090941 Nanjing Jiangsu Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 7 May 82

[Text] Comrade Xu Jiatun, first secretary of the provincial party committee, made a report to the second Jiangsu provincial urban work meeting. In the first part of his report, Xu Jiatun spoke on correctly assessing urban and township work performed since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee and striving to make new progress in urban and township work.

Comrade Xu Jiatun said: Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, urban and township party organizations at all levels in the province have conscientiously implemented the party's line, principles and policies, and performed a large amount of solid work by closely relying on the broad masses of cadres and people. As a result, great and profound changes have been brought about in cities and towns. Some of the major changes are:

1. The production of consumer goods has developed vigorously, while a steady growth of industrial production has been maintained. The 1981 industrial output value of 11 cities in the province increased by 31.55 percent over that of 1978, with the annual growth rate during the past three years averaging 10.52 percent.

Since the gradual readjustment of the irrational industrial structure, the proportion between heavy and light industries is beginning to be rationalized. The proportion of the output value of light and textile industries in the 11 cities to the total industrial output value increased from 45.7 percent in 1978 to 56.1 percent in 1981.

2. The proportions between accumulation and consumption and between productive investment and nonproductive investment have been readjusted to a considerable extent, thereby speeding up urban construction. Despite a large curtailment in the total amount of investment during the past 3 years, fairly great progress has been made in building housing for workers and staff members; in promoting undertakings in the fields of culture, education and public health; and in building public facilities in cities and towns. The total housing floorspace built in cities and towns from 1978 to 1981 is equal to the total housing floorspace built during the first 29 years after the founding of the People's Republic.

3. Attention has been paid to solving such problems as making job arrangements, increasing vegetable production and developing the nonstaple foodstuff industry, which are of practical importance to the livelihood of the people in cities and towns. The livelihood of the majority of the people in cities and towns has improved. In the past 3 years, jobs have been arranged for more than 1·366 million people awaiting employment in cities and towns of the province. Some 17,000 commercial stores were set up in 11 cities to provide more conveniences for the livelihood of the people in the cities and towns.

4. Fairly great achievements have been made in speeding up the development of undertakings in the fields of science, culture, education, public health, physical culture and sports.

5. Attention is currently focused on building spiritual civilization in cities and towns. Socialist morality and practices are also being revived and developed.

Comrade Xu Jiatun said: While confirming our achievements and summarizing our experiences, we must also pay attention to many problems that still exist in our urban work. For example, administrative work and economic construction in cities and towns are still far from meeting the needs of the people's livelihood. Particular problems such as population increases in the cities, traffic jams, water shortages, housing shortages and the supply of food still exist. The problems concerning dirtiness, disorder and supply shortages are just beginning to be changed for the better, but the improvement is still far from meeting the demands for building a civilized city. We still have to make greater efforts in order to achieve a fundamental change for the better in the work style of our party, in social practices and in social order.

Comrade Xu Jiatun said: The task before us is to achieve unity in thinking, deepen our understanding, break with conventions, open more channels for thinking, conscientiously review and summarize our past practices, seek laws and experiences with general guiding significance and find ways and concrete measures to solve various problems in order to constantly achieve new progress in our urban and township work.

Second Part of Report

OW091011 Nanjing Jiangsu Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 8 May 82

[Text] In the second part of his report delivered to the second Jiangsu provincial urban work meeting, Comrade Xu Jiatun, first secretary of the provincial CCP committee, pointed out: It is necessary to earnestly implement the guidelines laid down in the four-point directive issued by the CCP Central Committee Secretariat on the construction of the capital, and to work out the principle for urban construction in a realistic manner.

Comrade Xu Jiatun said: The four point directive issued by the CCP Central Committee Secretariat on the construction of the capital in May 1980 is the reflection of the line, principles and policies laid down by the party's third plenary session on urban construction. This directive is of significance in guiding our work in building various cities in our province. We must fully understand the guidelines laid down by the directive of the CCP Central Committee Secretariat, bring about a tremendous change in urban construction on the basis of the actual situation in our province and strive to build the various cities throughout the province into modern socialist cities with varied features and excellent coordination in all fields.

Comrade Xu Jiatun pointed out: From a long-term point of view, our aim for the development of the urban and rural economy is to gradually narrow and even essentially eliminate the gap between workers and peasants, between town and countryside and between mental and manual labor. At present, it is necessary to strengthen the economic, cultural and scientific ties between town and countryside and between one region and another with large and medium-sized cities as the center and small cities and townships as the link, and to build a network for the simultaneous development of the rural and urban economy. This is an inevitable trend for the economic and social development in our province and an important component in readjusting our economy and restructuring our system. From now on, we must conscientiously summarize our experience, actively explore ways to develop the urban and rural economy and open a broad avenue for the development of our economy.

Comrade Xu Jiatun said: While developing production, we must strive to realize, in a planned manner and step by step, the excellent coordination among all the departments in urban construction and social development. All cities must exert strenuous efforts to increase industrial production and enliven our economy. This constitutes the material foundation for developing urban construction and raising people's living standards. At the same time, we must regard the development of commerce and the service trades and the acceleration of urban construction as important components in promoting social development. We must also regard our efforts in developing urban construction, building more residential houses and incessantly improving people's livelihood as key components in increasing urban production. In cities, we must also pay attention to intellectual development as something closely related to production. At the same time, we must regard the development of tourism as something important in production and construction. We should not relax our efforts in vegetable production in rural and urban areas, regardless of what happens.

Comrade Xu Jiatun said: With regard to urban construction, we must change our thinking which onesidely emphasizes industrial production. We must not only correctly handle the relations between industrial production and the entire economic and social development, but also pay attention to the relations between current economic and social development and long-term economic and social development. This is a change of a fundamental nature. All cities must push the entire industry and the entire cause of economic and social development to a new level under the unified plan and leadership.

Comrade Xu Jiatun also said: It is necessary to work out plans for urban construction in various cities on the basis of their special conditions. All cities must make the best use of the favorable conditions, avoid the unfavorable ones and do a good job in urban construction by exploiting their strengths and paying attention to their own characteristic style.

Third Part of Report

OW100250 Nanjing Jiangsu Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 9 May 82

[Text] In the third part of his report delivered to the second Jiangsu provincial urban work meeting, Comrade Xu Jiatun, first secretary of the provincial CCP committee, called for further perfecting urban planning and earnestly strengthening urban construction.

Comrade Xu Jiatun said: We have made fairly good progress in urban planning in a number of cities during recent years. The pace of urban construction has also increased. Our present task is to proceed from Jiangsu's reality and find a suitable pattern for our urban construction.

To accomplish this task, Comrade Xu Jiatun said, we must first further revise and perfect our urban planning. We must have urban construction plans that are drawn up scientifically. In drawing up a construction plan, we must respect scientific methods and follow the mass line. We must not rely solely on the consent of a leader in drawing up construction plans. We must respect the views of experts of all fields. We must pool their views and adopt rational proposals through discussion. We must have regional as well as overall planning. A general plan for the entire city alone will not do; there should also be detailed plans for every street and alley. The plans should be submitted to the people's government of the next higher level for approval. They should be discussed and adopted by the local people's congress before they are sent to designated departments for implementation. From now on, the local planning department should make unified arrangements for the selection of sites and use of land for all construction projects, whether they are undertaken by a ministry or by our province and whether they are financed by the central government, local investment or foreign capital. All construction projects must be undertaken in accordance with urban construction plans.

Second, we must understand municipal works and public utilities construction in a down-to-earth manner. At present, municipal works and public utilities in all our cities are in a poor state because of lack of repair and maintenance. (?Public health and sanitation) facilities are far from meeting the needs of urban residents. We must, within our abilities, carry out municipal works and public utilities construction step by step in a planned way and with special emphasis on tangible benefits. We must make special efforts in the maintenance of existing works and the remodeling of old urban districts. With regard to the old urban districts, our policy is to strengthen the maintenance and remodeling work, to make full use of them. Our main efforts should be directed to those sections in urban areas where houses are old and dilapidated, traffic is congested and municipal and public works are in a poor state. While strengthening maintenance and repair of existing works, we should also construct new houses and municipal and public works. We should build an appropriate number of stores, health centers, nurseries, schools and other welfare facilities in newly developed residential areas to create complexes with comprehensive facilities that provide adequate service for the people's daily needs.

Third, we must resolve capital shortages in urban construction by all means. We must foster the spirit of relying on our own efforts and working hard for the gradual realization of our urban construction plans. We must invigorate ourselves, use our brains and, while upholding planned economy, explore every local financial resource. Urban maintenance and construction funds are appropriated specifically for urban maintenance and construction, and should be used solely for that purpose.

WU KEHUA MEETS PLA CADRES TEMPERED AT FAKASHAN

HK090302 Guangzhou Guangdong Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 8 May 82

[Excerpts] Cadres of the Guangzhou PLA units' leading organs who were sent to serve in acting capacities in the unit to which the Fakashan heroic battalion belongs returned to the organs in late April after 6 months of tempering there. Wu Kehua, Jiang Xieyuan and other responsible comrades of the Guangzhou PLA units cordially received them.

These 30 cadres of organs sent down to serve in acting capacities arrived in the Fakashan frontline in early November. They acted as regimental, battalion and company leaders. While undertaking practical work, they also humbly learned from the grassroots cadres and fighters. The 30 cadres of organs were all praised by the grassroots cadres and fighters. Twenty-five of them won merits or awards. It was particularly good to see that these cadres attached great importance to investigation and study. They sought the views of the border defense cadres and fighters on the work of the organs, and wrote to the organs' leadership reporting these views and giving their opinions on improving the work of the organs. The CCP committee attached importance to these views.

ZHUANG PEOPLE TO HAVE WRITTEN LANGUAGE

[Text] Nanning, May 7 (XINHUA) -- The government of the Guangxi Zhuang Autonomous Region has published a revised program of written language of the Zhuang people, using Latin alphabet. The program, with the 26 Latin letters, is based on a major dialect of the Zhuang people.

Distributed mainly in the central and western parts of Guangxi, as well as in part of Yunnan and Guangdong Provinces, the Zhuang people total 12 million, the biggest of China's 55 minority nationalities. Before liberation in 1949, the Zhuang people had no written language, though they had a spoken one.

On the basis of a former program approved by the State Council in 1957, the revised program has retained its original pronunciation system and Latinized its alphabet by replacing non-Latin letters in the former program. This is helpful for study, usage, typing and printing of the Zhuang language, and helps those who study Han language and other languages based on Latin alphabet.

[Words indistinct] as the publication of books and magazines in the revised language are being made to popularize it among Zhuang people in the region.

To record folk songs and events, the Zhuang people had created a number of Zhuang characters drawing on the forms, sound and meaning of the Han characters, which, however, failed to spread because they were more complex than the characters of the written Han language, and had no unified structure.

Responsible comrades of the provincial military district, provincial CYL committee, provincial women's federation, provincial federation of writers and artists and provincial science association gave speeches at the ceremony extending congratulations to the opening of the congress.

In his speech delivered at the ninth provincial trade union congress, Zhao Chuqi, secretary of the Hunan Provincial CCP Committee, urged the broad masses of staff and workers in the province to foster the sense of responsibility of being masters of their own affairs, be good masters of the country and contribute all their wisdom and strength to the great four modernizations drive. Comrade Zhao Chuqi said: The trade unions serve the purpose of bridging the gap between the party and the masses and are the schools for the broad masses of staff and workers to study communism. The work of trade unions at all levels must focus on the building of the four modernizations, and they must incessantly mobilize the broad masses of staff and workers to carry forward the spirit of being masters of their own affairs and contribute their strength to the building of socialist material and spiritual civilization.

Comrade Zhao Chuqi said: At present, we must vigorously strengthen ideological and political work and promote the building of the workers' contingent. At present and for some time to come, we must treat strengthening the workers' sense of being masters of their own affairs as the key to ideological and political work, and carry out vivid education in upholding the four basic principles and maintaining and carrying forward the true qualities of the working class. Thus, the staff and workers will consolidate their faith in communism, foster the good thinking of cherishing the factories in the same way as they cherish their homes and correctly handle the relations between the interests of the state, the collective and the individual. We must treat education of young workers as the crux in ideological and political education so that the young workers will enhance their national pride and confidence and establish lofty communist ideals. In his speech, Zhao Chuqi also demanded that trade unions at all levels mobilize the broad masses of staff and workers to further launch labor competitions aimed at promoting the four modernizations drive and create a vivid and prosperous atmosphere. All workers must make new contributions in completing this year's task of "ensuring an increase of 4 percent and striving for 5" in industrial production and striving for an obvious turn for the better in the party work style, people's life style and social mood.

HUNAN AGRICULTURAL, SIDELINE PRODUCTS -- All areas in Hunan Province have seriously implemented the decision of the State Council on the procurement of agricultural and sideline products and revolutely controlled the prices of the main agricultural and sideline products according to the state law. In compliance with the regulations of the provincial people's government, all areas have reduced the number of agricultural and sideline products whose prices are negotiated and have properly enlarged the scope of the first and the second categories of agricultural and sideline products which are under control. The province has fixed the maximum negotiated prices of 46 types of agricultural and sideline products. Since the province has taken such effective measures, the supplies of agricultural and sideline products have increased. The total value of agricultural and sideline products in the province procured in the first quarter of this year reached 775 million yuan, 52 percent more than in the corresponding period of 1980 [year as heard]. This has effectively improved the supplies in the market. [Changsha Hunan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2310 GMT 3 May 82 HK]

SICHUAN MEETING ON FLOOD PRECAUTIONS ENDS

HK090648 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 8 May 82

[Text] The Sichuan provincial antiflood work conference concluded in Chengdu on 8 May. The meeting demanded that the province make haste to do a good job in antiflood preparations, base its work on taking preventive measures against a great flood, seize the initiative in the struggle against floods and ensure the safety of national economic construction and of people's lives and property. The meeting demanded that leaders at all levels further enhance understanding of antiflood work on the basis of summing up and absorbing the experiences and lessons of the struggle against floods last year. They should eliminate lack of vigilance and ideas of winning by luck, and strengthen leadership over antiflood work. It is necessary to augment the antiflood command organs and put them on a sound basis, formulate and implement antiflood measures, organize crash-rescue forces and prepare ample rescue materials. The province should make sound preparations in ideology, organization and measures for resisting a possible great flood.

SHIJIE JINGJI DAOBAO ON SICHUAN SOIL CRISIS

HK100809 Shanghai SHIJIE JINGJI DAOBAO in Chinese No 80, 19 Apr 82 p 6

[Report: "The Heavenly Land Faces a Soil Crisis"]

[Text] Sichuan Province held a meeting in Chengdu municipality 8-13 February this year to scientifically sum up the exceptionally big flood. The meeting received a total of more than 270 reports and papers. These reports and papers have used modern scientific knowledge to sum up the experiences and lessons of the flood in Sichuan Province last year.

The big flood in Sichuan last year shocked the entire nation. The reason for the shock was not only because of the enormous losses caused by the exceptionally big flood, but also because we were able to see more clearly how impartial and incorruptible nature had been in meting out such stern punishment for the neglect of environmental protection and the destruction of the ecological balance over the years. This flood was the inevitable result of the destruction of the natural ecological environment caused by "leftist" guiding ideology in economic construction. At the same time, it again exacerbated the destruction of the ecological balance to a broader and deeper extent, creating an even more vicious cycle. Therefore, to put a stop to this kind of vicious cycle, we can no longer stress immediate narrow interests at the cost of sacrificing the natural environment and ecological balance.

Danger of Becoming the Second Huang He

The area covered by forest of Sichuan Province was about 19 percent in the early period of the liberation, but as a result of indiscriminate cutting and large-scale destruction of forests for reclamation, this has now been reduced to 13.3 percent. Moreover, most of the forests of Sichuan are centered in the Aba, Ganzi and Liangshan Prefectures on the upper reaches of the Chang Jiang. Now, the forest resources of these places are beginning to be exhausted and the trees planted on the fountainheads of Min Jiang, Jialing Jiang and Fu Jiang to conserve water have also been reduced to fields of stumps. Some small and scattered forest belts, which made the tradition from grassland to forest, have also been unable to escape the ravages of destructive felling. The catastrophe suffered by forest resources has deprived the environment of the regulatory role of nature. The exceptionally big flood last year was only a warning. There is the danger of the Chang Jiang becoming a second Huang He.

The destruction of plant cover has exacerbated erosion. At present, the discharge of mud and sand through the three gorges in Sichuan has reached 640 million tons a year. This corresponds to 6 inches of topsoil being swept away from 5 million mu of farmland and about 4.8 million tons of nitrogenous, phosphate and potash fertilizer being carried away. At the peak of the flood last year, more than 1.8 million cubic meters of silt were flowing through the three gorges every hour. Soil is of basic importance to agriculture. Without soil, where would grain, cotton and edible oil come from? Therefore, the masses say: The Chang Jiang flowing toward the east is carrying away our grain, cotton and edible oil! As a result of this, not only is the heavenly land of Sichuan facing a soil crisis, but the ecological system in the middle and lower reaches of the Chang Jiang is also deteriorating daily. Because of silting from the upper reaches of the Chang Jiang, the waters of Dongtinghu have become smaller in area by one-third, and moreover, the lake surface is already higher than Jianghan by 3 meters. If this vicious cycle continues to develop, the flood waters of the Chang Jiang will invariably try to find other ways of pouring into Jianghan. How could the consequences possibly be visualized today?

Over 300,000 Mu of Reclaimed Land All Swept Away

The rivers and streams themselves have also been seriously damaged for many years. Because of the lack of scientific knowledge, or for the sake of temporary or local benefit, the people would not hesitate to build obstructions in rivers and streams, disrupt the water system, reclaim land from the rivers to build farms, indiscriminately discharge mining waste and raise the bed of the river, with the result that the discharge of water is obstructed in time of flood and the calamity is aggravated. According to incomplete statistics, more than 340,000 mu of land which had been reclaimed by Sichuan over the years were all swept away by the single flood last year.

The Entire Nation Should Take the Matter Seriously

In the past, because many localities did not carefully think out plans beforehand when quarrying the hills, extracating coal and building roads in gorges and on slopes, they destroyed the geological structure and the vegetation. If they faced a particularly heavy rainstorm or flood, such factors as the weathered condition of the cliffs would lead to rifts, cave-ins, landslides, slipping slopes and mud-rock flows and cause even greater destruction to the geological environment. According to incomplete statistics, some 60,000 places in Sichuan suffered from landslides and slipping slopes and 20 counties suffered from mud-rock flows. Many railway lines and bridges along the two major railroads -- the Chengdu-Kunming trunk and the Baoji-Chengdu trunk -- were destroyed. The consequence of the destruction of the geological environment is not just limited to this. Once the geological environment has been destroyed, it cannot be restored by any human power. The natural environment is the objective world upon which mankind depends for its existence, and environmental problems have accompanied the production and livelihood of mankind all along and developed along with the intensification of human activities.

At the meeting held by Sichuan this February to scientifically sum up the exceptionally big flood, the experts and scholars loudly appealed: For the sake of the present four modernizations and the future of the generations to come, we must draw on last year's experiences and lessons, respect science and the laws of nature, abandon the narrow viewpoint of small production and realistically and effectively strengthen protection and management over nature and the environment. Therefore, we must energetically carry out afforestation, conserve soil, water and fertilizer and lay a solid foundation for agriculture. In the mountain regions, we must return farms to forests in a planned and systematic manner, readjust the structure of agriculture and protect the ecological balance. We must strengthen control over rivers and streams, carry out comprehensive realignment and take into consideration both remote and long-term consequences. We must take the road of harmoniously developing economic construction and environmental protection on the basis of properly protecting environmental resources and maintaining an ecological outlook and an economic outlook. In a report, the Sichuan provincial environmental protection bureau also pointed out: Up to now, the pollution and destruction of the environment have still not been brought under control, and the environmental situation is constantly deteriorating. The entire nation should take the matter seriously. It is too late to talk about protection after destruction has been carried out. Even now we are already a bit late. How can we allow further delay!

BRIEFS

SICHUAN PREFECTURE POWER STATIONS -- Chengdu, 30 Apr (XINHUA) -- More than 1,400 small hydroelectric power stations have been built across Liangshan Autonomous Prefecture of Yi nationality in southwest China, according to a prefectural official. These stations, including 12 built in the first quarter of this year, have a total capacity of 68,980 kilowatts and are capable of producing 115.84 million kilowatt-hours of electricity a year. Under construction in the prefecture are 17 more small hydropower stations with a total capacity of 6,095 kilowatts, the official said. Liangshan Prefecture in Sichuan, which covers 70,000 square kilometers, has more than 1.3 million members of the Yi nationality. The development of hydro-electric stations has helped to boost local industry and farming. There are now 313 state-run industrial enterprises throughout the prefecture, 78.3 times the 1949 figure when Liangshan was liberated, in addition to 3,600 small rural workshops and enterprises. YUNNAN SUGARCANE -- Kunming, 27 Apr (XINHUA) -- Yunnan Province, one of China's major sugarcane producers, had produced 225,000 tons of sugarcane by 20 April, an increase of 26 percent over the previous refining year, according to the provincial light industrial department. Sugarcane output is expected to be 235,000 tons at the end of the 1981-82 refining year, the department said. The province's sugarcane output rose at an annual average rate of 18 percent in the 5-year period between 1977 and 1981. The increase results from the rise in state purchase prices, grain rewards to sugarcane growers and sugar refineries giving part of their profits to growers, the department said. In an effort to speed up sugarcane production, the provincial people's government also allocated more funds for water conservancy projects for sugarcane fields and popularized fine strains of sugarcane. Six new sugarcane refineries went into operation in the current refining year, and some existing refineries were expanded, it reported. [Text] [Beijing XINHUA in English 1322 GMT 27 Apr 82 OW]

SHANXI GOVERNMENT ON COMBATING ECONOMIC CRIMES

[Reports: "Provincial People's Governemnt Puts Forward Six Views on Dealing Resolute Blows at Serious Economic Crimes"]

[Text] In accordance with the resolution of the CCP Central Committee and the State Council on combating serious criminal activities in the economic field, and in light of the specific conditions in our province, provincial Vice Governor Zhang Tianyi, in his report submitted to the 14th meeting of the provincial people's congress standing committee, put forward six views on further carrying out this struggle.

1. Do a good job in organizing cadres, especially leading cadres at various levels, to study the "resolution of the CCP Central Committee and the State Council on combating serious criminal activities in the economic field" so that they can easily recognize the seriousness of the present criminal activities in the economic field and the necessity of carrying out the struggle against corruption. All units and departments must make concrete arrangements for carrying out this struggle in the light of the "resolution" and their specific conditions.

2. Continue to do a good job in publicizing and explaining the "resolution" among the masses and urge all criminal offenders to gain a clear understanding of the situation and surrender themselves to judicial departments as soon as possible.

3. Have a good grasp of the party's policies and strictly distinguish the two different types of contradictions. It is necessary to act as the central authorities require and make a clear distinction between mistakes and errors in work and illegal and criminal activities and between unhealthy tendencies in the economic field and economic crimes. We must also distinguish between smuggling, selling smuggled articles, embezzling, taking bribes, speculating and swindling and mistakes due to the imperfection of some regulations and measures for carrying out the open-door economic policy and the policy of enlivening the domestic economy. When judging a case, it is necessary to make a clear distinction between embezzlement committed by individuals and appropriation of public property by collectives.

4. Make good arrangements to firmly grasp the investigation and handling of major and serious cases. All units must have enough people to investigate and handle all these major and serious cases which have been discovered. In those units in which no serious cases have hitherto been discovered, the leaders must also make investigations personally and understand the situations in their units fairly well, so that no economic criminals can escape. A special group must be formed for the examination of serious and major cases so that these cases can be thoroughly investigated and cracked. However, under no circumstances should we obtain confessions by compulsion and then give these confessions credence or involve the innocent relatives and friends of the criminals.

5. Adhere to the mass line. In this struggle, the method of mass movement and everyone making a self-criticism will not be used, but we must firmly follow the mass line. For major cases, we must, within a certain scope, mobilize the masses to make the investigation. We must, in particular, mobilize those who know something about the cases to expose, denounce and keep watch on those who have committed serious crimes. Some cases can be discussed by relevant masses so that more opinions can be gathered and the cases can be handled fairly. Simultaneously, the masses can also be educated through discussion.

6. Effectively strengthen leadership to carry this struggle through to the end. At present, it is necessary to overcome the attitude of paying no attention or turning a blind eye to the serious criminal activities in the economic field and the attitude of being irresolute, hesitant and full of worries in this struggle. Governments at various levels must concentrate efforts, make careful investigations, have a good grasp of the party's policies and principles and effectively strengthen leadership to achieve victory in this struggle.

MEDIA CRITICIZE ISF'S PORTER OVER TAIWAN GAMES

Beijing Radio Commentator

OW101415 Beijing in Mandarin to Taiwan 1500 GMT 9 May 82

[Commentary by station commentator (Mai Da): "Porter and His Ilk Vainly Attempt To Create 'Two Chinas' and Prevent the Chinese Women's Softball Team From Going to Taibei"]

[Text] A responsible person of the Chinese Softball Association announced on 8 May: Since Secretary General of the International Softball Federation [ISF] Porter has thus far not removed the political obstacle caused by what he and the Chinese Taibei Softball Association have done in creating "two Chinas" on the occasion of the fifth world women's softball championships, the Chinese Softball Association will not send a team to Taibei to attend the championships.

The decision made by the Chinese Softball Association defended China's sovereignty and frustrated the scheme of Porter and his ilk to create "two Chinas." The decision was entirely necessary and correct. As everyone knows, the Chinese Softball Association made active preparations to go to Taibei to attend the championships. We first hoped that our national women's softball team could have the opportunity to go to Taibei to cheerfully chat with our compatriots and exchange ball-playing skills and promote friendship with the players of various countries. However, some persons in the ISF, with certain political motives, disregarded the repeated objections and protests lodged by the Chinese Softball Association and colluded with the Chinese Taibei Softball Association in trampling on the decisions made by the International Olympic Committee [IOC] and the ISF. They played tricks with the issue of hoisting the "national flag" and playing the "national anthem" to create "two Chinas."

On 2 April, Porter told a responsible person of the Chinese Softball Association: During the fifth world women's softball championships only the flags of the IOC and the ISF will be hoisted and only the IOC song will be played.

However, he and the Chinese Taibei Softball Association issues a joint statement in Taibei on 6 April. The statement did not contain a word about the flag and anthem issue. It only said in a sweeping fashion: Both sides agree that all regulations and rules of the IOC and the ISF will be applied during the fifth world women's softball championships. In the statement, Porter even described the Chinese Taibei Softball Association as a national softball organization and thus brazenly created "two Chinas."

In order to deceive more teams into going to Taibei, Porter lied in his 7 April memorandum to all ISF member associations by saying: The Chinese Taibei Softball Association has given up the right of hoisting the flag and playing the anthem that was granted it pursuant to a resolution of the ISF, and the protocol question concerning the use of flags and songs at the opening ceremony has been solved. However, soon after Porter left Taiwan, a responsible person of the Chinese Taibei Softball Association said: The Taiwan side reserves the right to fly its national flag and play its national anthem. He also said: During the talks, no one on the Taiwan side made any concession and no one made any compromise.

Porter did not refute those remarks. On the contrary, he provided a cover for the Chinese Taibei Softball Association. In order to deceive the world public, he uttered such nonsense as: All worries and opinions of objection shown by the Chinese Softball Association over the flag and anthem issue have been resolved.

On 22 April the Chinese Softball Association sent a message to Porter asking him to instruct the Chinese Taibei Softball Association to openly assure that the name, flag and anthem of the so-called Republic of China will not be used. To date, however, Porter has not done so, nor has he replied. Porter and his ilk are perfidious, going back on their words and playing tricks to hatch a political plot. Porter and his ilk are to blame for making it impossible for the Chinese women's softball team to participate in the championships in Taibei.

TIYU BAO Commentator

HK110650 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0829 GMT 10 May 82

[Excerpts of 10 May TIYU BAO commentator's article: "Watch Carefully, the Farce Is Not Over Yet"]

[Text] Beijing, 10 May (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- TIYU BAO today published a commentator's article saying that, on the question of the world women's softball championships, we adhere to the principle and stand that there is only one China and do not permit anyone to create "two Chinas" in any way whatsoever.

The article exposed the "two-man" show acted out by the secretary of the International Softball Federation, Porter, and certain people of the Taibei Softball Association. The article said that Porter went to Taiwan at the beginning of April and, after secret negotiations, stated that "all their (referring to the China Softball Association) anxiety and opposition have been assuaged." However, the responsible person in the China Taibei Softball Association missed his "cue," and announced impatiently "they would not relinquish their right to fly their flag and play their anthem." Not only did Porter fail to clarify or refute this, but he also went so far as to defend and condone this by saying that this was a "question of emotion."

The commentator's article said that the Chinese people's great cause of completing the reunification of the motherland is an irreversible tide of history. When we say that this is a "question of emotion," we mean the national emotion common to the Chinese people on both sides of the Taiwan Strait. Porter wantonly seeks to undermine this sacred emotion, and this can only serve to further expose his highly ignominious characteristics to the whole of the Chinese people. We Chinese have never been susceptible to fallacies. We have never believed that a couple of politicians, by acting out a series of farces, could reverse the tide of history.

This commentator's article entitled "The World Should Watch Attentively, for the Farce Is Not Yet Over" ends by saying that we are waiting to see what the next act in the farce being acted out by Porter and others will be.

COMMENTARY STRESSES NEED FOR U.S. WEAPONS

OW [illegible]315 Taipei International Service in English 0100 GMT 7 May 82

[Station commentary]

[Excerpts] James Sung, the director general of the government Information Office, has been traveling in the United States as an Eisenhower Fellow. While visiting San Diego, California, now the eighth largest city in the United States, Dr Sung met with editors of the union, answered their questions and made some observations about the Republic of China [ROC].

One striking fact emerging from the interview is that many friends of the ROC do not understand some aspects of the China problem. For example, Americans seem to presume that if the ROC cannot buy defensive arms from the United States, it can easily go out in the world and get them elsewhere. As Dr Sung pointed out, this just is not true.

First, the ROC has been attached to American weapons systems for decades. To change overnight is impossible. Weapons systems are not made easily. There is the question of parts. The United States created the ROC's reliance on American weapons. It cannot expect to turn its protege loose to depend on others.

Second, all Free World countries take their lead from the United States. All democratic nations are dependent on the United States. If the Americans say there will be no weapons for the defense of the ROC, there will be none. That applies to every country of the Free World. Would the Americans like us to go to the Russians? Or should we take up the offer of the Chinese communists to provide us with weapons after we have accepted their sovereignty and place our defenses in the hands of the Red Army?

The Southern California editors wanted to know why we did not make our weapons like the South Koreans do. This is a question that hurts, because the ROC has been far more sufficient in Armaments than our Korean friends for a good many years. We have been making the F-5E fighter aircraft in cooperation with Northrop for several years. The Koreans are just beginning. We make missiles and armored vehicles. We produce training planes. The light arms of the ROC are of excellent quality and have helped other members of the Free World. But we are not yet at the stage of making our own advanced fighter aircraft. We need help for a while yet. Let it not be forgotten too that nearly 40,000 American troops stand at the side of the Koreans. There is not one American soldier in Taiwan. Yet the threats addressed to us are far more violent than those dispatched to Seoul.

COMMENTARY SAYS PRC NEVER FRIENDLY TO U.S.

OW082140 Taipei International Service in English 0100 GMT 8 May 82

[Station commentary: "Not So Friendly"]

[Summary] A [words indistinct] has described Communist China as a friendly nation qualifying for American food aid. [Words indistinct] (Smith), who was deputy assistant secretary of state for Far East and Pacific affairs, also asserted that the Peking [as heard] regime is not a dictatorship, but is merely authoritarian.

If the United States is willing to give food assistance to Red China for humanitarian reasons, nothing can be said about it.

"The fact is that Red China has never been friendly to the United States, and it is as dictatorial as ever. One is either misinformed or hypocritical to say otherwise. It was not so long ago when Peking regarded the United States as enemy No 1. Even after the communist regime (?decided) to play off the U.S. against the Soviet Union, they fought the Americans indirectly in Vietnam. Today, more than 3 years after the exchange of ambassadors between Washington and Peking, the Chinese communists still regard the United States as enemy No 2, even though they no longer say that in public. But Peking has not tried very hard to hide its hostility toward the United States.

If the U.S. is eager to help Communist China with food assistance, this is hardly the time.

VICE FOREIGN MINISTER ON FOSTERING U.S. TIES

OW091347 Taipei CNA in English 1334 GMT 9 May 82

[Text] Taipei, 9 May (CNA) -- Vice Foreign Minister Fredrick Chien has said the Republic of China should take the initiative to foster relations with the United States. "Strengthening of bilateral relations will benefit both the two countries." Chien stated this at an academic symposium sponsored by the Taipei city council Saturday.

Although President Ronald Reagan understands well the Asian problem, particularly the China issue, Chien said, "we should remain cautious." He urged promotion of substantive relations with the U.S. in the fields of trade, finance, arts, science and technology, as well as people-to-people exchanges.

The vice foreign minister offered some advice on extention of relations with the United States:

-- To continue inviting lawmakers to visit this country to view for themselves the Republic of China's policy and development, while strengthening administrative-level relations.

-- To place equal emphasis on promoting relations with both the U.S. Federal Government and local governments.

-- To push people-to-people diplomacy through civic organizations.

-- To expand trade relations while taking notice of political considerations. For instance, this government always makes a political decision when it enforces the "buy American" policy, Chien stated.

TAIWAN TO DEVELOP FISHERIES ON NANSHA ISLANDS

OW101239 Taipei LIEN HO PAO in Chinese 5 May 82 p 2

[Text] Makung, Penghu -- A government plan for the development of fisheries on the Nansha Islands has been put into practice. The experimental ship Haifu of the Taiwan Provincial Aquatic Products Experimental Institute is currently conducting a survey of aquatic resources in waters off the Nansha Islands to gather data for the development of fisheries by fishermen-settlers in the future.

The ship Haifu left Keelung on 24 April for Nansha to conduct a survey of aquatic resources in waters there. The ship is scheduled to return to the port in mid-May.

Hu Hsing-hua, director of the Penghu Branch of the Taiwan Provincial Aquatic Products Experimental Institute, said: The experimental ship Haifu has a crew of more than 20 persons, most of whom are fishery experts. Hu Hsing-hua, who participated in working out the plan for developing marine resources in waters off the Nansha Islands, indicated that a difficult problem to be solved now is to build communication facilities on the Nansha Islands in order to ensure communications between the islands and Taiwan. Due to the lack of such facilities, he said, he now had no way of knowing about the operations of the ship Haifu in waters off the Nansha Islands. Measures for carrying out the government plan for developing fisheries in waters off the Nansha Islands include a survey of aquatic resources, the building of a fishing port and supply facilities on Taiping Island, one of the Nansha Islands, and encouraging fishermen to settle on the islands.

HSIN WAN PAO CALLS REAGAN'S THREE LETTERS 'VAGUE'

HK100811 Hong Kong HSIN WAN PAO in Chinese 10 May 82 p 1

["New Talk" column: "Reagan's Three Letters Have Not Stated Things Clearly"]

[Text] When U.S. Vice President Bush left Beijing for home yesterday, he said that his visit had resulted in some progress but that there were still differences between China and the United States. He also spoke of three letters written by President Reagan to Chinese leaders Hu Yaobang, Deng Xiaoping and Zhao Ziyang, as greatly assisting this progress. The contents of these letters have been made public by the Americans.

Two of these letters were issued on 5 April, that is, the week before the Reagan administration's plan to sell Taiwan $60 million worth of military spare parts was sent to Congress for approval. These two letters expressed the hope that Bush would be able to go to Beijing, but that his trip depended on whether China held that this would be useful. China replied in the affirmative, feeling that this would be of positive significance.

This visit was indeed useful, judging by its results. The talks have helped the Reagan administration understand China's stand. People hope that this will be helpful for solving the problem of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan. Bush himself is not the man who untied the knot. He came as commissioned by Reagan and took China's stand and attitude back with him for Reagan to make the decision on tying or untying the knot.

Bush mentioned that he had come to Beijing in a state of extreme tension but that he felt relaxed when he left. The reason for his relaxation was that he was given a warm reception and heard frank and sincere words, and thus gained greater knowledge of China's stand. Some Americans have said that China has made up its mind to downgrade ties with the United States for domestic reasons, and is only awaiting a pretext. Bush evidently perceived that this was not the case at all. He knows that China is sincere about developing relations between the two countries but will certainly not forsake principles, and so it is also prepared for a retrogression in relations. Hence the saying that it is up to Washington, not Beijing, whether the knot will be tied or untied.

Reagan said in his letters that he fully acknowledges the significance of Beijing's open letter to Taiwan compatriots and the nine-point proposal for peace talks, and also expressed appreciation for them. U.S. correspondents have pointed out that these are the warmest words the Reagan administration has ever used to praise Beijing's peace talk proposal. Even though Reagan is a foreigner and a man regarded as an old friend by the Taiwan authorities, he has understood the profound significance of Beijing's peace talk proposal and given it his attention, so should not the Chinese in the Taiwan Government feel ashamed about their apprehensions regarding the good intentions and sentiments of their compatriots?

Reagan has appreciated Beijing's principles for peaceful reunification and also reiterated the principle of one China and his promise not to allow unofficial U.S. ties with Taiwan to violate this principle. This is quite logical. He should, therefore, cease selling arms to Taiwan. He should not on the one hand appreciate China's peaceful reunification principles while on the other hand sabotage these principles by selling arms; he should not on the one hand acknowledge that there is only one China, while on the other hand engage in arms deals with Taiwan that go beyond the scope of unofficial ties.

Reagan's three letters said some things he should have said, but they were not well written; they were vague on the arms sales question, with the intention of pulling the wool over people's eyes, and sought to link China's reunification -- an internal Chinese affair -- with the question of U.S. arms sales. The Chinese Government and people will certainly not be satisfied with this. Serious obstacles, therefore, remain between China and the United States, which impatiently wait for Reagan to clear them away.

TA KUNG PAO ON IMPORTING FOREIGN INVESTMENT

HK080646 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in Chinese 7 May 82 p 6

[Special feature article by Rong Yiren [2837 3015 0088]: "Importing Foreign Investment Is Written Into the Constitution"]

[Text] Declaring to the World Its Resolution To Practice Open-Door Policy

The draft of the revised constitution adopted at the 23d meeting of the 5th NPC Standing Committee was promulgated and made public for discussion by the people of all nationalities in the country. Revising the constitution is a major event for the people throughout the country. The constitution is the basic law of a state. The fact that our constitution has been revised and perfected several times indicates that the leaders of our country have scrupulously abided by the line of the third plenary session and that they are resolved to enforce the legal system.

I attended the NPC Standing Committee with a special feeling. This was because the revision of the constitution plays an important role in realizing the grand blueprint for the socialist economic construction of our country and reforming the structure of government organs, in particular, in importing foreign investment to expedite socialist modernization, which has been in my mind all the time. The revised constitution prominently permits foreign enterprises, other foreign economic organizations or foreign individuals to invest in China. It has declared to the entire world its resolution to practice an open-door policy with foreign countries. As a result, the suspicion that China will no longer import foreign investment is eliminated. This is the most forceful guarantee and support for people working for the import of foreign investment.

Open-Door Policy Has Been Delayed More Than 10 Years

Since the world smashed feudal separatism and entered the era of capitalism, economic construction of all countries has been impossible if they close their countries to international intercourse and do not seek help from other countries. We sincerely believe that the socialist system is more suitable for China and will guide the Chinese people to advance toward a prosperous future. The late Chairman Mao once said that we must clean our house before we invite any guests. My interpretation of his words is that we must first establish our own socialist economic foundation according to the spirit of self-reliance and basically eliminate the influences of feudal and capitalist ideology; after we have established the socialist ideological system, we will practice an open-door policy with foreign countries. Actually, this could have been realized much earlier. However, for various reasons, it was delayed for more than 10 years.

Opposing Open-Door Policy Is a Retrogression to Feudalism

We must import foreign investment, exploit natural resources, promote production and carry out friendly cooperation with foreign countries on the basis of equality and mutual benefit. Ours is a country of vast territory and abundant resources. Since we lack capital and technology, our underground resources cannot be used to develop production so as to raise the living standard of the people and make our country stronger. The phenomena of excessive international capital and funds, economic depression in the capitalist states and stagnant production have provided us opportunities to import foreign capital. Capital is used to make profits. Since we use their capital, we must give them a considerable amount of return. This tallies with economic discipline. Therefore, the draft of the revised constitution stipulates that their legitimate rights and interests are protected by PRC law. Although we have given up some profits, we have speeded up the economic construction of our country, the circulation of capital and the progress of the four modernizations. In fact, we gain more than we lose, so why not go ahead with it? There are people with this standpoint: We must store the resources underground and preserve them for coming generations, and must not allow foreigners to gain profits from them. How, by following their ideas, could we turn the underground resources into wealth on earth and make our country strong and our people rich? This is actually a retrogression to feudalism.

Furthermore, in talking about technology, knowledge is actually the common wealth of mankind. In the past, the Chinese people used their intelligence to make contributions to people throughout the world by means of discoveries and inventions. In the future, we will continue to make more contributions to the world. Now, we are paying fees to acquire others' technology for our own use so as to catch up with other countries within a short period of time after being left behind. This is advantageous to speeding up the economic construction of our country.

We Must Not Import Corrosive Western Things

What we import is capital, technology and equipment, not capitalist lifestyle and decadent and moribund bourgeois ideology. We must reject the dross and select the essence. It is inevitable that the bad are mixed with the good. Therefore, it is imperative for our party to call for severe punishment of criminals who seriously undermine the economy. Otherwise, the import of foreign investment will be led astray. However, one defect cannot obscure the virtues. The open-door policy with foreign countries and the import of foreign investment have been written into the constitution; they will manifest their vitality in socialist construction, and become an unchanging strategic policy of our country.

WEN WEI PO REPORTS LATEST WEN YI BAO CONTENTS

HK080219 Hong Kong WEN WEI PO in Chinese 8 May 82 p 3

[Report from Beijing: "Revised Version of Old Work of Hu Qiaomu Published"]

[Text] The No 5 issue of WEN YI BAO, which came out yesterday, republishes the text of Hu Qiaomu's article "A Number of Current Problems on the Ideological Front." This article was originally the speech made by the author on 8 August 1981 at the forum on problems on the ideological front convened by the CCP Central Committee Propaganda Department. The author later made many major revisions and additions. There are, therefore, many differences when compared with the original version. The publication of this article is of important significance for guiding people to further understand and study the current situation on the ideological front.

This issue also launches serious literature and art criticism and countercriticism regarding a number of influential recent literature and art works and problems in literature and art theory. For instance, the film "Legend of Tianyun Mountain" won many awards. The previous issue of WEN YI BAO carried an article by Yuan Kang [5913 1660] and Xiao Wen [2556 2429] which declared that this film ran counter to the truth and painted a black picture of party leadership; it was a reflection in literature and art of the bourgeois liberalization trend of thought. The current issue carries an article by Tong Qingbing [4547 1987 3521] rebutting the Yuan Kang and Xiao Wen article and warmly affirming the merits of the film. This discussion will continue. An article by Yu Dong [7183 2639] entitled "A Problem Worthy of Attention" reports that when studying Mao Zedong's "Talks at the Yanan Forum on Literature and Art," the editorial board of the Anhui provincial literature and art federation's periodical raised doubts about a group of articles and an "explanation" contained in issue No 2 of 1981 of SHIDAI DE BAOGAO [REPORT ON THE ERA]. The Anhui periodical editorial board held that for the latter publication to hold that the "Talks" had been "distorted or tampered with from 'left' and right during the 16 years since the 'Great Cultural Revolution'" meant lumping together two historical periods -- the 10 years of internal disorder and the period since the 3d plenary session of the 11th Central Committee -- and this meant erasing the great historical significance of the 3d plenary session as a turning-point for the party and state. The issue also carries a reader's letter which seriously and sincerely criticizes a story entitled "Children's Talk in the Spring" which was carried in issue No 1 of 1982 of HUA CHENG. The letter says that this method of using literature to expose the shameful secrets of others and vent individual private anger is undesirable.

RENMIN RIBAO NOTES REAGAN NUCLEAR ARMS PROPOSAL

[Report: "Reagan's Disarmament Proposal Meets With Strong Response at Home and Abroad"]

[Text] On 9 May, U.S. President Reagan made a speech, expressing his willingness to hold talks with the Soviet Union on the reduction of strategic nuclear arms and proposing a meeting between the heads of state of the two countries. His speech has met with a strong response at home and abroad.

When the former U.S. President Carter was visiting Copenhagen on 10 May, he told reporters that Reagan's proposal "is very good." He recalled that during his Presidency, he also put forth similar proposals, but they were rejected by Brezhnev. Kennedy, one of the U.S. congressmen who has strongly advocated freezing nuclear forces of the United States and the Soviet Union, issued a statement, saying that he was happy becuase Reagan "has finally talked about the pressing needs of controlling nuclear weapons," and that he was disappointed because the "President has not demanded the freezing of nuclear weapons." Former Secretary of State Muskie also worried about the possibility that Reagan's proposal would "lead disarmament onto a wrong road," when the United States was seeking military superiority.

Some governments and leaders of the Western countries welcomed Reagan's speech. The British Foreign Office issued a statement on 10 May, saying that Reagan's proposal was in accordance with NATO policies and that Britain particularly welcomed Reagan's proposal on maintaining the balance of the nuclear forces of the United States and the Soviet Union through extensive reduction of nuclear weapons. West German Minister of Foreign Affairs Genscher expressed the idea that Reagan's proposal was an important step toward disarmament. The Japanese Ministry of Foreign Affairs urged the Soviet Union to actively respond to Reagan's proposal. REUTER reported that NATO diplomats in Brussels generally welcomed Reagan's proposal.

Although the Soviet Union has not yet made public its stand on Reagan's proposal, on 10 May TASS quoted and published views expressed by some U.S. political figures who were dissatisfied with Reagan's proposal and particularly accused the U.S. Government of seeking unilateral military superiority. A Soviet news agency published a commentary, casting doubt on the U.S. sincerity in reducing nuclear arms.

RENMIN RIBAO ON U.S. ATTITUDE TOWARD DISARMAMENT

[Report by Yuan Xianlu [5913 0341 4389]: "Washington Is Shifting From Defense to Offense on the Disarmament Issue"]

[Text] On 9 May, U.S. President Ronald Reagan delivered an important speech. the first of its kind since he assumed the Presidency, on U.S. foreign policy, elucidating the East-West relationship. He proposed to hold U.S.-Soviet strategic arms talks and to reduce the number of their nuclear warheads by one-third at the first stage. He also proposed to begin at the end of June the U.S.-Soviet talks on the reduction of nuclear arms and hoped that Leonid Brezhnev would come to the United Nations by that time to participate in the special disarmament meeting, so that they could meet with each other. He added: "When we sit down together, I shall ask Brezhnev: Why can our two countries not restrain ourselves? Why can the people of our two countries not enjoy the interests resulting from normal cooperation? Why can we not reduce the number of dreadful weapons?"

The U.S. newspapers generally hold that compared with Reagan's other speeches on disarmament, this speech was much more conciliatory in tone. In this speech, he no longer stressed his so-called "principle of linkage," which meant that only when the Soviet Union practiced "restraint" toward other countries would he hold a summit meeting with the Soviets. Nor did he one-sidedly stress arms expansion as a means to secure a position of strength in his negotiations with the Soviets. On the contrary, he talked much about the importance of the reduction of strategic nuclear arms and proposed that the first phase would be the reduction of the number of ballistic missile warheads, of which the United States has more than the Soviet Union at present. As a matter of fact, in this speech, Reagan did not change his keynote of adopting a tough policy toward the Soviet Union. He continued to denounce the Soviet Union for its aggression against Afghanistan and its policy of "seeking to expand its scope of conquest." He called on the U.S. allies to remain united and not to give the Soviet Union economic and technical assistance.

Reagan adopted a low-key, "flexible" attitude this time for the main purpose of meeting the current demands at home and abroad. For some time, Moscow had continuously launched a peace offensive and clamored for disarmament. The United States responded coldly, thereby landing itself in a passive situation. Its economic recession posed a great obstacle to the increase in military expenditure. At home, there was a loud cry for reducing Reagan's arms expansion plan and freezing the nuclear arms deployment of the United States and the Soviet Union. Congress will hold its mid-term elections this year. Congressmen are very sensitive to the feelings of the masses. Up to the present, the Senate and the House have proposed or are preparing more than 40 plans for freezing nuclear weapons. At the same time, in Western Europe, a peace movement against the U.S.-Soviet nuclear arms race and even against the U.S. arms expansion is on the upsurge. Reagan will visit Western Europe next month, so he badly needs to make a better impression on the people there. In addition, the UN special disarmament meeting will begin soon, so the United States is also considering how to cope with the Soviet peace offensive in this world forum. In this situation, Reagan put forth in early April that the United States was willing to hold strategic nuclear arms talks with the Soviet Union. He also expressed his hope of meeting Brezhnev in the UN special disarmament meeting in June. The Soviet Union rejected this proposal, saying that it would be appropriate to hold a meeting between the two leaders in October. Now, Reagan is again taking advantage of the current favorable situation to reiterate his hope of holding a summit meeting in June and to propose a concrete plan for nuclear disarmament.

Reagan's two-phase strategic nuclear disarmament plan obviously will not be approved by the Soviet Union. His purpose is to embarrass the Soviet Union for its disarmament proposal. Now the United States has hoisted the flag of "reduction" while the Soviet Union has put up the signboard of "freeze." The Soviet "freeze" actually means to consolidate the Soviet nuclear superiority, so as to preserve its SS-20 guided missiles in Europe and obstruct the deployment of U.S. medium-range guided missiles in Western Europe. The Reagan administration certainly will not agree to it. Shifting from defense to offense, it has put forth the "reduction" plan for the purpose of reducing the Soviet superiority in nuclear missiles to equal ceilings with the United States. Some U.S. newspapers pointed out: A comparison of strategic nuclear forces at present between the United States and the Soviet Union shows that the Soviet superiority in land-based intercontinental missiles poses a serious threat to the United States. The United States has the superiority in strategic nuclear submarines and bombers, which are far less powerful than the land-based missiles. For this reason, the main purpose of Reagan's proposal is to greatly reduce the threat of Moscow's 1,398 land-based missiles to the United States which has 1,025 land-based missiles, a much smaller number. This means to reduce the Soviet land-based strategic nuclear forces and subsequently to weaken the Soviet nuclear superiority.

Therefore, in the words of an American newspaper, Reagan delivered this speech on disarmament chiefly to the U.S. citizens, the U.S. Congress and the Western European leaders; at the same time, his speech was a reply to the Soviet tricks of using the disarmament proposal to strengthen its peace offensive.

GUANGMING RIBAO DISCUSSES APPRAISAL OF LINCOLN

HK110226 Beijing GUANGMING RIBAO in Chinese 4 May 82 p 3

[Article in "Contention Among a Hundred Schools of Thought" column: "The Appraisal of Lincoln"]

[Text] For over a century, scholars at home and abroad have had different views on the appraisal of Abraham Lincoln. Some have spoken ill of him while others have praised him. SHEHUI KEXUE ZHANXIAN [SOCIAL SCIENCES FRONT] in No 1 of 1982 carried an article by Huang Shaoxiang and Bi Zhongjie, entitled "Questions on the Appraisal of Lincoln," which went further into this topic.

The article says that Lincoln lived at a time when the struggle between two social systems -- the industrial capitalist economy in the North and the slave owners' plantation economy in the South of the United States -- was intensifying. With the new upsurge of the movement to abolish slavery in the United States, Lincoln was placed by the Republican Party on the presidential throne. This was the need of the time and was also a coincidence. If we examine and appraise Lincoln with a dialectical view, we will see that although Lincoln was constrained by the limits of bourgeois revolution, he was worthy to be called an outstanding bourgeois politician of the United States. The reason Lincoln is considered a great man is that under political pressure at home and abroad, he, being propelled by the masses of people, was able to act in accordance with the needs of the historical trend. He led the victory in the Civil War, safeguarded the unity of the Union and settled the question of which would triumph, the free labor system or the slave system. At a result, he played a role in pushing forward U.S. social development.

The author holds that Lincoln's political activities were by no means Lincoln's personal social practice alone. They revealed the entire social practices of the U.S. society and its trend at that time and reflected the pulse of the time. Therefore, in studying the history of the Civil War, it is improper to exaggerate Lincoln's personal role and ignore the objective conditions and the people's revolutionary strength of this time.

The article says that in the middle of the 19th century, the demand to abolish slavery and to liberate the Negroes was the loudest voice of the time and the central idea of the abolitionists. However, Lincoln was not an abolitionist. Lincoln sympathized with the Negro slaves and opposed expanding slavery, but, in appraising a person in history, we must attach importance to his main ideological tendencies and social practice. On the whole, Lincoln's basic political tendency fully showed Lincoln's attitude towards slavery was entirely different from what the abolitionists advocated at that time. The opinion of the broad masses of people, especially the pressure exerted by the abolitionists, the influence of military reverses and threats of foreign intervention make Lincoln turn from limiting the expansion of slavery to advocating the abolition of slavery and from adhering to the war objective of saving the Union and carrying out the war in accordance with the Constitution to carrying out the war in a revolutionary manner.

[Text] Beijing, May 11 (XINHUA) -- A friendship delegation from the Supreme People's Assembly of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea was honored at a banquet tonight hosted by the Standing Committee of the Chinese National People's Congress. The delegation is led by Mme. Ho Chong-suk, secretary of the Central Committee of the Korean Workers' Party and vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of the Supreme People's Assembly. The banquet was presided over by Ulanhu, member of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party and vice-chairman of the N.P.C. Standing Committee.

Ulanhu paid tribute to the Korean people, under the leadership of President Kim Il-song and the Korean Workers' Party, for their success in the ideological, technical and cultural fields and in the Second Seven-Year Plan. "The Democratic People's Republic of Korea," he said, "is gaining prosperity and its international prestige is rising." "The Chinese people are very much concerned with the Korean people's struggle for independent and peaceful reunification of their fatherland. We sympathize with them for the misfortunes caused by the split of the country," Ulanhu said. "In the past few years, the Korean Workers' Party and government have raised several reasonable proposals and made sincere and constant efforts for the reunification of the country. President Kim Il-song's proposal to establish a Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo provides a clear orientation for the country's reunification; it has gained support from all the Korean people and has won international praise." Ulanhu said the Chinese Government and people stand by the Korean people and support them in their struggle for the independent and peaceful reunification of their fatherland, opposing any attempt to create "two Koreas." "The United States should withdraw all its [Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese at 1537 GMT on 11 May rephrases this passage as follows: "...United States should immediately withdraw all its..."] troops from South Korea and the Chon Tu-hwan clique should cease its strangling of democracy and obstruction of reunification," he said. He said that with the support of peace-loving countries and people, and their own efforts, the Korean people's desire to reunify their fatherland will surely be realized.

Ulanhu said the delegation has brought the friendship of the Korean people and has provided a good opportunity for exchange of experience. "We believe the delegation's visit will promote friendship between China and Korea," he said.

Ho Chong-suk praised the friendship between the people of Korea and China. She said the friendship "was founded and nurtured by Comrade Kim Il-song, the great leader of the Korean people, Comrade Mao Zedong, the great leader of the Chinese people, and Comrade Zhou Enlai. It has been cemented in arduous revolutionary struggles and has stood the test of time. The Korean people will do their best to develop friendship and unity with the Chinese people," she said.

She told her hosts the Korean people are working hard for the revolution in the ideological, technical and cultural fields, and for the complete triumph of socialism and the independent and peaceful reunification of their fatherland.

She said her delegation's visit would contribute to development of friendship between the people of Korea and China and between the Supreme People's Assembly of Korea and the National People's Congress of China.

Prior to the banquet, Ulanhu had a cordial talk with the visitors.

Present were Wu Xinyu, Li Zhen, Ou Tangliang and Guo Yingfu, members of the N.P.C. Standing Committee; Xing Yimin, deputy secretary general of the N.P.C. Standing Committee; and Fu Hao, adviser to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. Also present were Chon Chong-yong, charge d'affaires ad interim of the D.P.R.K. Embassy in Beijing.

XINHUA CITES REPORTS OF SRV CHEMICAL WARFARE

[Text] Beijing, May 11 (XINHUA) -- "It is no longer a question of finding proof of chemical warfare" in Kampuchea and "now we are trying to identify the varieties of toxins the Vietnamese are using," according to a Bangkok report which quoted an American doctor as saying yesterday.

Dr Amos Townsend of the U.S.-based International Rescue Committee, who had interviewed and examined hundreds of chemical warfare victims at refugee camps along Thailand's borders with Kampuchea and Laos, said he was "astounded" at the detail provided by Vietnamese defectors. He said the Vietnamese appeared to be using at least four types of micotoxins -- chemical agents that cause symptoms ranging from mild nausea to death. Townsend quoted a Vietnamese defector, an artillery gunner, as saying his unit had three types of 105-millimeter shells with chemical warheads. The Vietnamese troops, he pointed out, have also fallen victim to their own chemical artillery shells which landed too close to the Vietnamese positions when the wind shifted and blew the smoke back from the Kampuchean forces under attack. It was reported animals including deer and wild cats had died after drinking water contaminated by chemicals.

SRV TROOPS FIRE AT RESIDENTS OF GUANGXI COMMUNE

OW120303 Beijing in Vietnamese to Vietnam 1400 GMT 11 May 82

[Text] Recently, Vietnamese troops have been incessantly firing at members of the Shuikou commune, Longzhu County, Guangxi, China who are engaged in production, cutting wood or going to the market. The Vietnamese troops have killed or wounded a number of them, seriously affecting their production and normal life.

At 0630 on 2 May, as (Liu Tingben), member of the [name indistinct] of the Shuikou commune, was cutting wood on (Beiluan) hill on the Chinese side of the (Meiwang) River, Vietnamese troops on the other side of the river suddenly fired two shots, killing him on the spot. When his 16-year-old boy heard about this and ran toward him to try to save him, the Vietnamese troops again opened fire but failed to hit the boy. Finally, only with other commune members' assistance was it possible to bring him back.

This bloodshed caused by the Vietnamese troops at the Shuikou area in Guangxi once again proves that the Vietnamese authorities' proposal on ending all hostile armed actions by the two sides in the border region of the two countries is deceitful.

[Text] Beijing, May 11 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang reiterated China's position on Kampuchea this afternoon in a meeting with Thai Foreign Minister Sitthi Sawetsila. "China desires to assist the ASEAN countries in promoting the alliance of the three patriotic forces in Kampuchea. China desires to see an independent, neutral and non-aligned Kampuchea," he said. He said the Chinese Government feels the efforts of Thailand and other ASEAN countries are very important in solving the Kampuchean question in a fair and reasonable way. "The Chinese Government and people firmly stand by the Kampuchean people, and support them in their struggle against Vietnamese aggression and for national salvation," Zhao Ziyang said.

The Thai foreign minister said Thailand cannot accept continued presence of Vietnamese forces in Kampuchea.

[Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese at 1430 GMT on 11 May transmits a similar report which rephrases the preceeding passage as follows: "... of Vietnamese forces or part of Vietnamese forces [hue zhe yue nan bu fen shi li 2057 5074 6390 0589 6752 0433 0528 0500] in Kampuchea."]

The meeting proceeded in a cordial atmosphere. Sitthi conveyed the warm greetings of Thai Prime Minister Prem Tinsulanon to Premier Zhao Ziyang. Zhao asked Sitthi to convey the same to the Thai prime minister. Both praised the friendship between the two countries and peoples. President at the meeting were Han Nianlong, adviser to the Chinese Foreign Ministry, and Koson Sinthuwanon, Thai ambassador to China.

AFP: SIHANOUK, SITTHI DISCUSS DK COALITION

OW111424 Hong Kong AFP in English 1406 GMT 11 May 82

[Text] Beijing, 11 May (AFP) -- Thailand has submitted to the three Cambodian resistance groups a draft joint statement under which they would form an anti-Vietnamese coalition that would retain institutions of the deposed Khmer Rouge government but would be headed by its two anti-communist leaders. Former Cambodian head of state Prince Norodom Sihanouk made the disclosure to AFP following his talks here with Thai Foreign Minister Sitthi Sawetsila. He said the Thai plan probably had the support of Bangkok's partners in the Association of Southeast Asian Nations.

Under the plan, Prince Sihanouk would become head of Democratic Kampuchea (the Khmer Rouge administration) -- replacing Khmer Rouge leader Khieu Samphan. Son Sann, head of the Khmer People's National Liberation Front (KPNLF), would be made premier and Mr Khieu Samphan vice-premier.

"My talks with Mr Sitthi Sawesila went very well, but I'm afraid the formation of the coalition is not for tomorrow," said Prince Sihanouk. He added that (?he had) endorsed the Thai draft statement but indicated that the Chinese-backed Khmer Rouge had conveyed what, in his view, was a negative response while Mr. Son Sann's consent was with reservations. He said that the Khmer Rouge had sent a memorandum to the Thais that did specify why they objected to the draft statement but in which they said they were unclear about some of the goals pursued by the two other resistance groups: Prince Sihanouk's Moulinaka faction and Mr Son Sann's KPNLF. The prince said the Khmer Rouge feared that the two other groups may try to "strip them of their powers."

The Khmer Rouge, ousted by a Vietnamese military intervention in 1979, still hold the Cambodian seat at the United Nations.

The Thai plan attempts to combine points made by the various resistance factions such as the retention of Democratic Kampuchea, demanded by the Khmer Rouge, and Mr Son Sann's call for broad autonomy for each of the three factions. Prince Sihanouk said that under the Thai proposal, the Khmer Rouge would not even enjoy control of defense or foreign affairs, which would be the responsibility of a joint committee comprising representatives of the three groups.

Thai sources indicated that Mr Sitthi Sawetsila, who arrived here on Sunday for a five-day visit, also met Premier Zhao Ziyang today. Yesterday he had six hours of talks with his opposite number Huang Hua and on Thursday he is to meet powerful Communist Party Vice-Chairman Deng Xiaoping. So far there has been no worldon what Mr Sitthi Sawesila discussed with Chinese leaders.

AFP: Sihanouk Refuses Top Post

OW121048 Hong Kong AFP in English 1022 GMT 12 May 82

[Excerpts] Beijing, 12 May (AFP) -- Former Cambodian leader Prince Norodom Sihanouk said today he does not want to head a coalition of anti-Vietnamese resistance groups in his country as proposed by Thailand and other non-communist Southeast Asian nations. Prince Sihanouk made his remarks a day after meeting visiting Thai Foreign Minister Sitthi Sawetsila, who arrived Sunday for talks with Chinese leaders on formation of a tripartite coalition opposed to the Hanoi-backed government in Phnom Penh.

Mr Sitthi Sawetsila, meanwhile, took a sightseeing break today before resuming talks tomorrow with Chinese leaders apparently reluctant to back the Thai coalition plan. Beijing has to yet make public its reaction.

The Thai plan would set up a coalition including the ousted communist Khmer Rouge regime, allies of China, but led by the chiefs of the two non-communist resistance groups: Prince Sihanouk, who would be head of state, and Son Sann, who would again be his premier.

The 60-year-old Prince Sihanouk said in a statement that his views "coincided completely" with those of Mr Sitthi Sawetsila. But he added: "I seek nothing for myself or my party. I even told my Thai hosts that I didn't want to be 'chief of state.' "The exiled ruler proposed that the posts of chief of state and premier be shared by Mr Son Sann and Khieu Samphan, leader of Khmer Rouge government ousted by the Vietnamese in January 1979. The Thai plan has Mr Khieu Samphan as vice premier.

Prince Sihanouk said Democratic Kampuchea (the Khmer Rouge administration), which retains Cambodian seat at the United Nations, appeared opposed to his nomination as head of state and Mr Son Sann as premier. He said they had "differences in points of view and demands" with Mr Son Sann. Yesterday he expressed doubt whether the Khmer Rouge, the principal resistance force with some 25,000 guerrillas, would go for the Thai scheme that would dilute their power. The prince said that the participation of his supporters in the tripartite coalition could be "symbolized" by the nomination of one of his aides, In Tam, as vice premier. As to the possibility of a summit of the three groups in Kuala Lumpur, Prince Sihanouk said that he agreed with Mr Sitthi Sawetsila that it should take place only after the movements reach an agreement.

[Text] According to a 10 May XINHUA news dispatch from Rangoon, Burmese Government authorities announced that in the period between 1977-78 and 1981-82, the number of hospitals in Burma increased from 514 to 614, the number of beds for in-patient care grew by more than 2,300, and 40 new health care centers were set up for women and children.

The Burmese Government has been increasing its expenditures in the health sector and has also worked for the improvement of health conditions in rural areas. The average lifespan of the Burmese people has also increased.

["China Reassures Lebanon of Support in Anti-Israeli Combat" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beirut, May 11 (XINHUA) -- Chinese charge d'affaires ad interim Yang Yihuai today reassured Lebanon of China's consistent support for the government and people of Lebanon in their just struggle to safeguard sovereign and territorial integrity. He reiterated China's strong condemnation of Israeli's aggressive behavior and her deep sympathy with the Lebanese and Palestinian people in their great suffering.

The Chinese diplomat made known this position during a requested meeting with Kesruan Labaki, secretary general of the Lebanese Foreign Ministry, who called the Chinese Government's attention to the Israeli bombing of southern Lebanon on May 9 and wished for cooperative Chinese action in the U.N. Security Council for curbing an escalation in the Israeli aggression.

The appointment was made at a time when a tense atmosphere reigns in southern Lebanon with the Palestine resistance movement being combat ready, classes suspended and factories operating in the night only.

The Executive Committee of the Palestine Liberation Organization was said to have held a joint meeting of guerrilla leaders yesterday, resolving to strike back at any new acts of aggression by Israel. At the same time, the Israeli Cabinet called a four-hour special session Monday at which, Tel Aviv radio reports disclosed, opinions differed. While most Cabinet members were in favor of efforts to "safeguard security on the northern border," some others, however, advocated a so-called firm counterattack against "Palestine provocation."

U.S., USSR SEEK GAINS FROM FALKLANDS CONFLICT

["Round-up: Soviet Union and United States Trade Charges Over Malvinas (Falkland) Islands" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, May 11 (XINHUA correspondent) -- With the continuous escalation and expansion of the Argentine-British conflict over the Malvinas (Falkland) Islands, the two superpowers, the Soviet Union and the United States, are trying more and more to accuse each other of fishing in troubled waters out of selfish aims.

When U.S. President Ronald Reagan declared that both Argentina and Britain "are friends of the United States" and dispatched Secretary of State Alexander Haig on a mediation mission to resolve the dispute soon after the outbreak of the Argentine-British conflict, the Soviet news agency TASS had this to say: "Washington, acting under the cover of an ostensible mediator's mission, is actually playing the role of a 'lobbyist' for British neo-colonialist affairs." The Soviet press revealed at the same time that the British Armed Forces have made an extensive use of the U.S. military bases on the Ascension Island in the South Atlantic as bases for transporting and massing British troops for military actions against Argentina. In addition, U.S. spy satellites have recorded in detail the movements of Argentine troops and relayed the information it obtained to the British Defense Ministry at regular intervals. The PRAVDA said in an article that the "secret military cooperation" between London and Washington has made "the current conflict in the South Atlantic look more heinous."

In mid-April, when Haig proposed to Argentina the creation of a trilateral administration on the Malvinas Islands with U.S. participation, the Soviet mass media pointed out that the United States, in advancing such a proposal, was trying to "hoist the Stars and Stripes" on the Malvinas Islands. The Soviet newspaper SELSKAYA ZHIZN said that once the above-mentioned plan materializes, "the Malvinas Islands will actually fall into the hands of the United States and NATO."

Immediately after the United States stopped its "mediation" efforts and announced sanctions on Argentina, TASS condemned the United States for "trampling underfoot the elementary principles of international law" and "carrying out once again the policy of 'steel fists' against the Third World." Brezhnev said on May 4: "The imperialist nature of Washington's policies toward Latin American countries is once again borne out clearly in the British-Argentine conflict."

The Soviet media stressed that what the United States has done in the Malvinas crisis is aimed at attaining "its selfish political and strategic objectives" and "reinforcing its strategic position in the South Atlantic." During the period, Soviet journals have time and again pointed out "the strategic and economic importance" of the Malvinas Islands. The RED STAR said: "If the Suez Canal or the Panama Canal were closed, they (the Malvinas Islands) would be most vital to many countries." Besides, the paper said, the Malvinas Islands "are abundant with petroleum reserves which, according to statistics, are 13 times the proven deposits at the North Sea." TASS said: "With such a base, one can control the outlet of the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean." "Washington has long been coveting the (Malvinas') strategic position in the Atlantic and the rich oil reserves on the islands," it said.

The United States has also shown an extremely great interest in what the Soviet Union has said and done in regard to the area. AP reported on April 13 that five Soviet warships were cruising in the South Atlantic to provide the Argentines with the information they intercepted. "The Soviets fly reconnaissance missions aboard TU-95 Bear bombers from fields in Guinea and Angola out over the South Atlantic," the dispatch said. Sources said such reconnaissance bombers could observe the movements of the British fleet on its way to the Falklands, it added.

The American newspaper WALL STREET JOURNAL said on April 15: "Barely two hours after Mr. Haig left the (Argentine) Foreign Ministry Saturday (April 10) night, another visitor slipped in to see Foreign Minister Nicanor Costa Mendez. He was Soviet Ambassador Sergey Striganov." "He was eager to know how the talks were progressing," the paper added. As a result, it said, "Argentina declined a Soviet offer of 'military support.'"

A UPI dispatch dated May 3 quoted intelligence sources as saying that the Soviets had launched eight satellites into orbits over the South Atlantic between March 31 and April 28 to monitor military movements in the area. These satellites fell into three categories: photo reconnaissance satellites, communications satellites with listening-in devices and radar signals satellites with listening-in devices. The Soviet move immediately aroused strong reactions from U.S. officials who had warned the Soviet Union more than once not to meddle in the situation around the Malvinas Islands. President Ronald Reagan told U.S. reporters that obviously the Soviet Union had provided Argentina with intelligence about the British fleet sailing for the Malvinas Islands. He hoped that the Soviet Union would "butt out" of the British-Argentine conflict. Presidential Counsellor Edwin Meese warned the Soviets to "stay out of the situation and not do anything that would make it worse." In an interview with the U.S. NEWS & WORLD REPORT on May 3, Secretary of State Alexander Haig stated explicitly that if the United States had "stood aside and failed to assume our historic responsibilities in this situation," East-West overtones (would) develop very rapidly" as the Soviets "successfully fished in troubled waters." U.S. mass media pointed out that the Soviet Union intended to "get a foothold in the strategic South Atlantic" and that it "might acquire naval ports in the South Atlantic, valuable help for their growing fleet."

The reproaches heaped upon each other by the two superpowers serve only to betray their real intentions. The Mexican newspaper EL NATIONAL pointed out that both the United States and the Soviet Union have made great efforts to intervene in the conflict in the southern tip of America. "The two hegemonist countries are trying to seize more power each in their own ways," it said.

COMMENTATOR VIEWS IMPROVING URBAN CONSTRUCTION

[Commentator's article: "We Must Do the Good Things Well"]

[Text] Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, the government has spent much money and devoted much energy to speeding up municipal construction, and a lot of good things have been done for the people in the urban areas. For example, houses have been built, traffic conditions have been improved, the "three wastes" have been properly handled, many trees have been planted in and around cities, and the number of service institutions and networks has been increased. However, the same thing may have different effects in different places. In some places, we can get twice the results with half the effort, while in other places, we get only half the results with twice the effort and are blamed by the masses.

Why can't we do the good things well? There are many reasons. One of the major ones is that we have not paid attention to economic returns and work efficiency. Some good things are being delayed repeatedly. The masses have to suffer a great deal before they can actually get something out of these good things. For example, after tapwater pipes are installed or after roads are repaired, the waste mud is not cleared away and many "imitation hills" are created in and around residential areas. People then must climb slopes on sunny days and struggle through mud on rainy days; this is particularly hard for the aged. Another example is that water and electricity and gas supplies to newly built houses have not been provided for a long time. Since some projects lack overall planning, within a short time they are built and then dismantled and so on. Things like this often remind people of a proverb: "The road to happiness is strewn with setbacks."

In order to have good things progress smoothly, first of all we must solve problems regarding the work style of the leading organs. During the Qing Dynasty, a county official of Pengxi County in Sichuan Province once hung an antithetical couplet outside the government office. The couplet said: "Frankly speaking, I am ashamed that I have done very little to promote what is beneficial to the people; but I have a feeling that there are far too many redundant officials." It was indeed very difficult for the county official to do anything beneficial for the people during his lifetime. Even if some individual officials wanted to do some good things, eventually they could only say, "Frankly speaking, I am ashamed of myself." However, times have changed. Our party is enthusiastic about promoting what is beneficial and eliminating what is harmful for the people. Every party cadre must be worthy of this glorious historical mission and must not become a "redundant official" who accomplishes nothing. Since the major leading cadres of the Chengdu Municipal People's Government have a sense of responsibility, the efficiency of municipal construction is relatively high. The leading cadres take the lead to go down to the grassroots to listen to people's opinions, solve problems and take the lead in setting a good work style. There are leading cadres assigned to the frontline of all large projects to help solve problems. Thus, good things are carried out in a smooth manner without any "setbacks."

At present, since some residents in the urban areas do not have a thorough understanding of the economic situation of our country and do not know that the government has tried its best to improve the standard of living of the masses, they resent municipal construction. Regarding this problem we must carry out ideological and educational work on the masses by listing what has been done. However, it is undeniable that resentment does exist among the masses because feudal practices have hampered the good things. In this regard, we must take only practical actions to improve the work style and raise work efficiency so as to eliminate their resentment.

MA HONG DISCUSSES STRENGTHENING PLANNED ECONOMY

[Article by Ma Hong [7456 3163] excerpted from 20 April ZHONGGUO CAIMAO BAO [CHINA FINANCE AND TRADE JOURNAL]: "Strengthen Planned Economy, Improve Planning"]

[Text] Recently, Comrade Chen Yun has on several occasions talked about strengthening planned economy and put forth the fundamental questions in current economic work. His words are of great significance theoretically and practically. We have achieved enormous results in carrying out the correct policies of opening the door to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy in the past few years. In the future, we will continue to carry out these policies. At the same time, we should see that some new conditions and problems have emerged in the course of implementing these policies. For example, after the enterprises have been given greater power in making decisions and the responsibility systems have been carried out in the countryside, many problems regarding the ways to strengthen planned economy and improve planning need to be studied. At present, a tendency of weakening and even departing from planned economy exists in varying degrees in agricultural and industrial production, capital construction, the spheres of circulation and distribution, and foreign trade. After the downfall of the "gang of four," many of our comrades who were engaged in theoretical research proceeded from the requirments of planned economy and probed into various problems dealing with planning, the market, commodities and value. They achieved results in this connection. However, some of them held the erroneous viewpoint of negating the socialist planned economy. Comrade Chen Yun's talks have provided us with a scientific guiding ideology in analyzing the conditions and correctly handling problems.

The practice of our country's socialist construction shows that in order to uphold the socialist economic system, it is necessary to base planned economy on public ownership. Only when planned economy is put into practice will it be possible to ensure that the national economy will develop harmoniously and proportionately, to raise economic results, to fulfill the requirements of the basic socialist economic laws and to meet the people's material and cultural needs. Upholding planned economy is essentially a major problem concerning whether we can follow the socialist road and adhere to Marxism.

In order to carry out planned economy with better results, the people should be given to understand what planned economy is and to understand that all the activities of the nation should be coordinated like pieces in a chess game. In particular, party members and the cadres should cultivate this understanding and help the people of the whole country cultivate this understanding. A plan is drawn and carried out by man. Only when people understand what planned economy is can they do a good job of planning. Ours is a united socialist country, where unified planning is required for economic construction and all the activities should be coordinated like pieces in a chess game. At present, the leaders of some units cherish ideas of selfish departmentalism and decentralism. This question deserves close attention and must be solved seriously. For example, some comrades confine their scope to partial interests, ignore the interests of the whole, weaken and even depart from the state's unified planning. Shouting the slogan of "enlivening" the economy, some wilfully depart from the path of planning and blindly engage in construction. Others construct economic barriers and interfere with and divide the socialist unified market. These deeds weaken and even disrupt planned economy and run counter to the requirement of coordinating all the activities of the nation like pieces in a chess game. In observing and handling a problem, we must first proceed from the interests of the state as a whole and must not make selfish calculations about our partial and personal interests and disobey the state's unified planning. In drawing up a plan, we may meet questions concerning interests and relationships, such as the relationship between the central and local levels, the relationships between the state, the enterprise and the individual staff or workers, and the relationship between long term and immediate interests.

These questions are very complicated and should be analyzed concretely and handled properly in accordance with the correct principles and by simultaneously taking the interests of all quarters into consideration. To understand planned economy and the coordination of all the activities of the nation like pieces in a chess game is to lay a foundation ideologically for correctly and promptly solving these questions.

To strengthen the planned economy, we must strive to improve planning and make planning more scientific. There were some mistakes and faults in planning for some time in the past. They were caused chiefly by the "left" guiding ideology. They found expression in the blind pursuit of the growth of output value and in the one-sided stress on iron and steel production at the expense of proper proportions and good economic results. Thus, a plan could not be drawn up scientifically and ended in failure in most cases. Some people doubted and even negated the system of planned economy when they saw some defects and mistakes in planning. Undoubtedly this was an incorrect attitude. However, we must face up to the problems and defects in planning, resolutely and vigorously improve planning and heighten the scientific nature of planning. The authoritativeness of planning depends on the scientific nature of planning. Only by continuously heightening the scientific nature of planning will it be possible to fully display the superiority of planned economy. At present, the guiding ideology for developing the economy has been rectified and a series of principles and policies have been laid down and proved to be correct in practice. This imposes higher demands on planning and at the same time creates favorable conditions for heightening the scientific nature of planning. Our planning work continues to improve. It is incorrect for one to take a defect in planning as an excuse to go one's own way and refuse to carry out the state's unified plan.

To heighten the scientific nature of planning, we must work vigorously in many ways under the guidance of the economic theories contained in Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought. At present, we are particularly required to do the following jobs well: First, we must clearly understand the immediate and long-term needs of society, including the needs for production and consumption and the needs for developing the cultural, educational, public health and scientific enterprises. We must set up enterprises by integrating long-term and short-term plans. We must study ways to adopt a "rolling plan" to make the yearly plans and long-term plans dovetail. Second, we must develop production and arrange consumption proportionately according to social needs and establish a rational system for drawing up plans and fixing quotas. Third, we must correctly handle the long-term and immediate interests. Fourth, we must strengthen statistical work and transmission of information and do a good job of economic forecasting. Fifth, we must set up a complete range of systems and methods regarding quota management, statistics, quality inspection, balancing and auditing. Sixth, we must correctly apply quantitative economics, systems engineering and the input-output method and use advanced calculating instruments to work out reference data for drawing up plans. Seventh, in drawing up plans, we must put emphasis on adopting the methods of going from the top downward and from the bottom upward and organize those responsible for planning and economic work, leaders and representatives of staff and workers of various enterprises, representatives of commune members, and scholars to repeatedly discuss the plans, so that the best plans can be drawn up.

Correctly handling the relationship between planned economy and market regulation is an important link in strengthening planned economy and improving planning. Comrades engaged in theoretical work formerly made many suggestions on this question. Some of these suggestions were not very correct. Accepting Comrade Chen Yun's opinion, the CCP Central Committee pointed out in its "Resolution on Certain Questions in the History of Our Party Since the Founding of the People's Republic of China": "It is necessary to have planned economy and at the same time give play to the supplementary role of market regulation on the basis of public ownership. We must strive to promote commodity production and exchange on a socialist basis." This is a scientific thesis on the relationship between planned economy and market regulation.

We should have an overall understanding of this formulation. We should explain systematically and theoretically the reason why there must be planned economy in order to uphold the socialist system. We should make convincing criticism against all viewpoints which weaken and even depart from planned economy. At the same time, it must be noted that by putting emphasis on planned economy now we do not mean that we do not want to give play to the supplementary role of market regulation, and still less do we mean that we should not strive to promote commodity production and exchange on a socialist basis. Such commodity production and exchange on a socialist basis falls within the scope of the socialist planned economy and does not depart from planned economy. After the socialist transformation of the private ownership of the means of production was basically completed in 1956, Comrade Chen Yun said: "Planning is the main body of industrial and agricultural production. Free production conforming to fluctuations in the market and lying within the scope of the state plan is a supplement to planned production." His remarks are still of great significance in guiding us in correctly handling the relationship between planned economy and market regulation.

In short, the national economy as a whole should adhere to the policy of relying mainly on planned economy and supplementing it with market regulation. This is true not only with industry and agriculture but also with other sectors of the national economy. There must be a mandatory plan for the staple products concerning the national economy and the people's livelihood, no matter whether they are industrial products, agricultural products, means of production or means of consumption. Industry is socialized mass production. Under the socialist economic system, there must be a mandatory plan for the staple industrial products which concern the national economy and the people's livelihood. As collectivization has already been achieved in our country's agriculture, the realization of such a plan means, in concrete terms at present, collection of taxes on the state purchase and the assigned purchase quotas of agricultural and sideline products. The mandatory plan must be upheld. Of course, in places where a mandatory plan is unsuitable, there should be a guiding plan for leading socioeconomic activities onto the path of the socialist planned economy.

Attention should be paid to giving play to the supplementary role of market regulation. In drawing up a state plan, whether it is a mandatory plan or a guiding plan, the law of value should be fully considered and applied, economic accounting strictly carried out and economic results raised. Prices, revenues and credits should play the role of an economic lever in controlling the production of goods in excessive supply, developing the production of goods in short supply, promoting the restructuring of industrial enterprises, readjusting the level of profits of enterprises, and encouraging enterprises to improve their management, increase production and profits and raise economic results. At the same time, it is necessary to strengthen the formulation of economic laws and the intervention by administrative decrees and give play to the role of organs dealing with industrial and commerical management, statistics, financing and banking in guiding and supervising the national economy as a whole, so that the economic activities in all localities, departments and units may be developed rationally, fully and without going against the state's unified plan.

[Editorial: "An Important Experiment in the Reform of the Economic System"]

[Text] In order to streamline the administrative structure, improve work efficiency and overcome bureaucratism, the State Council has recently trimmed the original 52 ministries and commissions to 39. The Sixth Ministry of Machine Building is one of those ministries and commissions that has been integrated or abolished. One way of streamlining the administrative structure is to integrate or abolish organs. Another is to convert a government administrative department in charge of industry into an economic entity run along the lines of an enterprise.

The abolition of the Sixth Ministry of Machine Building which is replaced by the China State Shipbuilding Corporation is a major breakthrough in industrial reorganization and integration. It is also an important experiment in the reform of our economic system. Apart from the state shipbuilding corporation, we have also established other industrial entities, such as the automobile industrial company and so forth. The establishment of these industrial entities will help to overcome the defects of "government-run enterprises" by improving economic returns and running enterprises better.

As an important part of the machine building industry, the shipbuilding industry is now one step ahead. The China State Shipbuilding Corporation is chiefly made up of the major shipyards, assembly plants and scientific research and design units. It is an economic organization which will enable us to change the existing administrative management system, break the bonds of different areas and different departments and bring about the unity of rights, responsibilities and interests. The state shipbuilding corporation will combine industry with trading, products for military use with products for civilian use, shipbuilding with ship repairs, and scientific research with production. What was once a government department is now an organization that exercises unified leadership and control at all levels. Such an approach helps to better use economic means to develop production and operation activities and to improve economic returns. It helps in making overall arrangements for various tasks and better servicing consumers. It also helps in the increasing the amount of exports shipped.

After over 30 years of construction efforts, our shipbuilding industry has developed into a relatively complete system, from scientific research to design, initial assembling and complete assembling. Apart from carrying out shipbuilding assignments to meet domestic needs, the shipbuilding industry still has the capacity to build oceangoing ships for export. The two oceangoing cargo ships of 27,000 tons each, exported by the Dalian shipyard in the first quarter of this year, were praised for their quality in shipping and shipbuilding circles abroad. This shows that the ships built in our country are of high quality and can be put on the international market. But irrational phenomena have existed in the administrative system. Departments work independently and control is exercised on a scattered basis, causing overlapping production or construction and bringing about an irrational situation in which projects both "big and complete" and "small and complete" are being sought in all the shipyards. Difficulties are also encountered as far as products for export are concerned. After careful consideration, the party Central Committee and the State Council have held that to solve these problems, the machine building industry must carry out reorganization and integration based on different operations. The production departments and the user departments must establish a system of contracts and business orders between them. The management system must be reformed. In a word, we must follow the road of integration. Of course, this reform cannot be completed in one stroke. It must proceed in a systematic manner. We must keep accumulating experiences. It will take some time to carry this reform to its conclusion.

Communications and transportation are the weak link in the national economy, whereas land and water transportation is the weak link in communications and transportation. We need a large number of boats and ships to extensively develop land and water transportation. Therefore, the shipbuilding industry in China has wide prospects. The natural conditions of our country's inland water transportation and coastal navigation are favorable. The extensive work of offshore oil exploration and exploitation will start soon. Manufacturing various facilities for exploiting offshore oil is also an important task of our shipbuilding industry.

To ensure that the shipbuilding industry will effectively meet the needs of economic development, the state shipbuilding corporation will employ new technology and skills and use new materials to accomplish the central task of enhancing economic returns. It should carry out guided and systematic technical reforms, renew equipment, organize cooperation in specialized production, enhance capability for manufacturing ships and boats, raise the technical and management levels of the shipbuilding industry and manufacture more and more China-built complete sets of facilities.

At present, we still import a number of complete sets of component parts to build ships and boats for export. We should gradually promote the production of Chinese-built component parts.

The state shipbuilding corporation should persist in formulating unified plans. It should work out unified plans to deal with matters related to guiding principles and policies, arrangements, important capital construction, technical reforms, important foreign trade and national cooperation in specialized production, and so forth. In accordance with the principle of formulating unified plans and implementing unified policy toward foreign countries, we should encourage competition between companies and enterprises in various localities. They should compete with each other in matters such as quality, deadlines for completing projects, prices and services so as to arouse their enthusiasm and attain greater economic returns.

Various departments of the national economy are an organic whole. The production departments of the shipbuilding industry should serve consumers well, whereas consumers should energetically support the work of the production departments. To meet the needs of national defense, we should attach prime importance to the production of military goods. To ensure normal navigation, we should also place ship-repair business in an important position. We should implement an economic contract system in the production of military and civilian shipbuilding and ship-repair business.

The state shipbuilding corporation should stick to the principle of self-reliance by emphasizing domestic production. At the same time, it should import advanced technology, necessary facilities and materials to ensure that those exported sips and boats will be up to international navigational standards. Many countries have implemented policies beneficial to protecting and supporting their own shipbuilding industry. While pursuing an open-door policy, we should also implement policies which will support our national inudstry, including our shipbuilding industry.

The fact that our shipbuilding industry has broken the barriers between regions and departments and taken the road of integration and reform is a great change in the management systems and methods. People's ideological understanding and work methods should be suited to such great changes. Establishing the China State Shipbuilding Corporation is a new thing. Due to the fact that we are still lacking experience, problems of this or that kind will inevitably occur and we will encounter various difficulties. The state, departments and localities concerned should support and help the shipbuilding industry so that it will be continuously improve and develop. We should expect that the broad masses of staff and workers of the shipbuilding industry will go all out to work hard, constantly raise their production management level and enhance economic returns so that beneficial experience will be gained in the reform of our economic system.

OW081241 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1150 GMT 7 May 82

[Excerpts] Beijing, 7 May (XINHUA) -- The China Automotive Industry Corporation was declared established in Beijing on 7 May. This is the second transdepartmental and transregional specialized corporation set up after the China Shipbuilding Industry Corporation. State Councillor Bo Yibo spoke at the first session of the board of directors which concluded on 7 May. He said the establishment of the China Automotive Industry Corporation is another important breakthrough in restructuring our country's economic system and it is a happy event.

The China Automotive Industry Corporation will take economic measures to administer China's automotive industry. At present, there are some 140 associated companies, plants and scientific research and information units under the corporation.

The establishment of the corporation will help change step by step the former backward production system in China's automotive industry with production duplicated at small and poorly equipped plants set up in various places; help restructure and reorganize these plants in accordance with the needs of coordination among specialized departments; help promote updating of products and technical renovations at enterprises; and thereby promote the healthy development of the automotive industry.

Rao Bin was elected president of the board of directors of the corporation at the board's first meeting. Two consultative organs, including a technical committee and a financial committee, will be set up under the board of directors. The general manager of the corporation will be responsible to the board of directors. The general manager has the right to direct production and management. Each term of office of the general manager will be 3 years. With the approval of the board of directors, Li Gang was assigned as the first general manager.

Associated companies will be set up to manufacture a series of products of one category and each will have one motor vehicle plant as the backbone, while a number of local small motor vehicle plants will be organized to promote production through coordination of specialized functions. Two associated motor vehicle companies have been set up under the corporation. One is the Dongfeng Associated Motor Vehicle Manufacturing Company with the No 2 motor vehicle plant that used to manufacture "Dongfeng" trucks as the backbone; the other is the Nanjing Associated Motor Vehicle Manufacturing Company with the Nanjing motor vehicle plant that used to produce "Leap Forward" vehicles as the backbone. Preparations are underway to set up the "Liberation" Associated Motor Vehicle Company, the Heavy-Duty Trucks Associated Company, the Bejing-Tianjin-Hebei Associated Motor Vehicle Company, the Shanghai Tractor and Motor Vehicle Company and an associated company to produce accessories and spare parts.

TAX ON REVENUE FROM FOREIGN SHIPS ANNOUNCED

OW112243 Beijing XINHUA in English 0701 GMT 10 May 82

[Text] Beijing, May 10 (XINHUA) -- The Ministry of Finance of the People's Republic of China has announced that, according to provisions of China's income tax law concerning foreign enterprises and detailed rules and regulations for its implementation, five percent of the total revenue of each foreign ship from freight and passenger transport shippings in Chinese ports will be considered taxable income, XINHUA learned here today.

For a foreign ship producing renvenue of less than five million yuan (renminbi) in each shipment, the total tax burden will be 4.025 percent of the total revenue. This includes one percent for income tax, 0.5 percent for local income tax, 2.5 percent for consolidated industry and commercial tax plus 0.025 percent for local surtax.

The announcement says that according to article 14 of the foreign enterprise income tax law, in the event that the income tax and the local income tax are not paid within the prescribed time limit, a fine of 0.5 percent of the overdue tax payment will be imposed on a daily basis.

The original "regulations for taxation on the transportation incomes of vessels of foreign nationalities," promulgated on June 21, 1974 will remain in force as far as tax declaration, reduction and exemption and the handling of defaults are concerned, the announcement says.

The announcement was issued on April 30.

ECONOMIC JOURNAL NOTES BIG RETAIL TRADE INCREASE

OW120108 Beijing XINHUA in English 1221 GMT 11 May 82

[Text] Beijing, May 11 (XINHUA) -- The total number of retail shops, restaurants, snack shops, and other shops belonging to the service trades in China has increased by 150 percent in the past three years, but more such services are needed to meet the growing demand, according to the recent issue of the ECONOMIC INFORMATION. By the end of 1981, there were 3.29 million shops in China, run by the state, collective units and by self-employed persons. These services have a total of 16.24 million workers, 73 percent more than in 1978.

The increase helps enliven the market, convenience the people and boost the economy in addition to providing more employment, the paper said.

The number of peasant markets in the cities and countryside rose to 43,000 in 1981, 29.3 percent over 1978.

The difficulty urban residents have experienced in the past in buying things, eating out, having haircuts and repairing things has been relieved, as 70 percent of the new shops were opened in residential quarters in the past three years, the paper said.

By the end of 1981, there were an average of 35.4 retail shops for every 10,000 urban dwellers, compared with 16.2 in 1978, and every 10,000 peasants had an average of 16.7 as against 9.7.

The average number of restaurants and snack shops for every 10,000 urban residents rose from 4.2 in 1978 to 12 in 1981, while those for 10,000 peasants increased from 0.6 to 3.1.

Commerce and catering and service trades run by collective units and self-employed persons grew faster than those run by the state, the paper said.

The workforce in shops run by collective units rose from 32.8 percent of the total in 1978 to 37.1 percent in 1981, while that in the state shops dropped from 62.8 percent to 47 percent. Of the total workforce, the self-employed shot up from 4.4 percent to 15.8 percent.

Even so, the paper noted, the workforce engaged in commerce and catering and service trades was only 1.6 percent of China's total population at the end of 1981. This demonstrates that shops and workers in these trades still fall short of the needs of the people, the growth of the national economy and the rise in people's purchasing power. Therefore, the paper said, efforts must continue in the current economic readjustment to expand commerce and catering and service trades. The rational distribution of shops must be ensured and more workers should be employed, the paper said.

SMALL FERTILIZER PLANTS BEGIN TO SHOW PROFIT

OW082154 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0015 GMT 8 May 82

[Excerpts] Hohhot, 8 May (XINHUA) -- China's small nitrogenous fertilizer industry earned a net profit of 9.29 million yuan in the first quarter of this year. This is the first time the entire industry has shown a profit, ending 17 years of continuous losses.

At present, there are more than 1,300 small nitrogenous fertilizer enterprises operating in our country. In 1981, their synthetic ammonia output accounted for more than one half of the country's total output and thus occupied a decisive position in the country's chemical fertilizer industry. However, many plants were long on difficulties and suffered heavy losses due to such problems as confusion in management and administration, high consumption, losses and waste and so on. Since the 3d plenary session of the 11th party Central Committee, in order to solve the problem of failing small nitrogenous fertilizer plants as quickly as possible, the Ministry of Chemical Industry closed down and suspended production at 250 small nitrogenous fertilizer plants and concentrated efforts on reorganizing and upgrading the remaining production enterprises.

By 1981, small nitrogenous fertilizer plants in the country that showed a profit increased to 610, and failing plants decreased to 705. The industry's net loss decreased from 970 million yuan in 1976 to 39 million yuan in 1981. Shanghai, Sichuan, Beijing Jiangsu, Hunan, Zhejiang, Anhui, Shandong, Liaoning, Hebei and Nei Monggol each showed an overall profit. Every small nitrogenous fertilizer plant in Shanghai and Beijing made a profit.

To solve the problems of some provinces and autonomous regions where small nitrogenous fertilizer plants still were rather high in consumption and suffering rather serious losses, the Ministry of Chemical Industry held a national on-the-spot meeting in Hohhot, Nei Monggol, in late April for small nitrogenous fertilizer plants to end losses and increase profits. The meeting called on all localities to continue to pay attention to readjusting and reorganizing small nitrogenous fertilizer plants, and called for small nitrogenous fertilizer plants to actively develop technical cooperation, strengthen technical training of workers and staff members, further reduce coal and power consumption and strive hard to achieve the goal of showing an overall profit in 1982.

ECONOMIC BODY SETS UP QUALITY CONTROL BUREAU

HK120738 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0728 GMT 11 May 82

[Text] Beijing, 11 May (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- This reporter has received some information from the State Economic Commission: With the approval of the State Council, the State Economic Commission, which recently underwent a reform and a reshuffle, has set up a quality control bureau. This is China's first quality control organization in the last 30 years and more.

Under the current domestic situation in which the country is streamlining its organizations, the establishment of the quality control bureau within the State Economic Commission, which is responsible for the state's economic work, shows that the state attaches importance to quality control and assigns quality control a firmly important position.

The quality control bureau will be engaged in strengthening the state's leadership over the quality control work in enterprises, in meeting the increasingly high demands for quality in state construction work, people's livelihood and the export trade, and in promoting the concrete benefits of state economic construction.

There are three sections within the bureau which will be in charge of the following tasks: drafting the guiding principles, policies and regulations regarding product quality, the quality of construction projects, the quality of communications and transportation, and the quality of postal, telecommunications and commercial services; participating in the formulation of plans for improving quality, increasing the varieties of products and improving services; organizing the promotion of overall quality controls and organizing a concrete way public appraisals of high-quality products, high-quality projects and advanced enterprises in promoting quality control; putting forth measures for improving quality; organizing the training of quality control personnel; and handling major problems in quality.

A responsibile person of the Chinese quality control organization said that through practice, China will gradually form an integrated and Chinese socialist type of overall quality control system. According the historical records, China was one of the first countries to carry out quality control work. According to historical documents, China had a system for testing the quality of weapons made of bronze such as swords and spears about 2,400 years ago. Following the establishment of new China, the importance of improving quality has been repeatedly stressed in the course of economic development. After emulating foreign experience in quality control and integrating foreign experience with China's concrete conditions, our country has started putting into practice the Chinese overall quality control system. This system demands that we should devote ourselves to the adoption of a most economical method for producing products that give the consumers every satisfaction in regard to both price and quality. This system also demands that as far as possible, we should, with the least amount of consumption, create the greatest use value.

FURTHER ON DRAFT OF REVISED CONSTITUTION

HONGQI Editorial

HK110925 Beijing HONGQI in Chinese No 9, 1 May 82 pp 7-8, 12

[Editorial: "A Major Event in the State's Political Life"]

[Text] The "draft of the revised Constitution of the PRC" has been examined and approved by the national constitutional revision committee, and a resolution has been passed by the 23d Meeting of the 5th NPC Standing Committee for its publication and for its discussion by the people of all nationalities throughout the country. This is major event in the state's political life. We must do a good job of the nationwide discussion of the "draft of the revised constitution."

The "draft of the revised constitution" makes substantial revisions to the current constitution. The current constitution of our country was approved at the First Session of the Fifth NPC in March 1978. At that time, the "gang of four" had been smashed only a short time before and the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee had not been convened. Owing to the limitations of the historical conditions at that time, there was not enough time to make a comprehensive summing-up of the experiences and lessons of the socialist revolution and construction in the 30 years after the founding of the PRC, and there was not enough time to thoroughly eliminate the influence of some "leftist" ideas emerging during the decade of turmoil on the articles of the constitution. Consequently, in the current constitution there are quite a few elements that reflect outdated and erronous political theories and viewpoints and quite a few regulations that do not conform to the practical situation. Although the Second and Third Sessions of the Fifth NPC had made some amendments to one or two articles, no great changes had been made. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee in December 1978, great changes have taken place and major progress has been made in the political, economic and cultural life of our country. The party and state have shifted the focal point of the work, the party has made a new and scientific analysis of the class situation in the country, the state has scored major achievements in building a socialist democratic system and has set forth further demands, and major reforms of the state leading system and the national economic system are being carried out.

The "Resolution on Certain Questions in the History of Our Party Since the Founding of the PRC" approved by the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee in particular has accomplished the task of bringing order out of chaos in the guiding ideology, comprehensively summed up the historical experiences in the socialist revolution and construction and explicitly defined a path and some major points for achieving socialist modernization that are applicable to the situation in our country. All this was not and could not have been reflected in the current constitution. Moreover, as a fundamental law of the state, many of the articles and stipulations in the current constitution are also not complete, well-knit, specific and explicit. In brief, the constitution approved in 1978 does not keep abreast of the political, economic and cultural reality of our country or suit the needs of the modernization drive of our country. In September 1980, at the suggestion of the CCP Central Committee, the Third Session of the Fifth NPC passed a resolution on setting up a constitutional revision committee to take charge of the work of revising the current constituion. In the past year and more, under the solicitude and leadership of the CCP Central Committee, the constitutional revision committee and its secretariat, acting on the principles that "the leadership should integrate itself with the masses" and that "the experiences of our own country should be integrated with international ones" and proceeding from the fundamental interests of the people of the whole country, have carried out extensive investigations and studies to collect opinions from various quarters. After repeated deliberations and discussions, they have set forth the "draft of the revised constitution" for discussion. After examining and revising the draft for discussion chapter by chapter and article by article, the NPC Standing Committee passed a resolution for its publication. After extensive discussions by the people of the whole country and further revisions, it will be submitted to the Fifth Session of the NPC to be held this year for examination and official approval. Revising the constitution is a very serious and earnest job. It is a project of far-reaching significance in building our country politically during the new historical period.

Of the three constitutions we had before, the one approved by the First Session of the First NPC in September 1954 was a fairly good and consummate one. At that time, under the leadership of the CCP Central Committee and Comrade Mao Zedong, the work of drawing up the constitution was carried out in a very serious and solemn manner. It was during the "Great Cultural Revolution" that the constitution was practically annulled. The next two constitutions reflected in different degrees the abnormal situation in the state's life, but they were very imperfect. However, in 1954, when the work of socialist transformation had just started, it was naturally impossible for a constitution that came into being at that time to reflect the situation of the state after the completion of the socialist transformation. The current "draft of the revised constitution" has retained many of the stipulations of the 1954 constitution that are still applicable today. At the same time, in the light of the great changes in the situation of the country since then and under the guidance of the "Resolution on Certain Questions in the History of Our Party Since the Founding of the PRC," it has paid full attention to summing up the great achievements and basic experiences of the socialist revolution and construction in our country in the past three decades and added many new stipulations. The "draft of the revised constitution" has summed up the fundamental experiences in our history in the past 100 years and more, particularly since the beginning of this century, and recorded the achievements of the people of the whole country in their protracted struggle in the course of the new democratic revolution, the socialist revolution and socialist construction. The draft takes as its general guiding ideology the upholding of the four basic principles and, in the form of a fundamental law, defines the fundamental task of the people of the whole country as the building of our country into a modernized state with a high degree of democracy and civilization. It has also showed clearly the domestic guarantee and the international conditions for accomplishing this task -- strengthening the unity of all nationalities throughout the country and the unification of the country at home and, in international affairs, upholding the correct foreign policy, strengthening mutual support with the peoples of various countries, safeguarding world peace and promoting the progressive cause of mankind.

Acting on historical experiences and proceeding from reality, the draft has defined fairly completely the fundamental political and economic systems of the state and the principles for developing culture and building spiritual civilization and enriched the contents of the fundamental rights and duties of citizens. In accordance with the principle of democratic centralism and the needs of the new historical period, the draft pays attention to strengthening the building of state organs and makes some important new stipulations on state organization. In brief, the "draft of the revised constitution" has been revised and drawn up under a correct guiding principle after our party had accomplished the task of bringing order out of chaos in the guiding ideology. It has absorbed quite amply historical experiences and lessons and has recorded quite amply the great progress our country has made in various aspects and the orientation of reforms since the third plenary session of the party. It is therefore a fairly consummate and well-considered draft.

As a result of the efforts of the people of the whole country in the past few years, the various aspects of the country have now been restored to normal and have become stable, and the long-term objective of struggle has also been made clear. After being extensively discussed by the people of the whole country, who will sum up their ideas and make further amendments, and after being examined and approved by the NPC, the draft will become the fundamental law of our country during the new historical period. It will be a stable and solemn fundamental law that will function over a very long historical period. It will play a far-reaching and important role in ensuring the long-term stability of our country, in building and improving our socialist political, economic and cultural systems, in ensuring the consolidation of the state and the democratic rights of the people, in achieving the institutionalization of socialist democracy and in building the socialist legal system. Owing to changes in the actual situation, it will perhaps be necessary to make some amendments in the future, but it will only be amendments or supplements to individual articles. The more prudent and careful we are in revising the constitution now, the more likely we are to have a constitution of long-term stability.

It is precisely for this reason that the current discussion of the "draft of the revised constitution" by the whole people is of very great significance. First of all, discussion by the whole people will make the new constitution more complete. A constitution gives expression to the will of the people of the whole country. The revision of the constitution should not be done by a small number of people and it is imperative to sum up correct ideas on the basis of a high degree of democracy. When the people of all nationalities, all localities and all strata throughout the country are engaged in extensive and fully democratic discussions, drawing on collective wisdom and absorbing all useful ideas, the constitution will be in a better position to reflect the conditions of the whole country and the will and aspirations of the entire people. Secondly, the discussion of the "draft of the revised constitution" by the whole people is also a nationwide study or self-education in the fundamental law of the state. Owing to the fact that socialist democracy and the legal system in our country are still incomplete and that, over a considerably long period of time in the past, the constitution has been cast aside or has been incomplete, with the result that no attention has been paid to it, there is quite an extensive lack of knowledge and sense of a constitutional and legal system among the people of our country. It is necessary, by means of discussion by the whole people, to raise the understanding of the cadres at various levels and the broad masses on the status and function of the constitution in the state's life and raise their consciousness in abiding by and defending the honor of the consitution. The discussion of the constitution by the whole people serves as a school for the cadres at various levels and the broad masses to study and grasp the basic spirit and main content of the constitution. It is necessary, by means of discussion by the whole people, to raise the understanding of the cadres at various levels and the broad masses on the four basic principles and the fundamental tasks of the people of the whole country in the future, on our socialist political, economic and cultural systems and the major principles of the state and on the fundamental rights and duties of citizens, and make clear the relationship between an individual citizen and the state as well as his due responsibility and duties to the state and society.

Finally, the discussion by the whole people is in itself a study and training by the entire people in correctly exercising their democratic rights and promoting their democratic life. In building socialist democracy, it is necessary, on the one hand, to institute and improve the various democratic systems. On the other hand, it is necessary to demand that the numerous cadres and the broad masses learn to correctly exercise their democratic rights and respect the democratic rights of other people and that they cultivate the habits of democratic life. The accomplishment of this point is a long-term process of study and training. It is stipulated in the "draft of the revised constitution" that the people have the right "to manage state affairs, manage economic and cultural undertakings and manage social affairs through various channels and forms." The fact that it will take the people of the whole country several months to discuss the fundamental law of the state fully reflects the socialist democratic nature of our country. It is at the same time an opportunity for the people to learn to manage state affairs. Through their concern for and discussions of the "draft of the revised constitution" the broad masses will be able to raise their sense of responsibility as masters of the country, learn to manage state affairs and cultivate the habits of democratic life.

In brief, doing a good job of discussing the "draft of the revised constitution" is of long-term and great significance to our country. We should attach great importance to this work and, under the leadership of the party, take an active part in the nationwide discussion and revise and draw up the fundamental law of our country together.

Jurist Zhang Youyu Interviewed

OW111243 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0142 GMT 11 May 82

[Text] Beijing, 11 May (XINHUA) -- Jurist Zhang Youyu, vice president of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences, recently gave an interview to a XINHUA reporter. He pointed out: "The draft of the revised constitution of the People's Republic of China," which the Standing Committee of the 5th National People's Congress decided to make public for discussion by the people of the whole country at its 23d session, is a draft socialist constitution proceeding from actual conditions and conforming to China's national situation. Its basic principle is in complete accord with the fundamental interest of the Chinese people.

The text of Zhang Youyu's replies to a XINHUA reporter's questions read as follows:

Question: What are the special characteristics of the draft of the revised constitution?

Answer: I have taken part in the work of revising the constitution, I am convinced that the draft of the revised constitution adheres to socialism, the people's democratic dictatorship, Marxism-Leninism, and Mao Zedong Thought [ma li zhu yi, mao ze dong si xiang 7456 0441 0031 5030, 3029 3419 2639 1835 1927] and the leadership of the Chinese Communist Party. On the basis of four fundamental principles, it stipulates the fundamental tasks for the Chinese people in the future. The draft socialist constitution guides the people of the whole country in promoting socialist modernization with concerted efforts and serves the interest of the overwhelming majority of the Chinese people.

Specifically speaking, the draft of the revised constitution has three distinguishing features: First, it has summarized the more than 30 years' experience of our country in socialist revolution and construction; second, it conforms to the present actual situation of our country; and third, it takes the future development of our country into consideration. These three distinguished features will guarantee the permanent and stable nature of the constitution when the draft of the revised constitution is revised again according to the opinions collected from the national discussions and approved by the Fifth Session of the Fifth National People's Congress.

The draft of the revised constitution was written after summarizing both positive and negative experiences in the more than 30 years since the founding of the People's Republic of China and consulting the three previous constitutions. It has been 28 years since the first constitution of our country was drawn up in 1954. Prior to that time, there was a "common program." Our practical experiences in revolution and construction during these years were quite abundant, including the lessons we learned during the 10 years of internal disorder. Under the guidance of the "Resolution on Certain Questions in the History of Our Party Since the Founding of the People's Republic of China" adopted by the CCP Central Committee, the draft of the revised constitution has embodied these lessons in various articles. For example, in light of the fact that during the period of the "Great Cultural Revolution" some people used the freedom and rights of citizens to impede other's freedom and rights, the draft of the revised constitution has prescribed the following in its articles: First, the draft stipulates: "The rights of citizens are inseparable from their duties. Every citizen enjoys the right prescribed by the constitution and the law, and at the same time has the duty to abide by the constitution and the law." Second, the draft stipulates: "When exercising their freedoms and rights, citizens must not infringe upon the interests of the state, of society and of the collective, or upon the lawful freedom and rights of other citizens."

Many stipulations of the draft of the revised constitution are policies and measures which have been implemented since the emphasis of the work of the whole country was shifted toward building the four modernizations and have been proven to be effective through practice. Therefore, the draft of the revised constitution completely conforms to the present, actual situation of our country. For instance, the "General Principles" stipulates: "The individual economy of urban and rural working people, within the limits prescribed by law, complements the socialist sector of the economy owned by the public. The state protects the lawful rights and interests of the individual economy." "The People's Republic of China permits foreign enterprises, other foreign economic organizations or foreign individuals to invest in China or to undertake various forms of economic cooperation with Chinese enterprises or other Chinese economic organizations." "The state enterprises enjoy powers of decision in management, within the limits specified by law, on the condition that they submit to the unified leadership of the state and comprehensively fulfill their obligations under the state plans." "Units of the collective economy have powers of decision in conducting independent economic activities, on the condition that they accept the guidance of the state plans and abide by the relevant laws." With these stipulations, the draft of the revised constitution clearly shows the special features of our age. In the words of a man of letters, it strongly reflects the spirit of the times.

Taking future developments into consideration, the revised draft constitution has set stipulations concerning matters that are anticipated, programs that are needed soon or in the future, and projects that have been partially completed but still require more efforts, with a view to preparing conditions for the total fulfillment of these programs or projects in the future. For instance, the article in the "General Principles" that requires making primary education universal and the article in the "Fundamental Rights and Obligations of Citizens" which stipulates that the state explores various avenues to provide work for the people belong to this category. Although these stipulations have not yet been implemented or are only partially implemented, the state, from a long-term point of view, will eventually implement all of them. Currently, efforts are being made toward their implementation. In short, although our constitution cannot provide stipulations for plans that cannot be fulfilled, it must set stipulations for matters that can be anticipated and projects that are needed and can be completed. Only thus can the people set goals for their hard work and the constitution become perfect.

Question: What power of the NPC Standing Committee has been expanded by the revised draft constitution and what is the aim of this power's expansion?

Answer: Our country has over 1 billion people and more than 2,000 counties. Thus, if the number of NPC deputies is too small, they cannot adequately represent and frequently contact the masses. However, having too many NPC deputies also has shortcomings: First, they make discussions of issues cumbersome. At a time when the state needs to enact a great number of laws, it would become particularly difficult to do so when all laws must be discussed at the National People's Congress. We considered a number of ways to address this problem; however, the alternatives also had both advantages and disadvantages. For instance, we considered reducing the number of deputies. But, to make the deputies' representation wide-ranging, a small number of deputies cannot do the job. How many deputies are really needed? How should they be elected? How large an electorate is required to elect one deputy? How do the deputies contact the units or districts from which they are elected? All these problems are very hard to solve.

Based on the considerations mentioned above and in order to enable the NPC Standing Committee to do more work and play a still larger role in eliminating the NPC's inconveniences in discussing issues due to its large number of deputies and short meeting period, the revised draft constitution has appropriately expanded the power of the NPC Standing Committee. In the past, the NPC Standing Committee could only enact decrees, not laws. Moreover, only when authorized by the National People's Congress could the NPC Standing Committee make amendments or supplements to laws at the closing of the National People's Congress when there were laws that urgently required amendments or supplements. However, the current stipulations are different from those in the past. They make the National People's Congress share a portion of its legislative power with the NPC Standing Committee. In exercising their legislative power, the NPC and the NPC Standing Committee are essentially on the same footing, but they differ in areas of legislation. The NPC's legislative power encompasses the revision of the constitution and the formulation and revision of criminal, civil, state organs and other basic laws, while the NPC Standing Committee formulates and revises laws other than those to be formulated or revised by the NPC. In addition, the NPC Standing Committee can also make partial amendments or supplements to the basic laws formulated by the NPC. Moreover, according to stipulations in the revised draft constitution, the NPC Standing Committee has other authorities such as deciding on the appointment or removal of ministers of the various ministries, chairmen of the various commissions, the chief auditor and the secretary general of the State Council based on the nominations of the premier of the State Council at the closing of the National People's Congress; deciding on a national general mobilization or local mobilizations; and deciding on the enforcement of martial law in the entire nation or individual provinces, autonomous regions or municipalities directly under the central government, and other matters.

It can be seen from the above provisions that the functions and powers of the NPC Standing Committee are expanded and smaller only than those of the National People's Congress itself. The NPC Standing Committee is similar to parliaments in foreign countries that carry on work continuously. Will this hinder the exercise of rights by the people through the people's congress?

Our answer to this question is that this will not hinder but actually guarantee the exercise of rights by the people. The reason is very simple: The NPC Standing Committee is part of the National People's Congress and its permanent organ, and it adopts resolutions and deals with matters on the basis of extensive democracy and in the basic interests of the people throughout the country, just as the National People's Congress.

Two points should also be made clear here:

1. The draft of the revised constitution stipulates: Members of the NPC Standing Committee shall not hold posts in organs of state administration and the judicial and procuratorial organs. In other words, most of the Standing Committee members will perform a full-time job. This important stipulation shows that the Standing Committee is strengthened. Without other work to handle, Standing Committee members will be able to carry out investigation and study in various localities or to concentrate on the examination and discussion of matters within their functions and powers.

2. The draft of the revised consitutition stipulates that the NPC Standing Committee shall have special committees. When the National People's Congress is not in session, these special committees can assist the NPC Standing Committee in carrying out investigation and study and in examining and putting forward plans so that the NPC Standing Committee will be able to perform its work more effectively.

To summarize the above, we hold that expanding the powers of the NPC Standing Committee is not only necessary in practice but tenable theoretically. The provisions of the draft of the revised constitution are an important development in perfecting the system of people's congresses in our country in this regard.

Question: Why should the draft of the revised constitution be published for discussion by the people throughout the country?

Answer: Let us first review the discussion on the draft of the 1954 constitution. That discussion lasted 3 months from the publication of the draft to the conclusion of the discussion. According to statistics compiled by 29 provinces and municipalities at that time, more than 7.39 million lecturers, propagandists and mass activists made reports and delivered lectures on the draft of the 1954 constitution to large numbers of people attending millions of public lectures and other meetings held in urban and rural areas. In many areas, those attending the public lectures and participating in the discussion accounted for 70 percent of the areas' populations; in some individual cities and areas, those attending the public lectures and participating in the discussion constituted over 90 percent of the cities or areas' populations. Through these discussions, people throughout the country put forward 1.18 million amendments, supplementary suggestions and questions.

Why is it necessary to hold such a large-scale discussion? I think it is mainly for three reasons:

1. Discussion by the people throughout the country is a way or means for the people to administer state affairs. The constitution is the fundamental law of the state which has a bearing on the nature, future and destiny of the state. The revision of the constitution is a major event in the political life of the people throughout the country. In accordance with past constitutions and the present draft of the revised constitution, all power in the PRC belongs to the people. Therefore, the people are entitled to and should participate in the revision of the constitution and, through the discussion on the draft of the revised constitution, exercise their rights as masters of the country.

2. Through discussion by the people throughout the country, it will be possible to ensure the perfection of the constitution. Of the three constitutions our country formulated in the past, the 1954 constitution was relatively flawless. This is why many articles of the 1954 constitution have been incorporated into the present draft of the revised constitution. As for the 1975 and 1978 constitutions, they, restricted by the historical conditions of the time, were rather imperfect. The 1954 constitution was relatively flawless mainly because it was discussed by the people throughout the country and pooled the wisdom of the masses, in addition to the historical conditions of the time, when it was drawn up. Dealing with why that constitution won popular support, Comrade Mao Zedong said on 14 June 1954: One reason is that in drafting it we adopted the method of integrating the ideas of the leading body with those of the masses.

3. Discussion by the people throughout the country is also a widespread education on socialist legality. Through the discussion, people will be able to understand the fundamental law of the state, the nature of (?the state), our objective of struggle, the basic rights and duties of the people, and so on and so forth. This will lay a foundation for the implementation of the constitution after its promulgation and enable the people to conscientiously adopt the concept of abiding by the constitution.

Banqen Comments

[Text] Beijing, May 7 (XINHUA) -- "The draft of the revised constitution reflects the aspiration of the people of various nationalities for strengthening national unity and bringing about the reunification of the motherland," Banqen Erdini Qoigyi Gyancan, a religious leader and vice-chairman of the National People's Congress Standing Committee, told XINHUA here today.

China's revised constitution has been under nationwide discussion since last month. Banqen said: "All citizens should take an active part in the discussion and offer their suggestions because it concerns not only the future and destiny of the whole nation but also personal interests of each citizen. It is a great event for the Chinese people to participate in administering the state affairs and exercise their political right."

Banqen commended article 4, which reads: "All nationalities in the People's Republic of China are equal," a basic constitutional guarantee enhancing national unity and realizing the reunification of the country. He said: "China is a multi-national country. History shows that national suppression is the root cause for national split. The draft has made it clear that the relationship between various nationalities in our socialist society is one of equality, unity and mutual help. It conforms to reality and the objective requirement for development." Banqen said that only when full equality is realized, could real national unity be forged and could we accomplish the historical mission of making our country stronger and more prosperous.

Banqen also expressed his satisfaction with article 35, that all Chinese citizens enjoy freedom of religious belief. He said: "The protection of freedom of religion means the protection of human rights of the believer-citizens." He is of the view that this is conducive to creating a lively political situation, in which the people feel free, a state long advocated by the party, thus helping to mobilize all positive factors to serve socialism.

Religious Leaders Comment

OW101311 Beijing XINHUA in English 1216 GMT 10 May 82

[Text] Beijing, May 10 (XINHUA) -- Provisions on religion contained in article 35 of the draft of the revised constitution are in accord with the wishes of public figures from religious circles and other religious believers, said Zhao Puchu, president of the Buddhist Association of China, and Bishop Fu Tieshan, of the Beijing Catholic Diocese, in separate interviews with XINHUA recently.

He said that the meaning of the provisions on freedom of religious belief enjoyed by Chinese citizens is clear. That is, citizens enjoy the freedom to believe or not to believe religion, and freedom to believe this or that religion. This reflects the Chinese Government's policy on freedom in religious belief, he said.

Zhao Puchu quoted article 46 of China's 1978 constitution, saying: "Citizens enjoy freedom to believe in religion and freedom not to believe religion and to propagate atheism." This provision, he said, does not reflect in an accurate and all-round way China's policy on freedom in religious belief, because it gives people the impression that the emphasis is given to freedom not to believe religion and to propagate atheism.

"This would prevent the policies on religion from being correctly implemented," he said.

As a deputy to the National People's Congress, Zhau Puchu had joined other deputies from religious circles in submitting a motion to the Third Session of the Fifth N.P.C. proposing revision of this article. He said the national constitutional revision committee had accepted their suggestions and also made some supplementary provisions, and that, as a result, religious people are very satisfied with it.

Bishop Fu Tieshan of the Beijing Catholic Diocese said that, in addition to the protection of citizens' freedom of religious belief, the revised constitution also provided clearly that no public organizations or individuals shall compel citizens to believe in religion or disbelieve in religion, nor shall they discriminate against citizens who believe, or do not believe in religion. "As a law, it is comprehensive and fair," the bishop commented.

He said, "Although there are only a small number of people in China [that] -- believe in religion, the constitution has special articles stipulating that the government protects normal religious activities and that citizens who have reached the age of 18, irrespective of their religious belief, have the right to vote and stand for election." The articles showed that all people in our country are equal before law, Bishop Fu said.

Referring to the article which states that "no one may use religion to carry out counter-revolutionary activities or activities that disrupt public order, harm the health of citizens or obstruct the educational system of the state," the bishop said all religious people should fulfill the obligations mentioned and added that he believed that the article would ensure a healthy development of all religions.

"Now some foreign churches are undermining our efforts in running our churches independently in an attempt to control them. The provision in the revised constitution stipulating that no religious affairs may be dominated by any foreign country is a supportive of the desire of Chinese Catholics to run their churches independently," he concluded.

JIANGXI'S BAI DONGCAI ON RESPONSIBILITY SYSTEMS

OW090819 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1149 GMT 8 May 82

[Excerpts] Nanchang, 8 May (XINHUA) -- The Jiangxi Provincial CCP Committee has decided to adopt effective measures to solve problems concerning cadres' awareness and further improve the responsibility systems in agricultural production.

The standing committee of the Jiangxi Provincial CCP Committee recently held a meeting to discuss problems regarding the improvement of the responsibility systems in agricultural production. Those attending the meeting held: In order to perfect the responsibility systems in agricultural production, it is, first of all, necessary to solve some problems concerning the ideas and awareness of the leading cadres at and above the county level.

Bai Dongcai, secretary of the provincial CCP committee, said: As far as the entire process in developing such systems is concerned, the development of the responsibility systems in agricultural production in Jiangxi is healthy and fine. We have scored remarkable achievements in implementing these systems from the beginning to the present time. He pointed out: The most important thing at present is to educate cadres. In particular, the secretaries and standing committee members of the county CCP committees must unify their thinking. At present, there are two main problems concerning the issue of awareness. The first problem is one's awareness regarding responsibility systems in agricultural production, which constitute a change in the countryside. This also means one's understanding of the line, principles and policies laid down since the convocation of the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee. The majority of cadres have solved this problem fairly well. This represents the main trend. However, there are some cadres, including some leading cadres, at and above the county level who are muddle-headed. They have always doubted whether the system of fixing output quotas on a household basis and the system of signing contracts with the production team to complete certain jobs within a specific period of time are socialist or not.

The second problem concerns some cadres' satisfaction with the existing state of affairs. They have failed to see the emerging new problems, or they pay no attention to and care little about such problems.

To solve problems concerning cadres' awareness and do a good job in improving the responsibility systems in agricultural production, the standing committee of the Jiangxi Provincial CCP Committee has adopted the following measures: 1) Efforts must be made to organize cadres at and above the county level to earnestly study the "minutes of the national rural work conference" relayed by the central authorities, the booklet "Several Issues on Further Strenthening and Improving the Responsibility Systems in Agricultural Production" issued by the CCP Central Committee and other documents, and to distinguish right from wrong by integrating theory with practice; 2) various provincial, prefectural and county organs must be determined to send cadres to the countryside, pay attention to typical examples and make use of these examples in guiding the work in the entire area, summarize the experience and further improve the responsibility systems by stages and in groups.

SHANDONG'S BAI RUBING URGES COMBATING DROUGHT

SK100552 Jinan Shandong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 9 May 82

[Excerpts] On the evening of 9 May, the Shandong Provincial CCP Committee and People's Government held a conference by telephone on combating drought and ensuring wheat growth and spring sowing. Comrade Bai Rubing, first secretary of the provincial CCP committee, spoke. He urged party and government leadership at all levels and the vast numbers of cadres and people throughout the province to immediately mobilize themselves, vigorously struggle against the drought and ensure wheat growth and spring sowing. He called for ensuring an ample drinking water supply for people and livestock, striving for a good wheat crop and laying a good foundation for an all-round bumper harvest.

Comrade Bai Rubing said: The drought situation in our province this year is a continuation of droughts in the past 4 or 5 years. This is a serious drought rarely seen in the past in terms of the area affected and the damage done. The drought is worsening, affecting 78 million mu of farmland, of which 28 million mu are seriously affected. This poses a serious threat to wheat growth and spring sowing. In his speech, Comrade Bai Rubing fully confirmed the achievements previously scored in combating drought. He said: Generally, party committees and government at all levels have firmly attended to combating drought and ensuring wheat growth and spring sowing. Party and government organs, the army and the people, especially the vast number of cadres and masses working on the forefront of agriculture, have devoted vigorous efforts to and scored marked achievements in combating drought. However, the worsening of this serious drought and the urgency of the farming season call for us to immediately mobilize ourselves and be more resolute, persistent, resourceful and effective in combating the drought and ensuring wheat growth and spring sowing so as to reap a good harvest of summer grains and an all-round harvest. To achieve this, the provincial CCP committee and people's government put forward the following four demands on party committees and governments at all levels, the army and the people throughout the province:

1. Immediately carry out a comprehensive and thorough ideological mobilization. The provincial CCP committee and the people's government urge leadership at all levels, all trades and professions and provincial-level organs down to prefectural, municipal, county, commune and brigade organs to carry out a successful ideological mobilization for combating drought and ensuring wheat growth and spring sowing. Counties, communes and brigades in rural areas must conduct a conscientious summing-up and investigation to ensure that leadership has a correct understanding and regards the struggle against drought as the overriding task in the countryside; that the cadres are working on the forefront to combat drought; that manpower and material resources are concentrated on combating drought; and that water resources are fully tapped and utilized.

Through the summing-up and investigation, we should affirm the achievements, see where we lag behind and devise effective measures to launch a general mobilization and an all-out attack against the serious drought. We must earnestly solve the problem of ideology and understanding, bring into full play the enthusiasm of cadres and the masses, be determined to surmount all difficulties and exert our utmost efforts to win all-round success in combating drought and ensuring wheat growth and spring sowing.

2. Concentrate all available manpower and financial and material resources on combating drought. Provincial level organs and their subordinate organs at the next two levels should, if possible, transfer personnel and vehicles to rural areas and stay there for 2 weeks or more to support the struggle against drought. Party committees of these organs should pay attention to this work, as should all localities. Trucks and tractors now employed by rural communes and brigades for sideline production must immediately be transferred to combating drought. Highway superintendence departments should assume this task. Industrial and sideline production of communes and brigades should be suspended if they hamper the antidrought struggle in order that there be available more manpower, petroleum and electricity for combating drought. Petroleum, electricity and funds allocated for combating drought must be used strictly for this purpose. Diverting them to other purposes is prohibited. At present, coal supply is strained. All sectors should reserve some coal to support power production. Power departments should strive to generate as much electricity as possible to provide more electricity to combat drought. Coal departments should mobilize staff members and workers to vigorously increase production and transfer all the increased coal output to power departments. Transportation departments should transport the coal to powerplants on a priority basis. Power supply for agricultural use, which was originally scheduled to be reduced, will, in principle, be maintained at the present levels until 20 May. In power supply, priority should be given to antidrought work over industry. At present, localities are relying on themselves and mass efforts to combat the drought. Attention should be paid to mobilizing communes, brigades and the masses to invest in the efforts.

3. Fully tap all available water resources and rationally utilize them. The problem of water resources is crucial to the current struggle against drought. We must mobilize the vast number of cadres and masses to discover water resources in every possible way and to rationally utilize them. Some localities have devised methods such as sinking wells on riverbeds and at the bottom of reservoirs, blocking underground rivers and sinking deep wells. We should continue these efforts. Localities may sum up the masses' experience to look for new water resources in accordance with local conditions. All water resources must be fully utilized. All localities should actively implement a responsibility system for water administration, introduce planned water consumption and adopt the method of charging fees by the mu for irrigated farmland. We must ensure frugal and scientific use of water to expand the area irrigated. We should attach importance to forming complete systems of waterworks and make efficient use of them.

4. Leadership at all levels must go to the forefront to help and guide the antidrought struggle. The provincial CCP committee decided that, except for cadres needed to handle day-to-day work, the remaining comrades should, if possible, all go down to the grassroots level.

Qin Hazhen, secretary of the provincial CCP committee and vice governor, presided over the conference by telephone.

NANFANG RIBAO ON RURAL GRASSROOTS BUILDING

HK071513 Guangzhou NANFANG RIBAO in Chinese 6 May 82 p 1

[Commentator's article: "An Urgent Matter in Strengthening Rural Grassroots Building"]

[Text] The document "the minutes of the national rural work conference," which was transmitted by the CCP Central Committee, says: "The first thing to do in perfecting the production responsibility system is to strengthen the leading groups of communes, production brigades and production teams so that production teams will be able to shoulder their economic and political functions and power." The Guangdong Provincial CCP Committee has recently given instructions to various localities requiring them to earnestly solve the problem of a lax and weak situation and even a paralyzed or semiparalyzed situation in administrative apparatuses and leading groups of some production brigades and production teams where the system of assigning land to each household in exchange for specific levies is implemented. We hope that party and government leading organs at all levels throughout the province will attach great importance to the instructions given by the CCP Central Committee and the provincial CCP committee, resolutely and thoroughly implement them and strive to make achievements as early as possible.

In implementing various forms of the responsibility system in the rural areas of our province, quite a large number of communes and production brigades have implemented the system of assigning land to each household in exchange for specific levies in accordance with the party's policies and the desires of the masses. This has greatly aroused the enthusiasm of the broad masses of peasants. As a result, many localities which were very poor for a long period in the past have now basically solved the problem of food and clothing and have created conditions for doing away with poverty and striving to become rich. This is the essence and main current of things, and must be affirmed. However, we should be fully aware that the implementation of various forms of the production responsibility system is directly related to the readjustment of production relations, and many new problems are bound to emerge. They need timely solutions. In localities where the leading groups of production brigades and production teams are paralyzed or semiparalyzed, the most important thing is to attach importance to grassroots building and to revive and strengthen the leading role of production brigades and production teams under new conditions. This is an important guarantee in further implementing the series of rural economic policies formulated since the third plenary session and in leading the peasants in enlivening the economy under the guidance of the state plan in order to become rich earlier.

However, some comrades think that after implementing the contract system in general, production brigades and production teams do not have many things to do. Therefore, they ignore the paralyzed or semiparalyzed situation of some grassroots leadership. This is an ideological obstacle in strengthening grassroots building. It is high time to thoroughly correct this erroneous view.

It is true that after implementing the system of assigning land to each household in exchange for specific levies, production brigades and production teams no longer have to carry out unified management, unified division of work or unified distribution in the process of production. However, under these new conditions, it is even more necessary to improve work methods and to strengthen collective unified leadership, unified management and coordination work. The load on cadres has not become lighter, but heavier.

After implementing the system of assigning land to each household in exchange for specific levies, production brigades and production teams still retain their economic functions and power as collective economic organizations. They are responsible for rationally allocating and readjusting contracted land and properly managing and utilizing farmland; working out production plans, carrying out capital construction and popularizing new technology; organizing joint economic activities among commune members and between production teams and commune members in accordance with commune members' demands and the need to develop the productive forces; signing and enforcing economic contracts, fulfilling state procurement quotas and reserving funds for collective use, taking care of dependents of martyrs and armymen and making arrangements for the livelihood and production of households that are in difficulty; and so on.

Besides, as the grassroots political power, communes and production brigades also have to properly carry out work in various aspects such as social relief, education, public health work, family planning, militia training, public security and civil mediation in order to safeguard the development of the socialist economy and to guarantee the enforcement of state laws and decrees.

At present, in localities where grassroots organizations are paralyzed or semiparalyzed, production brigade headquarters and production team headquarters have closed their doors. Much of the work there is not handled by anyone. The party's and the government's policies and decrees are not properly implemented. No one guides production. State procurement quotas of agricultural and sideline products and the task of reserving funds for collective use cannot be fulfilled. Ideological and political work has been weakened. A series of problems that emerged after implementing the production responsibility system has not been solved by anyone, and perfecting the production responsibility system has become empty talk. Moreover, since there is no one to exercise the functions and power of grassroots political power in these localities, the work in family planning has slackened, social order is not good and undesirable phenomena such as feudal superstition, gambling, theft and so on are not checked and are gradually spreading.

Obviously, solving the problem of paralyzed and semiparalyzed leading groups of production brigades and production teams in these localities is an urgent matter in strengthening rural grassroots building and the key to perfecting the production responsibility system. Only by solving this problem can we provide necessary prerequisites for perfecting the production responsibility system.

We should not delay solving this problem. We hope that party and government leading organs at all levels will make concrete plans for this. They should organize efficient work teams to work in production brigades and production teams which are paralyzed or semiparalyzed in order to solve the problem within a specified time. As far as work method is concerned, we should first strengthen ideological and political work, strengthen the cadres' faith in the complete correctness of the party's principles and policies for rural areas formulated since the third plenary session and clarify their misunderstandings regarding the production responsibility system so that they will bestir themselves and do their work well. We should give reasonable remuneration to grassroots cadres, and at the same time, we should reduce the staff in order to lighten the burden of the masses. We should perfect the organizational life of party branches throughout the party, carry out criticism and self-criticism and increase party members' fighting capacity so that party branches can truly become cores for uniting with the masses and fighting bastions for leading the masses forward. If we do a good job in grassroots building, we will be able to perfect the production responsibility system on the basis of socialist public ownership and arouse the enthusiasm of the broad masses of cadres and peasants. The rural situation in our province will certainly become better and better with each passing day.

GUIZHOU MEETING URGES ENTERPRISE READJUSTMENTS

HK110911 Guiyang Guizhou Provincial Service in Mandarin 2315 GMT 10 May 82

[Summary] Yesterday evening the provincial people's government held a conference by telephone on industry, communications and production, calling on various units on the industry and communications front to conscientiously carry out enterprise readjustment and the building of material and spiritual civilization, with major emphasis on enhancing economic results so as to score marked achievement in second quarter production. Responsible comrades of the provincial government attended yesterday evening's conference. Provincial Governor Su Gang attended the conference and Vice Governors Li Tinggui and Song Xiaopeng spoke at the conference.

Last April, various units on the industry and communications front exerted major efforts to enhance economic results and overfulfilled monthly production targets and succeeded in changing the situation of incurring losses which occurred in the first quarter. Thus a number of enterprises which have done well in changing the situation of incurring losses have come to the fore.

The conference demanded that various units regard the enhancement of economic results as the starting point and basis for all their economic activities. They should produce marketable products which can meet the needs of the society. Factories, mines and enterprises should do their best to tap their potential. They should greatly increase the production of marketable goods and reduce the production of slow-selling goods. In the meantime, they should firmly grasp the work of readjustment and reorganization and turn to the production of marketable goods. Leaders at all levels should take resolute and effective measures to curb the tendency of some products to decline in quality.

All enterprises should exert major efforts to carry out technical innovation and renovation of their facilities. This is an important measure for enhancing economic results. They should also pay attention to practicing economy, in particular saving energy.

The conference also demanded that various enterprises organize staff members and workers to study "regulations on rewards and penalties for enterprise workers and staff members" issued by the State Council. They should award those who should be awarded and penalize those who should be penalized. They should praise those who are praiseworthy and criticize those who should be criticized. They should take a clear-cut stand to support the advanced and progressive.

The conference urged various units to pay attention to production safety and solve problems arising in this respect. They should take strict measures to deal with accidents which have already occurred. Leading cadres should go right to the front line of production and mobilize the masses to effectively promote safety in production.

GUIZHOU INDUSTRY, COMMUNICATIONS PROFITS -- According to statistics made public on 7 May, the Guizhou provincial industry and communications enterprises boosted their profits by more than 5.7 million yuan in April, following an increase of 2 million yuan in March. After making up for losses in January and February, there is still a surplus of more than 700,000 yuan in profits. This has been achieved as a result of the stress by the CCP committee and people's government since March on changing the guiding ideology in production and improving economic results. RADIO BEIJING URGES PEACEFUL REUNIFICATION

[Radio talk by (Gao Wei)]

[Summary] Some friends have asked: What is the advantage of achieving the reunification of the motherland through peaceful means? I believe that reunification through peaceful means will not put a drain on the material and financial resources of the Chinese people, and that it is conducive to the prosperity and development of the nation. I am sure that you friends, too, share the same point of view.

"If the peace talks proposal is rejected and the issue of Taiwan is solved by other than peaceful means, the interests of the people on both sides of the strait would inevitably be damaged.

"This would, in particular, bring inevitable and tremendous damage to property and cause loss of life among the people in Taiwan. Then, why should we not exert our efforts to avoid such tremendous losses? To achieve reunification through peaceful means and let Taiwan retain its existing economic system is also conducive to further developing ane enlivening Taiwan's economy and to improving the Taiwanese people's living standards after the reunification of the motherland.

"Taiwan is a part of the motherland. To develop and enliven Taiwan's economy is also the firm policy of the government of the motherland. At present, the mainland is also accelerating its economic construction. Therefore, there are no contradictions between us in developing and enlivening our economy."

Socialism prevails on the mainland, while the three people's principles prevail on Taiwan. Can the two different systems be unified when the reunification of the motherland takes place?

"I have to admit that for the past 30 years or more, there truly existed two different social systems on the two sides of the Taiwan Strait. But, in order to prevent the two different social systems from impeding the reunification of the motherland, the government of the motherland has set store by the national interests, and put forward the nine-point proposal for the peaceful reunification of the motherland. It said: After reunification of the nation, Taiwan will enjoy a high degree of autonomy as a special administrative region and it can retain its armed forces. The central government will not interfere with local affairs in Taiwan. Taiwan's current socioeconomic system will remain unchanged; so will its way of life and its economic and cultural relations with foreign countries. There will be no encroachment on the proprietary rights and lawful right of inheritance over private property, houses, land and enterprises, or on foreign investments. All those who are not biased will regard such a proposal as practical and reasonable.

"Many men of insight in Taiwan also pointed out: The CCP has not asked us to abandon the three people's principles. Therefore, it will be impossible to achieve peaceful reunification of the motherland if the Taiwan authorities seek to reunify China with the three people's principles and insist that the mainland abandon communism."

Dr Sun Yat-sen has already provided us with a clear-cut answer on the relations between the three people's principles and communism. In the second chapter of his principle of the people's livelihood, he pointed out: Communism is the good friend of the principle of the people's livelihood. He also told the Kuomintang members: Although Kuomintang members advocate the three people's principles, they should not oppose communism.

Dr Sun Yat-sen also advocated and promoted the first cooperation between the CCP and the Kuomintang. He said: The policy of alliance between the CCP and the Kuomintang and of assistance to peasants and workers is the only way to put the three people's principles into practice. I believe that a review of some of Dr Sun Yat-sen's teachings today will certainly give us some inspiration.

REAGAN LETTERS SAID NEGLECTING TAIWAN INTERESTS

OW111520 Taipei CNA in English 1458 GMT 11 May 82

[Text] Taipei, 11 May (CNA) -- The Government of the Republic of China Tuesday expressed its severe concern over the remarks American Vice President George Bush made in his recent trip to Peiping. The contents of three letters written by U.S. President Ronald Reagan to Communist Chinese leaders have neglected the interests of the ROC, a government spokesman said Tuesday. The sole and only aim of Peiping's "peace offensive," the spokesman said, is to impose communist totalitarianism on 18 million people in Taiwan, the Pescadores, Kinmen and Matsu, which is absolutely unacceptable to the government and people of the Republic of China. The spokesman reiterated that the government's firm position of having no contact with the communist regime has never changed, and will never change under any condition. The spokesman also urged the Reagan administration to fully implement all terms of "the Taiwan Relations Act."

U.S. CONGRESSIONAL DECISION VIEWED AS 'WISE'

OW110631 Taipei CHINA POST in English 8 May 82 p 4

[Editorial: "U.S. Congressional Committees' Wise Decision"]

[Text] The refusal by the committees of both the House of Representatives and Senate to consider Communist China "a friendly nation" as far as U.S. food assistance is concerned shows the true sentiments of the American people, which the U.S. administration should not overlook.

The rejection of the Reagan administration's request for legislation declaring Communist China a friendly nation serves as a rebuff to the U.S. administration's attempt to place Communist China in the category of nations which are entitled to U.S. food assistance. This was first revealed a few weeks ago to reassure Peiping that the Reagan administration would ask the Congress to adopt measures to enable it to get food assistance. The rejection of such a request by both committees of the Senate and the House must have surprised the administration officials in charge of the requests. It shows that the congressional committee members realize the true sentiments of the American people, who consider the people of the Republic of China as their friends, but not the Chinese communists. It serves to reflect clearly the trend of American public opinion not to be overlooked by the Reagan administration in formulating its foreign policy toward the Republic of China and the Peiping regime.

Instead of granting the Reagan administration's request, the Senate Agricultural Committee and the House Foreign Affairs Committee adopted a compromise that calls for non-legislative language to accompany a foreign assistance bill to override a 1966 prohibition against U.S. aid to Communist China under the food-for-peace plan. This was accepted by the administration but agreed to reluctantly by Senator Jesse Helms, Rep.-North Carolina, chairman of the Senate Agricultural Committee, who has continued to label Peiping a dictatorship and criticize its repressive policies. The administration officials, however, conceded that President Ronald Reagan has no immediate plans to set up a food program for Communist China. It is strange logic why the administration should go to the trouble of asking the U.S. Congress to declare Communist China a friendly nation in order to qualify it to receive food assistance, but then only to get a rejection.

WEN WEI PO ON SINO-U.S. RELATIONS, BUSH VISIT

[Editorial: "A Look at Sino-U.S. Relations From the Angle of the Bush Visit to China"]

[Text] George Bush has left Beijing and Sino-U.S. talks are continuing. The Reagan administration's decision to sell arms to Taiwan means a "time bomb" in Sino-U.S. relations. Over the past few months, it seemed that the crisis of a retrogression of Sino-U.S. relations might be triggered at any moment. However, the Bush visit seems to have touched off a relaxed and amicable atmosphere within Sino-U.S. relations and revealed some aspirations for improving bilateral relations.

What is the reason for it? Some variations in Reagan's attitude toward the China issue at both the initial and later stages are faintly visible. In an interview he gave to U.S. NEWS & WORLD REPORT reporters on the eve of his inauguration, Reagan said that the establishment of Sino-U.S. diplomatic relations has not brought about "any major results," that the United States "has paid a price for this" and that "we should not forsake Taiwan -- a friend and an ally for a very long time." The decision on the arms sale to Taiwan was subsequently made on the basis of this thinking. After carefully examining the three letters from Reagan to Chinese leaders, we can see that they demonstrate the faith in and aspirations for Sino-U.S. friendship and for firm adherence to the stand of the "Shanghai communique." The letters not only stress the importance of Sino-U.S. cooperation from the high plane of global strategy, but also reiterate that the "one-China" stand will not permit the unofficial relations with Taiwan to harm this commitment. If we leave aside the issue of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan, this, after all, is a friendly message. By coincidence, this message was conveyed by Vice President Bush, an old friend of China. Conveying this message has temporarily relaxed the tense atmosphere in Sino-U.S. relations.

The major significance of the Bush visit is that it has deepened the mutual understanding, created a relaxed atmosphere for continuing the bilateral talks, engendered some new proposals and left behind some promises. However, please let us not forget that the current basic problem in Sino-U.S. relations is the U.S. arms sale to Taiwan. If we stray from this problem to prattle about the so-called Sino-U.S. strategic cooperation, we are, in the final analysis, attempting an ineffective solution.

When the United States was deliberating the question of arms sale to Taiwan, China repeatedly warned the United States, stressing the strategic significance of jointly resisting the expansion of Soviet hegemonism and admonishing it of the danger of attending to one thing and losing sight of another. However, the Reagan administration did not accept the advice at that time. Now, Reagan has already decided to sell arms to Taiwan and has also energetically started talking about Sino-U.S. strategic cooperation. Is this introspection or empty talk? This kind of change affords food for thought. Does this change mean that without the United States, China can still continue resisting the expansion of Soviet hegemonism; that without China, the United States may have to accept more serious consequences? In other words, does this change mean that the United States wants to use the "strategic cooperation" slogan to play down the Taiwan issue and to tempt China to make a concession?

Reagan's letters also mention the Taiwan issue: Recognition of one China, respect for China's sovereignty and territorial integrity and expectation of a peaceful solution to the Taiwan issue. However, this stand of the Reagan administration still has many ambiguous points and also contradicts its actual behavior.

As long as the United States does not revise or abolish its internal "Taiwan Relations Act" and does not fix a target date for terminating arms sales to Taiwan, the United States is not showing complete respect for China's sovereignty and territorial integrity, is driving a wedge into the peaceful return of Taiwan to the motherland and is still trying to create "two Chinas."

Just because of this, after the delivery of Reagan's letters to Deng Xiaoping and Zhao Ziyang, Beijing's RENMIN RIBAO still used the words "time bomb" as a metaphor. During the Bush visit, Deng Xiaoping still mentioned the "shadows" and "clouds" that envelop Sino-U.S. relations. If the Reagan administration treasures Sino-U.S. strategic cooperation, it should take real action and stop interfering in the internal affairs of China.

PRC, TAIWAN TO MEET IN TENNIS TOURNAMENT

[By Lee Wai-kit]

[Excerpts] The two bitter political rivals, China and Taiwan, will clash head-on for the first time at tennis in Hong Kong. Players from the two countries will compete in the Hong Kong invitational hardcourt tennis championships, which start today at Victoria Park. The other entries for the tournament are from Japan, Indonesia, Singapore, Malaysia, South Korea, Thailand and host Hong Kong.

The Taiwan players will be playing under the name of "Chinese Taipei."

In the draw made yesterday, China's Chen Juan and Taiwan's Ho Chiu-mei have been drawn to play against each other in the first round of the women's singles. Hong Kong's Patricia Hy, a finalist of the women's singles last year, has been seeded first in the event, followed by China's Hu Na and Li Xinyi, who also battled her way to the rain-interrupted final last year.

China's coach Zhang Dalu said yesterday that Chen, runner-up to Hy two years ago, will definitely take to court against Taiwan's Ho Chiu-mei as the tournament is being held in accordance with international rules.

Taiwan's non-playing captain, Mr Frank Wu, declined to comment on their clashes with the players from China. He only said: "On the court, we only play tennis. We don't care about other things."

PROBLEMS IN FUJIAN ANTICORRUPTION STRUGGLE NOTED

HK100423 Hong Kong MING PAO in Chinese 9 May 82 p 6

[Special dispatch from Fuzhou: "Fujian Ineffective in Eliminating Corruption"]

[Text] A few days ago, the Standing Committee of the Fujian Provincial People's Congress decided to extend for a month the deadline for economic criminals to surrender to the police and confess their crimes in exchange for lenient handling. At the same time the Central Discipline Inspection Commission last month sent Deputy Secretary Zhang Yun to carry out an examination in the province. These unusual actions mean that the economic criminal cases in Fujian involve broad sectors and are extremely serious.

Since the issuance of the directive on dealing blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field, the CCP Central Committee has repeatedly emphasized that for those party cadres whose criminal involvement has been proven, the higher the position they occupied, the more seriously their cases should be handled.

However, none of the "big shots" came to confess their crimes during the period for lenient handling set by the National People's Congress Standing Committee, and of those "small potatoes" who did, there was only one example which involved a person with a relatively high position -- the case of Wang Zhong, who was the CCP secretary of Haifeng County in Guangdong Province. This shows that the present operation of dealing blows at economic crimes has met with tremendous obstacles. The situation in Fujian Province is rather typical of this.

This reporter has learned that the following remark was made by a leading person of the Central Discipline Inspection Commission on the circumstances in Fujian Province: "Some individuals and organizations of the Fujian Provincial CCP Committee are rotten to the core." Therefore, he ordered the provincial CCP committee to carry out a thorough investigation into the cases, handle them and then report the results to the departments concerned.

Fujian is situated on the coast, and the activities of smuggling and selling smuggled goods are especially rampant there. Such a situation is closely related to the fact that some corrupt cadres are taking advantage of their power to pursue personal interests, and to cover up for each other. In addition to this, the factional strife left behind by the Cultural Revolution, the long-standing open jostling and veiled struggle between the "Shanxi faction" and "local faction," and so on have all made the situation so complicated that a slight move in one aspect may affect the situation as a whole. Therefore, it was hard for the provincial authorities to make up their minds to break through all obstacles, with so many factors having to be taken into consideration.

Although Xiang Nan, a strong man of action, was sent to Fujian to take power, it was difficult for him to achieve anything without powerful support. Therefore, the CCP Central Committee transferred some cadres such as Cheng Xu, Huang Ming and others to Fujian last year to strengthen the provincial CCP committee standing committee and assist Xiang Nan in facilitating a breakthrough in the situation. Huang Ming was appointed a member of the provincial CCP standing committee and director of the propaganda department and Cheng Xu to an even more important position -- provincial CCP committee secretary and director of the organization department. As reported, Cheng Xu, who joined the revolution in 1934 and who was, prior to this, working as a secretary of the Wushun Municipal CCP Committee in Liaoning Province, is a courageous man, as well as a capable and experienced senior cadre. In view of this, the CCP Central Committee Organization Department specially selected him in April last year to undertake the personnel and organizational work in Fujian.

In the course of investigation into economic criminal activities, it was found that all cases involving high-ranking cadres who occupied important positions were always entangled with the strife between the "local faction" and the "Shanxi faction," and this laid more obstacles before the authorities. Last year, the provincial CCP committee reorganized the leading group of the Fuzhou Municipal CCP Committee, which was led by its former secretary, Cai Liangcheng, by successively transferring Xiao Jian, Yang Bu, Zhang Jizhong and others to undertake the work of the municipal CCP committee, and thus managed to break the situation of the committee being controlled by the "Shanxi faction."

It is said that the CCP Central Committee is discontented with the progress of investigation into economic criminal activities in Fujian Province. Peng Chong went to Fujian in February this year to inspect the work and gave personal instructions in handling several criminal cases. The measures he took won the support of the Fujian people. As reported, the wife of the Chinese navy Commander Ye Fei and the former responsible person of the provincial education department, Wang Yugeng, were involved in a case which was handled by the provincial procuratorate. The case was dismissed, as there was no proof to support the charge.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT INVITED IN HEILONGJIANG BASES

[Dispatch from correspondent Hou Tung-hai [0230 2639 3189] in Harbin: "Heilongjiang Will Build Five Large Bases; Welcomes Investment From Hong Kong and Macao"]

[Text] Harbin, 8 May -- In an interview with this correspondent, Heilongjiang Vice Governor Hou Jie said that in realizing, within 10 years, the development plan of building five bases in the province, Heilongjiang requires large amounts of foreign capital. He said that Heilongjiang's economic activities with foreign countries have shown great development in recent years. It has established trade links with over 100 countries and regions in the world. It also closely cooperates with the compatriots of Hong Kong and Macao. Heilongjiang Province will continue to follow the open-door policy in the future, giving full play to the superior feature of abundant resources available in Heilongjiang Province and actively attracting foreign investment and developing economic activities with foreign countries. He said that Heilongjiang warmly welcomes Hong Kong and Macao compatriots who wish to come to invest in Heilongjiang by setting up factories and promoting trade or tourism.

Hou Jie said that Heilongjiang plans to build five bases within 10 years. The five bases are a modernized agricultural base concentrating on commodity grain while seeking the overall development of economic crops and a diversified economy; a light industrial base focusing on foods and textiles; a forestry base with afforestation as its foundation and which stresses the comprehensive utilization of timber; an energy and chemical industry base concentrating on the development of coal and petroleum; and a heavy industrial base concentrating on changing the service orientation of the machine building industry and developing the construction material industry. This will call for quite a large amount of capital. Therefore, Heilongjiang Province is prepared to consider making the fullest possible use of foreign capital while relying mainly on its own resources. The aim is to speed up the building of the five bases.

Hou Jie said that in coordination with the building of a chemical plant with a capacity for 300,000 tons of ethylene in the Daqing oilfield, Heilongjiang plans to outfit 51 connected factories and enterprises. The industrialists and businessmen of Hong Kong and Macao and foreign businessmen will be allowed to cooperate with Heilongjiang in handling these projects. In addition, there is a still wider scope for cooperation when it comes to the use of foreign capital in fully tapping and exploiting Heilongjiang's rich resources of soybeans, potatoes, beets, timber processing by-products, flax and minerals. There is also scope when it comes to the utilization of the existing machinery industry of Heilongjiang Province which is relatively complete and advanced technically in handling orders for products made according to samples or orders executed with materials specially provided. Recently, parties from abroad, including some people in financial and industrial circles in Hong Kong, have had many contacts with the relevant authorities of Heilongjiang Province. Methods of investment and cooperation in certain concrete projects have been explored.

Hou Jie said in conclusion that Heilongjiang Province will, in July this year, hold the second Harbin export commodities trade fair. In regard to both variety and quantity, it will be of a much larger scale than the export commodities fair last year. He warmly welcomed the participation of Hong Kong and Macao compatriots, Overseas Chinese and foreign businessmen.

HAIG TESTIFIES ON REAGAN'S NUCLEAR ARMS PROPOSAL

[Text] Washington, May 11 (XINHUA) -- U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig stressed today that the U.S. must carry out President Reagan's "strategic modernization program" while preparing to negotiate with the Soviet Union on arms reduction. "If we fail to adopt the President's military modernization program we will reduce not the nuclear danger, but instead the chances of reaching an arms control agreement on strategic forces," he said.

Testifying before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on Reagan's proposal Sunday to hold Strategic Arms Reduction Talks (START) with the Soviet Union, Secretary Haig amplified on the President's idea by listing "eight criteria" as a guide to the proposed talks. The first one, he said, is that "a START agreement must permit the U.S. to develop and possess sufficient military capability to deter the Soviet Union and to execute the U.S. national military strategy." "Arms control is a means to an end, not an end in itself," and "our objective is to sustain our national security...in the face of an expanding Soviet force," he emphasized. "Arms control can play a very important part in strengthening our security and restraining the growth of Soviet power." But, to make sure arms control can succeed, "we must demonstrate our will and capacity to maintain the military balance," he stressed.

After reviewing other criteria including the principles of equality, strategic stability, effective verification, and substantial reduction, he said that the objective of U.S. proposal is "to achieve significant reductions in the most destabilizing nuclear systems, especially intercontinental ballistic missiles (ICBM)". "This will be the primary focus of U.S. effort," he added.

Government officials were reported to have disclosed to the press that what Haig and Reagan had in mind when they talked of the "most destabilizing nuclear systems" were in effect, the giant Soviet SS-16s, 17s, 18s, and 19s, which the U.S. considers to be the most threatening to its own land-based ICBMs. Since the Soviets have more giant land-based ICBMs than the U.S., the "criteria" of "equality", strategic stability" and "substantial reduction" are all understood as demanding the Soviets to give up their edge in this field. People think this is a demand highly unlikely to be accepted by the Soviets.

Haig said while he understands and shares the anxiety that motivated the anti-nuclear movement, he rejects the nuclear freeze proposals and suggestions to ratify the shelved SALT II treaty. He said Americans should support "the President's proposal for a fair, realistic and truly beneficial strategic arms agreement" and "the initiatives we have taken to modernize our forces." "Such support will be crucial in convincing the Soviets that we are determined to compete and at the same time that we are eager to reach a meaningful agreement," he concluded.

SOVIET POLICE KILL AFGHAN STUDENTS IN MOSCOW

["International Jottings" by He Li [0149 4539]: "Double Brutality"]

[Text] It was reported that not long ago, a number of Afghan students in Moscow were shot by Soviet police. They were killed by Moscow merely for staging a demonstration to protest against the brutality of the Soviet troops' slaughter of Afghan people in Afghanistan.

The savage acts of the Soviet troops in Afghanistan are too numerous to mention. It is estimated that about 400,000 Afghans have been killed by the Soviet aggressors over the past 2 years and 3 million Afghans have become refugees from their native places and wandered destitute far from home. However, Moscow impudently calls its numerous savage acts "fulfilling international obligations." Furthermore, it forces the Afghan people to dance to its tune to praise such a "philanthropic act" of the Soviet Union. Otherwise, they will be persecuted under the charge of "opposing the Soviet Union." This time, the Soviet Union imposed what it did in Afghanistan on the Afghan students in Moscow, using its sinister bullets to reply to their "anti-Soviet words and deeds." Moscow tried to use slaughter to stop people from exposing its savage acts. However, this precisely proved its double brutality.

In Moscow, the Soviet authorities have repeatedly produced the farce of sending cavalry and police forces to suppress foreign students staging demonstrations. However, this was the first time that Moscow was so panic-striken that it laid its murderous hands on some unarmed students who were holding a peaceful demonstration. "Those who are most ferocious are the most timid." What Moscow did is a new example of its brutality.

RENMIN RIBAO REJECTS IZVESTIYA ON KABUL SAFETY

["International Jottings" by Yun Fei [0061 7378]: "False Security"]

[Text] On 29 April Soviet IZVESTIYA made use of others to say that no sounds of gunfire had been heard in Kabul, capital of Afghanistan, for the past 20 days and that it was "very safe" there and to assert that this was the "real situation."

However, this was disproved by the bombs in Kabul 2 days later. According to reports, early on the morning of 1 May, the Afghan guerrillas attacked the barracks of the Soviet troops in the southeastern part of Kabul city proper. After exchanging fire for 2 to 3 hours, the Soviet arsenal caught fire, causing great losses to the Soviet troops.

Obviously, the "safety" as mentioned by IZVESTIYA is a mere deception. To the Soviet occupiers and their lackeys, Kabul is in fact very unsafe. The attack on 1 May was by no means the first one. In the past 2 years, the Afghan guerrillas have often gone deep into Kabul to severely punish the Soviet officers and soldiers, and Afghan traitors in the puppet regime and in the army. How can there be safety for the Soviet occupiers in Afghanistan where the whole nation has risen against foreign aggression and the Soviet occupiers are deep in a quagmire? IZVESTIYA is only raving like a lunatic and is trying to deceive itself as well as others.

This is the most fundamental and most important political principle." [Text] Beijing, May 12 (XINHUA) -- Samdech Norodom Sihanouk told journalists here today that he had cordial and friendly political talks here Tuesday with Thai Foreign Minister Sitthi Sawetsila.

In a prepared statement Sihanouk expressed deep thanks to Thailand for all it has done for Kampuchean refugees and to help Kampuchea regain its independence. The statement said: "My Thai guests and I examined together the issue of forming a tripartite coalition government of Kampuchea for the sake of Kampuchea's liberation. We held entirely identical views on this issue." "We hope that Mr. Son Sann, president of the Khmer People's National Liberation Front, and Mr. Khieu Samphan, president of Democratic Kampuchea, succeed as soon as possible in reaching between their factions an accord which, alone, will make it possible to form a tripartite coalition government of Kampuchea," the statement said.

"As for the proposal for a (new) summit meeting of the three resistance Kampuchean leaders in Kuala Lumpur (Malaysia)," the statement said, "we unanimously maintain that it is better to hold such a summit only if it is possible to announce an immediate formation of the tripartite coalition government of Kampuchea." "If such a new summit could not end with this concrete result, it should be better, I think, not to risk a failure, which certainly would not serve the cause of national liberation in my country."
